On a separate, but related matter, it seems appropriate to consider our experience in the last year with the 25th amendment. There is a valid concern that the 25th amendment has not served the Nation well. It has produced, first, a President who was not elected directly by the people, and now it will result, with the confirmation of Governor Rockefeller, in having the two highest positions in our land held by individuals who have not been chosen by a popular vote. While the chances of our present situation occurring again may be dismissed as improbable, we must remember that we did not seriously contemplate our current situation at the time of consideration of the 25th amendment by the Congress a mere 9 years ago.

The Constitutional Convention of 1787 rejected proposals for the election or appointment of the President by the Congress, and the principle of popular election of our President and Vice President has met the test of time. Yet, we are today involved in a process which is a serious departure from that cherished and firmly established principle of our representative government.

The implications of this procedure, which deprives our citizens of their right to choose directly those individuals who seek to lead our Nation, is sufficiently troublesome that a reexamination of the manner by which a vacancy in the office of Vice President is to be filled, if indeed it should be filled, is warranted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON) for the purpose of recognizing the minority leader.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the minority leader, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES).

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to yield to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DELLENBACK) for the purpose of having him read the speech which I otherwise would have made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. DELLENBACK. Mr. Chairman, speaking for Mr. RHODES:

Mr. Chairman, Nelson Rockefeller, the man whose nomination to be the Nation's Vice President we consider today, has been probed, provoked, tried, tested, and observed from virtually every conceivable angle and perspective. No other person in history—save for the current President of the United States—has undergone such meticulous scrutiny as a prelude to national office.

This is as it should be. The 25th amendment provides Congress with a mechanism through which we can satisfy our legitimate concern that a non-elected President or Vice President is qualified in every respect.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, the Judiciary Committee has performed with a thoroughness that brings credit to this entire body. The members of that committee—in particular, their great chairman, PETER RODINO and the equally great ranking minority member, EDWARD HUTCHINSON—are to be highly commended for their most recent service to the Nation.

As a result of their work and that of the other body, this Congress knows everything there is to know about the man who will become the 41st Vice President of the United States.

We know that Nelson Rockefeller's experience in Government is immense. As Governor of a State that has faced probably every problem known to man, he brings to the executive branch a special understanding of the complex problems confronted at the State and local level, along with a working knowledge of what can be done at the Federal level to help solve them.

We also know a great deal about Governor Rockefeller's financial resources. This is a fascinating subject that has attracted considerable attention. It is important for us to acknowledge the fact that throughout the exhaustive confirmation process, not a single shred of evidence was produced to even remotely suggest that Nelson Rockefeller profited financially from his service in Government. What has been proven is that the Governor is a very generous man. I submit that this is not an undesirable quality for a human being to have, particularly one who is going to be Vice President.

Mr. Chairman, we have a nation that is troubled. We face many domestic problems that simply must be met with affirmative action by the Federal Government.

In Nelson Rockefeller, I submit that the Nation will have a Vice President who will not be just a figurehead or a spokesman. He will be a Vice President willing and able to make a real and definite contribution to the important work which is going to involve all of us during the next 2 years.

I urge his immediate confirmation.

Mr. DELLENBACK. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Arizona if he will yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RHODES. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

December 19, 1974

Mr. DELLENBACK. Mr. Chairman, may I add a few words on my own, not speaking for the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES).

Mr. Chairman, we deal today with a vote as potentially critical as any of us is ever apt to cast in this House. The Presidency of the United States has so expanded in this modern day that the job is an almost impossible one. The tasks of the Vice President of the United States have not ranked in complexity or importance with those of the President, but at a time when this Nation is in its present deep and severe time of testing, today's vote for or against a person who will both carry heavy loads in his own office and will also serve only a heart beat away from the Presidency is of that same massive, great, and deep importance.

There is no perfect man perfectly prepared to become the Vice President of our country. Our burden is to exercise our very best judgment as to whether confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President would be in the best interests of this Nation and of the people whom we represent. It is my personal opinion that in selecting Nelson Rockefeller for this job President Ford has chosen wisely. In Nelson Rockefeller we have a man of integrity, capacity, and dedication as ably equipped to become our Vice President and to serve us and this Nation as any person in this country.

I join with the minority leader, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES) in endorsing this proposed confirmation and expressing my hope that we will today overwhelmingly confirm Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO).

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. HUNGATE).

Mr. HUNGATE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding and commend my colleagues on the Committee on the Judiciary, both those who were for and against the nomination, and the diligence they have brought to this discussion and continue to bring to it highlights the issue to the public. Heaven may be better for climate, but I do not think you can beat the Committee on the Judiciary for companionship.

One of our legacies of Watergate must not be an unfounded and unreasoning suspicion of our public officials. Mark Twain noted that a cat that sits on a red hot stove will never do so again. Unfortunately, he also will never again sit on a cold stove.

We must avoid drawing such overly broad conclusions from our recent unfortunate experience. We must trust someone some time, if we are to maintain our republican form of government. We should do our best, we must investigate, but at some point we must trust; even as we are trusted.

At this Christmas season, if there were a star in the East, I might urge Rockefeller's rejection and await the designation of another nominee.

One of my principal concerns is that of whom we get if we reject Mr. Rockefeller and when would the United States get a Vice President?

Our basic document in this situation is the 25th amendment. Whenever there is a vacancy in the Office of Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation of a majority vote by both Houses of Congress.

Some have suggested we might send the President some Vice President nominee lists. We might send him our laundry lists, too. I suppose, but the President shall nominate. He is the one that has sent us this name, and would send any other.

Governor Rockefeller has demonstrated his ability to do the job and I think his compatibility with President Ford is undeniable.

You know, asking a Democratic Congress to confirm a Republican Vice President is a little bit like one of Brooks Hays stories about the man that said he was going to go home now and if his supper was not ready, he was going to be awfully mad, and if supper was ready, he was not going to eat a bite.

It is a difficult thing we have to do here on the Democratic side.

I was impressed by the witnesses we heard. Possibly my decision was made as much by those in opposition to the Governor, as by what he and his allies did. In opposition to this nomination we heard from the Liberty Lobby. We heard from the American Conservation Union. We heard from the National Lawyers Council. We heard from the American Labor Party. We heard from Americans for Democratic Action. We even heard from the Christian Action Council, with three biblical references why this nomination should be rejected.

Now, when you can be opposed that far on the left and that far on the right, I suspect you begin to occupy some of that middle ground where we find most of the American people.

The public disclosure that has been brought about has been most helpful and should enable the press, and through them the public, to keep any conflict of interest along that line in balance.

Mr. Chairman, I support this nomination and commend similar action to my colleagues.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to speak at length in urging a no vote on the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller. I refer my colleagues to the committee report and the dissenting views of the 11 other members of the Committee on the Judiciary whom I joined in opposition. The arguments for a negative vote, are, I believe, persuasive. No member came lightly to the decision. Indeed, I believe it accurate to state that the investigation and the dialog in the committee, in the report, and with the public, has been responsible, and that each member based his vote on what he or she believes would be in the best interests of the country.

The members of the staff of the Committee on the Judiciary deserve special credit for their long hours of work and their industrious, thorough research and investigation. General Counsel Jerome M. Zeifman, who I regret to note is leaving the committee for a professorship at the University of Santa Clara Law School, gave to Members of both sides of the aisle the benefit of his wide experience and good judgment. Associate General Counsel Garner J. Cline was always cooperative and helpful. The other lawyers assigned to the confirmation proceedings provided without exception valuable assistance and a host of legal and investigative skills. I personally worked most closely with Counsel Alan A. Parker who did a splendid job in compiling the public records of Mr. Rockefeller. Counsel William P. Dixon, charged with the investigative details, was indefatigable in pursuing leads. Committee Staff Robert J. Trainor, Franklin G. Polk, Daniel L. Cohen, and the many other lawyers all deserve our appreciation.

The House Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Civil Rights and Constitutional Rights, which I chair, was assigned by Chairman Rodino the responsibility of reviewing the Federal Bureau of Investigation report on Mr. Rockefeller and briefing the full committee on the contents. I would like to compliment the FBI on their diligent and skillful work. The FBI report consisted of nearly 2,500 pages. More than 1,300 people were interviewed throughout the country. Each lead was pursued by individual special agents with diligence and skill. From time to time individual members of the committee asked for additional interviews, and the FBI always responded in a most cooperative manner.

I would also like to thank our chairman, PETER W. RODINO, JR., for his unfailing courtesy to each member of the committee during the long and arduous confirmation proceedings. During this past year Chairman Rodino has led the committee in a period which I believe to be the most challenging in its history—beginning with the confirmation of Vice President Ford, the impeachment inquiry of President Nixon, and last of all these Rockefeller confirmation proceedings. His command of these historic responsibilities can, I believe, never be matched.

My own views on this nominee, Mr. Chairman, are well known. After a considerable period of indecision I concluded that the nomination was inappropriate. While subscribing to the reasons stated in all the dissenting views of the committee report, I would like to emphasize that my chief objection is on the grounds of conflict of interest. I agree with the views of witness Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., who stated that in a Nation of over 200 million people, President Ford has chosen a person with more potential conflicts of interest than any other possible candidate. As President—and that is how Mr. Rockefeller must be judged—his every decision could affect the Rockefeller empire. This is a risk that I believe is unacceptable to the American people and that we, as guardians of the public trust under the 25th amendment to our Constitution, have no right to take.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO).

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, this is a novel period for us as Members of Congress to come here and really try to determine what our responsibilities are. I guess the main reason for this is because nobody in this body could have conceived at the beginning of this Congress that we would have these vacancies in the highest offices in our Government due to corruption and violation of the Constitution by those in these offices.

Nevertheless, without any precedent to guide us except our own newly created legislative history under the 25th amendment, we have proceeded to fulfill our responsibility under the 25th amendment to confirm and pass upon the qualifications of the man who has been selected by the President to serve as his Vice President.

None of us, unfortunately, has the opportunity to carry this question to the American voters, where it rightfully belongs. It seems to me that this body is going to have to restudy the question as to how vacancies such as these should be filled, if, God forbid, the question arises in the future. But since we are restricted here, since we do not have the opportunity to put in our own nominee, then the question before us concerns the qualifications of the person who has been selected by the President to work with him.

Those of us in this Congress, and certainly in the Nation, have been looking for strong executive leadership during this economic crisis. I certainly have been disappointed by what we have seen, or rather not seen, come out of the White House in terms of clear direction toward solving our many economic problems.

We now have a massive unemployment rate throughout the Nation. People are suffering because of an inability to find jobs, because of an inability to buy the necessary things in order to live, to buy clothing, to get shelter, to get food.

As we on the Committee on the Judiciary investigated the qualifications of Nelson Rockefeller, I think most of us agreed that, in connection with the issues that faced this Nation, it would be difficult to find a more qualified candidate in terms of administrative experience in the critical problem areas which we face today.

However, one judges Nelson Rockefeller's experience and leadership as Governor of the State of New York—and I myself as a Democrat found many more issues to disagree with him on than to agree—no one can dispute the fact that in understanding the nature of the problems that we have experienced in the State of New York, both in the inner cities and the suburban and rural areas—and in his ability to take decisive action to meet problems, Governor Rockefeller left no doubt that he could and would govern. I cannot think of anyone in the Republican Party who meets his qualifications and experience and still might be selected by President Ford.

I might add that, since under the 25th amendment the President has the right to choose his Vice President from his own party and that we cannot choose a person who pleases us, but must select from the President's choice, we have given consideration about what would happen if Nelson Rockefeller was not confirmed and who would the President be going to and seeking advice from regarding who the next nominee would be. From all I have heard, perhaps if we do not find that Nelson Rockefeller should be confirmed, that coming before this body and the Committee on the Judiciary as the next nominee would be a man who would be of substantially less wealth but, by the same token, would probably be somebody substantially less experienced.

As I weigh my decision regarding the conflict between my personal philosophy and the practices facing this Nation, I must make my decision not only on the basis of the qualifications of Nelson Rockefeller, but in terms of the reality of who else might be selected who would come closer to my philosophy.

I see my responsibility, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, to cast my vote to fill the vacancy with a qualified candidate for the sake of the Nation, to make certain that the executive branch of the Government can have capable and effective leadership and have no excuses that it cannot move forward, because we have not acted to provide a Vice President under the 25th amendment.

I have recommended that the Committee on the Judiciary deem him as qualified, and I further recommend that this House of Representatives, in weighing the facts, also find him qualified to fill our present leadership vacuum so that this House and the executive branch can get on with the business of this Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON).

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. McCLORY).

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to call attention to the thorough, complete and highly responsible manner in which our House Judiciary Committee has handled the hearings relating to the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

The investigation has been going on during the entire 4-month period since Mr. Rockefeller's nomination in August. The FBI has conducted an extensive and in-depth investigation comprising more than 2,500 pages of data concerning the nominee, which the committee members have had the opportunity to examine. In addition, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue has reviewed the Federal income tax returns of Mr. Rockefeller for the entire period from 1967 to 1973. Our capable committee staff has conducted an extensive investigation, exploring every relevant subject which has been brought to the committee's attention. We have had 9 days of hearings and have received the testimony of numerous witnesses both pro and con, and large quantities of additional documentary evidence have been presented and reviewed.

What the committee's work adds up to is that Nelson A. Rockefeller is a very able and experienced public figure, whose reputation for integrity and honorable service is beyond question. He is thoroughly experienced at every level of government and he possesses talents with respect to national and international affairs equal to those of any citizens of the Nation. In short, he possesses excellent credentials supporting his overwhelming confirmation as Vice President under the 25th amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I do not mind adding that I have known Mr. Rockefeller on a personal basis for more than 45 years. While certainly not a close friend, I have nevertheless followed his public and private life with a continuing and personal interest.

I say without qualification, and the record of the facts contained in the testimony and documentary evidence supports the conclusion which the committee reached, that nothing in Mr. Rockefeller's record or in our investigative files was found to disqualify Mr. Rockefeller from service. On the contrary, the evidence warrants endorsement of his fitness and capability to serve as Vice President.

Mr. Chairman, there may be some who will complain that this nomination should be deferred until the next Congress. Others may complain about the 6-hour time limit on general debate on this nomination.

What I say is that in providing a faithful interpretation of the 25th amendment, this House should not delay another hour or another day in finally securing Nelson A. Rockefeller as our Vice President. He meets the high standards which we intended a Vice President to possess when the 25th amendment was adopted in 1967.

As Vice President, Mr. Rockefeller can add stature and strength to this administration and can contribute substantially to the solutions of our great national and international problems with which both the executive branch and the Congress are so deeply concerned.

Mr. Chairman, before discussing my recommendations on the qualifications of the Vice President-designate, however, I want the House to know of the gratitude and respect which I have for the leader of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO). Chairman RODINO's leadership of our committee during the 93d Congress coupled with the able service of the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON), have been a source of pride to all members of the committee and of this House. I am especially pleased that our last accomplishment during this Congress will enable the American people to have in Nelson Rockefeller a truly outstanding American as the new Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, in considering the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller, we are applying the 25th amendment to the Constitution for the second time in this 93d Congress—the only times that this constitutional procedure has been utilized in our history. In my opinion, this amendment has, in both instances, served our system of Government admirably under more trying times than were ever imagined at the time of its adoption. A year ago this month, it was utilized to install our colleague, Gerald R. Ford, as Vice President—a man of ability, honor, and integrity who has done an excellent job during the brief period he has served as President—after one of the greatest constitutional crises in our history. Today, the procedure of the 25th amendment again provides the American people with a proven national leader of exceptional intelligence and admirable dimension to serve in the Vice Presidency.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps out of necessity, this Congress has often consulted the Constitution in weighing the monumental issues which have come before us; and, as we make preparations to adjourn sine die, I believe that we all share a renewed confidence in this venerable and worthy charter—it has once again proved its vitality in solving hard questions facing the Congress—no less in the application of the 25th amendment than in any other part.

Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, I believe that a great deal of the opposition to this nomination has arisen because of a misreading—or misunderstanding—of the true intent and purpose of the 25th amendment. Some Members have voiced the sentiment that, in an application of this amendment, they ought to serve merely as surrogates of their constituencies—and that the Vice President-designate appears not to be the choice of those whom they represent.

Let me emphasize that that is not the test. It is clearly not the intent of the amendment that a nominee under its provisions had to be of the same political party or persuasion as the House Member in order that he or she might vote to confirm. To be consistent with the 12th amendment, it is only required that the Vice President should be politically compatible with the President who nominates him, and one with whom the President can work harmoniously. I do not mean to imply that the Congress has a duty to blindly and subserviently confirm whomever the President chooses to nominate. Rather, we do have a duty to determine that the nominee is a person of integrity, ability, and experience who is dedicated to the welfare of our country.

Having completed the most searching investigation and scrutiny that any nominee to public office has ever undergone, I am satisfied, on the basis of the voluminous evidence before us, that Nelson A. Rockefeller is supremely well qualified to fill the high office of Vice President. In fact, I do not think that it is exaggeration to say that President Ford, in selecting Nelson Rockefeller, has nominated the best qualified person to serve as Vice President in this crucial time.

As Governor of our second largest State from 1959–74, he displayed considerable administrative ability and achieved a remarkable record of accomplishment. Reelected four times by the 18 million people of New York, the Vice President-designate holds a distinguished reputation as one of the country's most dynamic Governors.

He revitalized and expanded the State University of New York. He established a landmark pure waters program and instituted the first State financing for mass transportation. His administration was responsible for the construction of almost 90,000 units of low-income housing. He created a State office to work on the problems facing senior citizens and overhauled the State welfare system.

As convincing proof of Mr. Rockefeller's faith in our Federal system, I need only point out that he was instrumental in bringing about the enactment of the Federal revenue sharing program, while achieving a return to local government of 62 percent of every State-collected tax dollar during his tenure as Governor of New York.

At the national level, Nelson Rockefeller has demonstrated his ability in a wide range of governmental posts. As chairman of President Eisenhower's Committee on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government, he was deeply involved with the creation of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare—and he played a crucial role in HEW's organization as its first Undersecretary.

At the international level, Nelson Rockefeller has served five Presidents—of both parties—in behalf of many aspects of the foreign policy of the United States. As Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs under President Franklin Roosevelt, later as Assistant Secretary of State for American Republic Affairs, and on subsequent diplomatic assignments, the Vice-President-designate has amply demonstrated a mastery of the skills necessary for the development of an effective foreign policy.

It is clear that after 40 years of distinguished service in government at all levels, Nelson Rockefeller possesses unique qualifications as the right man for the Vice Presidency at this important time. I am delighted that the President has indicated that he will make full use of Mr. Rockefeller's talents in solving the difficult problems that face the country—especially in the area of domestic policy.

Mr. Chairman, as I indicated earlier, our efforts may have been the most thorough ever undertaken by any committee in a confirmation process. But as thorough as we were, nothing was found to cast doubt on the fact that Nelson Rockefeller is qualified to be Vice President.

Some members of the committee voted "no" when the roll was called in committee for various reasons. But they did not vote "no" because Nelson Rockefeller lacked executive and administrative experience. They did not vote "no" because Nelson Rockefeller failed to be a resourceful, dynamic Governor of New York. They did not vote "no" because Nelson Rockefeller lacked intelligence or knowledge or talent. Rather they voted "no" on the basis that Nelson Rockefeller has great wealth, that he did not remember all the details involved in publishing the Goldberg book, or because he commuted the sentence of a convict in bad health—which presumably he should not have done primarily because the convict was once head of the Republican Party in New York—or because he made gifts and beneficial loans to many friends, some of whom were State officials.

The ironic aspect of these arguments for voting against confirmation is that traditionally men of good character have viewed wealth, compassion, and generosity as advantages in a public official. One of the members of the committee, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BROOKS) spoke to this point eloquently when he addressed himself to Mr. Rockefeller, as follows:

I am inclined to think that you have a greater stake in this country than most people. It is to your own best interests that it be successful, that it be prosperous, that it be free. . . . (Hearings, 1025)

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion a most revealing development of the committee's long inquiry has not concerned the nominee but rather those members who would deny office to a person solely on the basis of his wealth. There is a critical difference between treating all men equal before the law and between equalizing all men. I am disappointed that this difference escapes some members. In exercising our constitutional confirmation power I had thought that we were constitutionally precluded from discriminating on the basis of race, sex, religion, or economic status. Thus the only way the argument can rationally be made is not on the basis of the nominee's status as a wealthy man, but on the basis that the nominee would use his wealth against the common good of the American people. Yet such a basis finds no support in our lengthy record. Every bit of evidence runs counter to the argument. In fact, it almost seems as if Nelson Rockefeller has lived his whole life in a way to disprove that argument. There is utterly lacking any evidence that he ever benefited Rockefeller financial interests at the expense of the people or by the exercise of any public or political prerogative. In contrast, the record shows a man of great personal generosity giving much of his income each year to charity. Furthermore, the record shows a sincere, dedicated public servant for 40 years—a man, who although wealthy enough to lead a care-free existence, chose instead to work in the trenches at every level of government under both Republicans and Democrats—but always for the people. Why did he give so much of his money, his time, and himself for so long? Are we to believe that he did so much merely to lull us asleep so he could, after a long and brilliant career in Government, betray his country to his family's economic interests?

In order to set the record straight, let us review the claim that the nominee's involvement in the publication of a political biography about Arthur Goldberg should suffice as a basis for withholding confirmation. This suggestion has been on a steady decline since the hearings before the Senate Rules Committee provided a forum for the nominee to answer accusations. The author, Victor Lasky and the biographer, Arthur Goldberg, also testified at length at those hearings. At first we heard that the book was scandalous. But reading it laid that to rest. Next we heard that the method employed to finance the book was designed to cover the nominee's involvement. Although it now appears that the nominee was not involved in financing the book and was unaware of how it was done, he candidly admitted that the method used by others was designed to disassociate the Rockefeller name. Then we heard that the nominee's revelations were slow and less than candid. This charge appears to be closely associated with apparent deliberate leaks of selected information from FBI reports which were made available to committee members.

The nominee answered all of these charges and revealed the full truth as best as he could recollect it, admitting quite frankly that later revelations were not from his own experience but the result of his current inquiry of others who were better informed. There is no evidence to controvert Mr. Rockefeller's answers. However, since there was a lapse of time between the selected leaks—and the nominee's testimony, there has been resort to a smear that was reminiscent of Watergate. Quite clearly the entire issue seems to be without substance.

Another basis for withholding confirmation which is frequently mentioned is Nelson Rockefeller's commutation of L. Judson Morhouse in 1970. As Governor of New York, Nelson Rockefeller has on several occasions commuted the sentences of convicts because incarceration was substantially impairing their health. Between his conviction in 1966 and the conclusion of appellate review in 1970, Morhouse suffered several medical catastrophes. He contracted Parkinson's disease, cancer of the rectum requiring removal of two-thirds of his large intestine, and then had his prostate gland removed. The evidence shows that no one with such a medical history had ever served a sentence in a New York penitentiary. Morhouse applied for clemency and submitted medical affidavits of four respected doctors attesting to his medical condition. Under New York law, the Governor has absolute discretion to grant a commutation. No legal standard need be met.

Governors, of course, prefer to appear reasonable, but on the record there was little reason to question a grant of clemency to this sick man other than that L. Judson Morhouse had at one time been chairman of the Republican Party in New York. However, should that reason alone required this man to serve his sentence? Apparently Nelson Rockefeller thought not. Although the case for clemency was already established, he asked the State medical society for independent verification of Morhouse's condition so that no one later could reasonably challenge the propriety of a commutation.

Three doctors were selected. Although only one doctor of the three made it through a blizzard to see Morhouse, all three consulted and agreed with the previous evaluation made by Morhouse's four doctors that L. Judson Morhouse's health would be substantially impaired and his life endangered by imprisonment.

And on the next day Mr. Morhouse and Mr. Wright received clemency for reasons of health. No one talks about Mr. Wright; he was never State chairman of the Republican Party.

Finally, it is suggested that confirmation should be withheld because the nominee made gifts and loans to public officials. It is argued that this was wrong whether or not it was legal to make such loans and gifts. Perhaps such loans and gifts would be cause for suspicion if made by someone other than the nominee. But Nelson Rockefeller's generosity is well known. For each year he gives a substantial portion of his income to charity, sometimes over 50 percent. And what is not noted by his detractors is that during the same period of time he made loans and gifts aggregating $1,692,219 to a total of 58 other people who were not State employees. As for the State employees, he testified that he made the loans and gifts to them as he made them to others—out of friendship. There is no evidence whatsoever contradicting that testimony. The New York laws do not prohibit making loans or gifts to friends who are State employees. Detractors argue that he did this to influence them. But this does not make sense because as Governor the employees in question all served at his pleasure with only one exception. By law they were already under his control.

Another fact often overlooked is that the New York laws in question did not become effective until January 1, 1966 and September 1, 1967, respectively, some time after many of the loans and gifts had been made. When this is mentioned, it is replied that it is morally wrong to make such gifts or loans even if it is legal. But if he gave out of friendship and not to influence them, I cannot comprehend the impropriety.

On two occasions the nominee made gifts or loans to individuals who were not residents of New York so that they could relocate in New York and become public officials there. But New York law does not prohibit such loans or gifts no more than it prohibits contributions to those seeking elective office. All that is prohibited is gifts or loans relating to past official conduct. Moreover, in one of the two instances, the law was not in existence at the time.

Thus, when these arguments against confirmation are examined in the light of the true facts, they appear to be without merit. It is perhaps because there is no really sound argument against the nominee that recourse is made to a "constitutional aside" that we must have in mind that Nelson Rockefeller was nominated by a President who was not elected. Of course, that argument if taken far enough is simply an argument against section 2 of the 25th amendment. However, the time to make such arguments is when we are amending the Constitution. That is when several Members of this House made their arguments against section 2. However, we should not now refuse to utilize a duly enacted constitutional procedure against the nominee because we are unhappy with its operation.

Moreover, I have not heard anyone complain that any bill signed into law by the President was not a law or that any veto was less of a veto because the President rose to that office without being elected by the electoral college.

The President is the President, and the mandate of section 2 could not be plainer. It is our duty to confirm or not confirm the nominee on the merits. The record indicates that the nominee is qualified to serve as Vice President. Although it is fair to say no single Member of this House would in each instance agree with the answers to the problems of our time which he might supply, I know Nelson Rockefeller to be a man of integrity, ability, and experience. He is the choice of our President. In fairly applying the 25th amendment, there is no reason to deny him that choice.

Mr. SCHNEEBELI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCLORY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHNEEBELI), who attended Dartmouth College and who, I believe, was a roommate of the nominee when they were in college together.

Mr. SCHNEEBELI. Mr. Chairman, from the vantage point of personal observation and experience, I support enthusiastically the nomination of former Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller to be the next Vice President of the United States.

Governor Rockefeller and I were roommates in our senior year at Dartmouth College and from this personal knowledge, and my continuing interest in his career in public service, I have nothing but total approval for his qualifications and background for this vital position. The six children of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., were all raised with a discipline and dedication to public service and the contributions which all the members of this family have made to the betterment of our country are manifold and complete.

With the indoctrination of the family training for public service, it is quite evident that Nelson has fulfilled his commitment to this fine ideal and has done it well. His more than 15 years as Governor of New York have underscored the tremendous contribution which he has made, and it emphasizes the additional great service to our country which he is prepared to provide in this new capacity as Vice President.

His qualities of leadership and his ability to inspire loyalty from so many of our Nation's leaders will provide our country with the needed support for President Ford. We are fortunate that Nelson Rockefeller has agreed to serve in this second most important job in our country. Let us give him our endorsement and vote of confidence at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PATMAN).

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, the best political decisions in this Nation are made at the ballot box.

I sincerely question whether the voters of this Nation—given a free opportunity to express their opinions at the polls—would elect an individual with the apparent conflicts of interest and the power and the wealth of the man whose name stands in nomination for Vice President before this House. And I question the wisdom of the Members of the House of Representatives confirming and installing a man of such immense personal, family, and corporate power in this high office.

Mr. Chairman, I do not oppose this confirmation today on any petty or personal basis. I recognize the public service rendered by Nelson Rockefeller and other members of the Rockefeller family, but this does not wipe out the fact that the worldwide holdings—including every country in the world and every one of the 3,071 counties of the United States—of this fantastically wealthy family constitute the most colossal conflict of interest that could ever be imagined in any government, anywhere.

We have heard that Governor Rockefeller would be willing to place his holdings in trust—a blind trust. But, I know of no instrument—no arrangement—which could really accomplish this goal. It just is not possible with the massive holdings of the Rockefeller family—holdings which probably exceed $2 billion—and with assets and interests scattered and interlocked all over the world. The managers of any blind trust—if it were to be created—could not possibly diversify the holdings in any significant manner without serious losses and without drastic effect on the stock of the companies involved. A blind trust might be possible for a public official with a few hundred thousand dollars or even a million or two, but it would be a farce to claim that any such arrangement could deal with the conflicts between the public interest and the interests of the Rockefeller empire.

Even in the unlikely event that Governor Rockefeller could completely divorce himself from any action which would touch one of his vast holdings—

it would be difficult—if not impossible—for the regulatory agencies, the Government bureaucracy, to forget whose interests were involved in their day-to-day decisions. And this would be all the more intensified should he assume, for any reason, the top job as President of the United States.

Many words have been spoken and written on this point, but I think the Washington Post, in an article by William Greider and Thomas O'Toole in the September 22 edition focused the issue best and I quote:

If Nelson Rockefeller becomes Vice President or events make him President someday, he will bump into his family's wealth on practically every major public issue.

As President, he would have the last word on chartering overseas air routes, yet his family's bank is the largest stockholder in Northwest Airlines, which flies the Pacific. The bank holds major stakes in six competing airlines, not counting Eastern which Nelson's brother Laurance launched.

If President Ford wants oil prices held down, he could speak to the Veepee who could talk to his family. They control the largest bloc of Exxon stock and have a substantial presence in three other major oil companies: Mobil, Amoco, and Standard of California.

If "Vice President" Rockefeller tours the Middle East, he may find tracks in the sand left by his brother David who, as chairman of Chase Manhattan, the family bank, has been consulting the Arab sheikhs on where to invest their money—the bulging fortune from their oil wells.

If "President" Rockefeller asks the CIA for intelligence on the Soviet Union or China, he could take comfort in the knowledge that the spy-plane reconnaissance photos were taken with Rockefeller-made electronic gizmos—by Itel.

If he wants to check on conditions in Latin America, the stomping ground of his youth, he can do it through his own personal company—IBEC, or International Basic Economy Corp.—now run by his son Rodman. It's a mini-conglomerate with affiliates in 30 countries and sales this year of more than $300 million—housing and supermarkets, mutual funds and coffee marketing, poultry and canned fish.

If the television networks give "Vice President" Rockefeller a bad time, he might turn to a friend at Chase Manhattan. According to a Senate subcommittee's study of corporate ownership, the bank controls respectable minority blocks of stock in CBS, ABC and NBC, not to mention modest bites of the New York Times and Time-Life, Inc.

Taxes, the environment, government regulation of business, prices, interest rates, overseas diplomacy, war and peace—Rockefeller interests are enhanced or hurt by government policymaking in practically every major area of American life.

Many members of the Judiciary Committee in the House and the Rules Committee in the Senate have correctly raised questions about the long list of Rockefeller "gifts" to various individuals, most of them public officials in New York State. The obvious question is whether these gifts—which I understand have totaled around $2 million—were philanthropy or simply the use of wealth to extend power and influence?

Mr. Chairman, this is the kind of question which I have raised—along with other Members of the House—in various foundation studies conducted in the Small Business Committee of the House and later in the Banking and Currency Committee. We have surveyed through the years the holdings of the Rockefeller foundations—some 14 private foundations controlled or dominated by the Rockefeller family. While these foundations have provided the funds for many worthwhile projects, I have never been convinced that these foundation gifts have been totally isolated from the nonphilanthropic economic activities and interests of the Rockefeller family. These foundations, in my opinion, are an integral component of the vast network of Rockefeller-dominated and controlled economic and political entities.

A survey of the portfolio of these foundations reveals that many of the investments are similar in many instances to the investments of the trust department of the Rockefeller-owned Chase Manhattan Bank and the members of the Rockefeller family themselves. As many Members in this House will recall, the Banking and Currency Committee in the late 1960's launched the first full-scale study—over massive opposition—of the trust activities of major commercial banks.

This study, "Commercial Banks and their Trust Activities: Emerging Influence on the American Economy," spelled out some of the massive power residing in the trust department of the Rockefeller family's Chase Manhattan Bank.

At the time this study was released by the Banking and Currency Committee in 1968, Chase Manhattan—which I believe is the real cornerstone of Rockefeller family power today—had investments through its trust department of nearly $13.6 billion including substantial stockholdings in 59 major U.S. corporations—many of which were interlocked with still further Rockefeller interests. In fact, the committee study revealed 79 interlocks between the Rockefeller-dominated and controlled bank and major U.S. corporations.

Of course, this Chase Manhattan trust department has been growing and today it has holdings of about $16 billion and the bank is reported to retain voting rights to well over half this portfolio—a portfolio which reaches right into the heart of the corporate power of the United States.

This Banking and Currency Committee study along with our earlier study, "Bank Stock Ownership and Control" and our investigation of the collapse of the Penn Central empire, raised major questions about the concentration of economic power and these are questions which have now been intensified by the fact that a member of this powerful family is to assume one of the highest public offices in the world.

These banking studies and the studies of the tax-exempt foundations have made significant contributions to an understanding of wealth and corporate and banking power in the United States. The investigations and hearings conducted by the Rules Committee in the Senate and the Judiciary Committee in the House of Representatives have been excellent and they throw much new light on how this corporate power is interlocked and how it is wielded.

But the unfortunate truth is that we do not know enough in the Congress about how U.S. corporations and banking institutions are owned, controlled, and how their decisionmaking processes are linked with other economic entities and how this power touches other economic interests and governments around the world. As we have often learned in the Banking and Currency Committee, attempts to elicit this type of information runs into all kinds of bitter opposition.

The Rockefeller nomination, in my opinion, points up the need for a mammoth congressional study of corporate and banking power in the United States and how it is interlocked and how it makes its decisions and how these decisions affect the lives of all Americans—our entire economy. Such a comprehensive study, had it been in existence, would have answered many of the nagging questions which still hang over us as we vote on this nomination today.

The Judiciary Committee with its jurisdiction over legislative areas dealing with economic concentration, the Banking and Currency Committee with its jurisdiction over banking, and the Commerce Committee with its jurisdiction over large segments of the business community could coordinate such a study—to include not only the Rockefeller holdings but the entire corporate and banking picture. This is a good opportunity to pull back the covers and really look at corporate America.

In all fairness to Governor Rockefeller, I do not think we really know the degree to which he is involved in the day-to-day operations of the mammoth empire of the Rockefeller family. He and his supporters minimize his role. Perhaps this can be established, but I would like better answers to claims and counterclaims and I think these studies of the Rockefeller family should continue—and I hope and believe that Rockefeller would cooperate in this.

In the meantime, I think it would be wise for President Ford to limit the Vice President's role in policy and decision-making that might bear directly on any of the Rockefeller interests. This may be difficult, I recognize, but it is essential that we do everything possible to maintain confidence in the Federal Government—and conflicts of interest or the appearance of conflict can do more to destroy confidence than anything else.

Mr. Chairman, I think many of us could rest easier about this nomination if it were not for the apparent insensitivity of the nominee to what money means in terms of power. Many of his statements about the "gifts" seem strange and out of character for a public official expected to represent people of all walks of life—the poor as well as the rich.

He is quoted as telling Joseph Kraft, the columnist:

I like to give gifts, and $100,000 to me is like $10 to other people.

This kind of thinking—and I am sure it is sincere—makes me wonder how Nelson Rockefeller could understand the interests, the needs, the hopes, and aspirations of the plain people of America. Perhaps, I misjudge him, but this kind of attitude worries me—and I think it worries many people across this land.

Mr. Chairman, I do not feel that the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller is in the public interest and I will vote against the nomination.

What really disturbs me is the fact that this is the second time in just 13 months that the Congress has been called on to give its blessings to a Republican appointment to one of the two highest offices in the land.

When Governor Rockefeller is confirmed—as everyone tells us he will be—we will then have for the first time in the history of this Nation two unelected officials as President and Vice President. In my opinion, this is an intolerable situation—something which we should never have allowed to occur. It is sad indeed that the Republican Party has made such massive mistakes as to leave us with such a situation and it is unfortunate that the Congress did not better provide alternative solutions.

The 25th amendment does not work in a situation like this and it should be changed. This should be a priority item in the next Congress.

As I stated back on August 8 when the present incumbent in the White House, Gerald Ford, was about to take the oath of office through the courtesy of an appointment by Richard Nixon, I feel that the Constitution does in reality allow us to call an election despite the 25th amendment.

Let me point to article 2, section 1 of the Constitution. It is my opinion that this section of article 2 does leave the possibility that the Congress can call an election.

Article 2 provides:

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that there are many who will disagree about what article 2 means in this circumstance, and it is obvious that many feel that the 25th amendment is the only course which we can pursue in filling these vacant offices.

If in truth the prevailing opinion is that no election can be called under the present Constitution, then I feel it is important that the Congress move quickly—in the next session—on an amendment providing for an election within 90 days of any vacancy. I think it is contrary to our whole concept of Government to have the two highest offices in the land filled by appointed officials.

Judging from some of the news reports, there are apparently to be ceremonies later in the day—apparently the votes in the House have already been decided. In any event, I hope that any such ceremonies and celebrations are conducted in a subdued manner in keeping with the real facts of recent history. Without the tragic and sordid events which required both the elected President and Vice President to leave office within 1 year of each other, we would not today be considering still another appointment.

It is hardly a happy event for the House to be confirming appointments to offices which the people are supposed to control through open and free elections.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that big business and big banking could win at the polls. It is after all big business and big banking that have put us into this economic mess we are in today with high interest rates, ruinous inflation, and growing unemployment lines.

I do not like to see a representative of this big business and big banking community elevated to this office by this back door method of appointment. Once again, I am convinced that this would not happen if we had open and free elections on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. WAGGONER).

Mr. WAGGONER. Mr. Chairman, this amounts to the second occasion this Congress that we have relied on the 25th amendment to fill a vacancy for the office of Vice President. Some have suggested that the 25th amendment falls short of its intended purpose and needs revising. Regardless of how imperfect it might be, the 25th amendment provides us with an orderly means of filling a vacancy for the office of President and Vice President.

It is, I feel, most unhealthy and unwise to continue the operation of the executive branch of Government without a Vice President. That office should be filled as soon as is possible, and I think it is incumbent upon us, the legislative branch, to provide the leadership and act forthwith on behalf of all the American people.

Certainly, not everyone agrees on President Ford's choice for Vice President. No one would expect everyone to agree. In fact, I would be surprised if there were ever unanimous agreement given anyone nominated to fill a high public office.

Yet after a thorough and exhaustive investigation by the Senate Rules Committee and the House Judiciary Committee, there was really nothing found that would warrant disqualifying Mr. Rockefeller. I do not feel that any man, save perhaps the President, Mr. Ford, has undergone any closer scrutiny than has Mr. Rockefeller. If nothing could be turned up of a disqualifying nature by the Senate and the House Judiciary Committee, then I feel that there is nothing. If there were, surely it would have been found by now. It is amazing really that so few objections have been raised, all factors considered.

A number of people have asserted that unless one can agree 100 percent with Mr. Rockefeller's stand on the issues then he should vote against his nomination. I take issue with that kind of thinking, and I hasten to add I disagree with Mr. Rockefeller myself on some issues. If we are going to oppose a man's confirmation say, for example, on just one or two issues, then there is not a man alive who can meet all the qualifications for President or any other public office for that matter. To do so would be to effectively abandon the 25th amendment. People, of course, should express themselves.

I think we should all keep in mind what a confirmation hearing is all about. Herein lies the misunderstanding of the 25th amendment. It is an opportunity to review the nominee's qualifications for the office and then determine whether or not the nominee is qualified and meets the requirements. It is nothing more, nothing less. It is not like an election or a vote on some bill in the House where there is often more than one choice or a substitute. The issue here is to accept or reject the qualifications of this one man for this one office. This is our only choice. It is that simple.

Here we have a man who has the experience and the proven abilities which this office calls for. His experience and abilities are limitless. He is, beyond any reasonable doubt, qualified for the job in every respect. We must rely on our system of checks and balances. Mr. Speaker, I take a little bit different view of Mr. Rockefeller's wealth. Rather than being a liability as some might have suggested, I think it could be an enormous asset, when it is viewed in terms of the independence it allows the man who is unencumbered by personal financial problems and who cannot be tempted by financial gain while in office. I do object, however, to politics becoming a rich man's hobby.

Whatever one man might think of his political views, I do not feel there can be a challenge to his qualifications to hold this office. Surely we have not reached the point in this land wherein no man is qualified to serve in public office. While I do not know him as well as I know the person who nominated him, there is no more honest and truthful man than Gerry Ford; and if he feels that Nelson Rockefeller is the man for the job, then I accept his recommendation. If your findings concur with those of the Senate and the House Judiciary Committee, we have no choice but to confirm the man. It matters not whether Mr. Rockefeller was anyone's first choice; he is the only choice at present. For the reasons I have outlined, I intend to vote to confirm Mr. Rockefeller, and I urge his confirmation and my wife agrees.

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAGGONER. I will be happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURLESON).

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could say that every day the Congress is in session is, to some degree, historic. Today, however, is the second historic occasion under the recently adopted 25th amendment to the U.S. Constitution. My remarks might be more in the form of a testimonial, rather than from the standpoint of attempting to describe the merits of the Vice Presidential nominee, which is being done here now by members of the Judiciary Committee who have so carefully and fully heard the pros and cons of this nomination.

For more than 25 years I have had occasional opportunity to observe Mr. Rockefeller when he was in the service of our Government. He was in the Truman administration, the Eisenhower administration and subsequent administrations, doing his job in what I believe to have been out of a sense of duty and a willingness to submit himself to the efforts it took for him to perform a particular task. He has never done me a favor nor have I ever been asked to do anything for him. My views on this matter are absolutely and unequivocally objective.

A few days after President Ford nominated Mr. Rockefeller to become the Vice President, I had occasion to mention the fact that I wondered how many of us with his reputed wealth would be willing to assume this responsibility offered him. I wonder how many of us here would be willing to undergo one of the most thorough and exhaustive investigations in all facets of our lives. I wonder if we would be willing to enter the glass bowl and subject our every past and present action to the most severe questions which could possibly be propounded to us. I wonder if most of us would not feel it time to enjoy the material things available to the Vice President-designate and not be worried by the intense scrutiny under which Mr. Rockefeller has gone, and which has turned up nothing which, in my opinion, disqualifies him from this high office.

As everyone is aware, many publications of the extreme right and left, and many individuals in this category, have disseminated opinions, insinuations and innuendoes which they did not present to the committees looking into the affairs of Vice President-designate Rockefeller. In some quarters it has raised distrust, doubts and fears that something sinister is taking place but none of this has gone beyond accusations of one sort or another. Where do we get men and women to serve in this Government if wealth and success are to be disqualifications?

I have confidence that, although I certainly do not agree with Mr. Rockefeller on many philosophical issues, it is not reasonable that any of us would agree wholly with any individual who may be presented for this position.

Mr. Chairman, I support the nomination of Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. Under our system there must be continuity, there must be conscientious leadership, whether we always agree with it or not, and I believe it is time this Congress expeditiously acts to confirm Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of these United States.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SANDMAN).

Mr. SANDMAN. Mr. Chairman, this in all probability will be the last time that I shall address this House, and I am proud that this occasion is going to be used to recommend the confirmation of a great American to be the Vice President of the United States—Nelson A. Rockefeller.

I have known him for a long time. In the early 1960's, when he was Governor of New York, I was president of the New Jersey Senate, and, of course, coming from that area, we always looked to what is known as the New York Port Authority to remedy all of the problems of both States. For the most part, we were in adversary positions trying to do what we could for our individual States which we represented.

I am proud, too, that because of these negotiations, I was in some small way, together with him, a part of the largest transaction that ever took place in this country between two States which led to construction of the World Trade Center.

The biggest asset that I found in Nelson Rockefeller, in addition to his ability—which is second to none, in my judgment—was the fact that this is a man of great integrity. What he told me, I could believe. His word is good. This is important; I think the most important factor that has to be considered.

The Committee on the Judiciary set a very heavy standard for this nominee. Because he is going to be the Vice President and is only a heartbeat away from the Chief Executive's position, the standards of the Presidency also apply here.

We found three main objectives that had to be explained and proved to the committee: One, was he capable of doing the job, and on this not a single soul has a question. The second was: Does he have the integrity to carry out the office? Can we trust him? And, of course, here there was not a shred of evidence presented by anybody of anything that happened in his whole lifetime, his 40 years of public service to his country, his 15 years of dedicated service as Governor of his State—not a shred of evidence that showed anywhere that he did something that he should not have done.

The only thing that has been raised is not something that happened—this is the most unusual test of them all—but hypothetical cases on what might happen because he has great wealth, and this, I think, is an untenable position.

We can best judge what a man is going to do by studying what he has already done. Some say an accumulation of economic wealth is too dangerous to have when at the same time one may have the great power of the Presidency. I ask them to analyze that statement. These are a lot of first-class 50-cents words. But what do they mean?

If we talk about the Rockefeller wealth, where is it concentrated? New York City is where it is—most of it. And where was he Governor for 15 years—New York State.

To each of the witnesses who came to testify against his candidacy, I asked pointed questions: Show me one case where this man in the 15 years as Gov-error of the State at any time acted in the interest of his fortune or his family in such a way that it was detrimental to the State of New York, and not a single one of those witnesses was ever able to present anything.

December 19, 1974

Some members of this committee wanted all 84 members of the Rockefeller family to come in and testify as to their wealth, testify as to where all the foundation investments were.

After one does all of that, and after we find out where it all is, do we still not resolve the same questions: the integrity of the nominee?

As our chairman so aptly said, the only one thing judged by this House is the nominee, Nelson A. Rockefeller, and not his 84 relatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. SANDMAN. Mr. Chairman, the third area of course has to do with his philosophy and in this area no two people are going to agree on everything.

Some people say that because of the man's great wealth he is not going to appeal to the people. Is this not the man who has been elected four times by the people of one of the largest States in the Nation? Somebody had to believe he appealed to people.

I am interested too in what those people have to say who have had to represent and have spent their lifetime in representing minorities. What do they have to say about the man? I would like to call to the attention of the Members the remarks made by the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. CHISHOLM), made on November 27 before our committee, when she pointed to an outstanding record in the interest of the people from all walks of life. That is important. Then there are the remarks made by the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), and the gentlewoman from Texas (Miss BARBARA JORDAN) in a wonderful statement she made before the Judiciary Committee.

Putting all of this together I think we have resolved that this is the most capable man for this office who can be presented to this House.

To my colleagues on both sides of the aisle I would say, let us admit that this nominee was confirmed by the Senate 90 to 7. He was confirmed overwhelmingly by the Judiciary Committee. We know he is going to be confirmed by this House. Would it not be a nice thing if we could agree on something and go together into the new year? Let us nominate Nelson A. Rockefeller to be the next Vice President of the United States.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. EILBERG).

Mr. EILBERG. Mr. Chairman, with due respect to our great Judiciary Committee chairman, I would say that the greatest cause for concern about the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President is the possible conflicts of interest he would face because of his family's great wealth. This wealth includes holdings in this country in oil and banking as well as immense investments in other countries.

In this country, his family, the Rockefellers, own 2 percent of Standard Oil of California, 1 percent of Exxon, 1.8 percent of Mobil, 0.7 percent of Marathon Oil, and 0.2 percent of Standard Oil of Indiana. In addition, the family bank, Chase Manhattan, holds 5.2 percent of the stock of Mobil Oil, 4.5 percent of Atlantic Richfield, 1.3 percent of Continental Oil, and 0.2 of Ashland Oil.

The family's control of the Chase Manhattan Bank is of great concern. It has $37 billion in assets and is the Nation's third largest bank—after the Bank of America in California and First National City Bank in New York. In addition to its holdings in the oil industry, Chase has large interests in four of the Nation's airlines and the three television networks.

Although J. Richardson Dilworth claims the Rockefeller family does not control anything, Nelson's brother, David, is chairman of the board of the bank and it is widely known as the Rockefeller family bank.

Throughout his career Nelson Rockefeller has been an advocate of a militant foreign policy. During one campaign for the Republican nomination for President he proposed the establishment of an Inter-American defense force, which was generally regarded in Latin America as a ploy to form an army to protect the holdings of American companies in Central and South America as well as the holdings of the wealthy families of Latin America.

This plan and other statements by Rockefeller make it clear that he would advocate the use of American troops to protect American industry abroad. This indicates that he did not learn anything from the Vietnam war which he supported wholeheartedly to the very end.

Because of his family's great wealth Nelson Rockefeller's outlook has been one of protecting industry and institutions rather than meeting the needs of the majority of the American people.

He simply has no way to relate to the needs and desires of people who worry about making mortgage payments when they have to buy a new car and have one or more children about to enter college.

He does not know, and can never know, what it means to worry about being laid off from a job or worrying how a family is going to be fed when both parents are out of work and unemployment benefits are about to run out.

How can a man relate to the needs of middle America when he only gives gifts to people—for alleged family emergencies—who are in the top 1 percent income bracket in the country?

One gift, to L. Judson Morhouse—the gift was stock in a firm which owned one property—is suspiciously significant. The same Morhouse, former chairman of the New York State Republican Party, was sent to prison as a result of a liquor license scandal.

Rockefeller later pardoned Morhouse because of what he said were medical reasons. Morhouse was and is allegedly in poor health.

Rockefeller told the Senate Rules Committee that he pardoned Morhouse after three independent doctors went to the prison where Morhouse was serving his time and examined him and reported that his life would be in jeopardy if he remained in jail.

The facts in the case are that only one of these doctors ever saw Mr. Morhouse. The others never made it to the prison because of a snowstorm, but they filed affidavits anyway.

Other affidavits were filed by doctors on behalf of Morhouse as part of his application for clemency. Some of these were rewritten because a member of then Governor Rockefeller's staff thought they were "weak."

The nominee's lack of candor on this issue and others shows an arrogance and a willingness to be less than candid with the Congress which could lead to trouble—such as we had with Mr. Nixon—if he were to become President.

In his reply to my questions about gift taxes relating to the use of his airplanes by Henry Kissinger and others is the kind of "I do not give a damn" type of answer we got from the Nixon White House.

This indicates a belief in the supremacy of the executive branch which can only cause trouble since the nominee would probably act in the same high-handed manner as Nixon did. There is simply nothing in his testimony before either committee or in his statements of support for Nixon's positions before he resigned the Presidency to indicate otherwise.

I intend to vote no.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LANDRUM).

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Chairman, my earliest recollection of Mr. Rockefeller is when he became Under Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, in early 1953. Mrs. Hobby from Texas was the first Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. Mr. Rockefeller was her Under Secretary. During that period of time the Eisenhower budget for education just touched the surface, just tipped the iceberg, so to speak. All that it had at that time in the budget for education was $528.7 million.

Now, the capacity of Mr. Rockefeller in this field is shown in that he had a very discerning mind about what was going to be required for education in the last one-third of the 20th century. Where we had $528.7 million in 1953, with Mr. Rockefeller as the principal exponent of Federal assistance to education, we come today to the fact that we have total appropriations for Federal assistance to education of more than $6 billion, almost $7 billion.

A great deal of what he believes some of us would disagree with, but most of us cannot deny the fact that he has courage, that he has brains, that he has real capacity. And, as I have tried to demonstrate here, he has shown a very discerning mind about what is needed, or what has been needed and what will be needed for the future of these United States. Education is the fundamental of this need and more than 20 years ago he led the way. He broke the ice.

I think we can do no better than to go ahead and confirm Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. I think we need his leadership. I think he can tell the country what it needs to be told.

Mr. Chairman, I am an individual dedicated to the welfare of America. I am not concerned about personal assets. I am not concerned about all the things that go with personal wealth. What I am really concerned about is the welfare of America. I think Nelson Rockefeller has demonstrated that quality in his terms as Governor of New York, in his service as Under Secretary of HEW, and many other public endeavors.

I am pleased today to be able to endorse the nomination of Governor Rockefeller for Vice President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON).

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON).

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not come before the committee this afternoon with a prepared speech, although perhaps in view of the very portentous nature of this occasion, that would have been the proper procedure. But again, in view of the fact that we were so recently reminded of that little used House rule against reading of speeches from the well of the House, maybe it is fortunate that I do not.

Having had the opportunity to testify on the 12th of September of this year before the Committee on Rules of the other body in support of the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller, and more recently before the House Judiciary Committee, I felt it would serve no great or useful purpose to again recite his many and vast accomplishments. His record of experience and public service, I think, eminently qualifies him for the Vice Presidency of the United States. His interest in a wide range of questions of public policy has been manifest in the contributions he has made to effective government over several decades, and most recently as the Nation's senior Governor until his retirement from that office at the end of last year. He does have a record of public service rarely equaled in the annals of our country.

I have made a few notes here this afternoon as I have listened to the debate proceed. It seems to me that there are two somewhat conflicting theories espoused by those who oppose the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller. One, as I understand it, is that we are acting this afternoon in the capacity of surrogates of the people, and to that extent we should merely reflect the wishes of our particular constituency. An extension of that theory has been offered to the effect that, in view of the results of the recent election, there would be a lack of legitimacy to our actions if this particular Congress, the 93d Congress, undertakes to act on this nomination, and that we might therefore well defer it until January 1975 or until the 94th Congress.

It seems to me that, if we were to follow that logic to its conclusion, that it would be very difficult for any Democratic Congress to ever confirm a Republican for the Office of Vice President. There might even be some who would be encouraged to suggest that we should require the reconfirmation of the 38th President of the United States in view of what occurred in the congressional elections on the 5th of November this year. Yet, if we were to take that posture this afternoon, it seems to me without any argument that we would have to concede that the system devised under the 25th amendment to fill a vacancy in the constitutional Office of Vice President would simply break down.

I cannot really believe that anyone wants that to happen. There may be those here who have a legitimate quarrel with the 25th amendment. I myself have had, on occasion, some pause about it and it may be argued that the 25th amendment is an imperfect vehicle. However, the fact remains that it is the supreme law of the land legislated by this body and ratified by two-thirds of the States, and let us, therefore, proceed to do what is our constitutional duty: to act in this Congress on this nomination.

The other theory in opposition to confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller that has been advanced by the gentleman from Wisconsin, whom I respect as one of the leaders of the opposition, is that we should not be merely guided this afternoon by constitutional standards for the Office of the Vice Presidency—as I believe he said in his earlier remarks—but by our independent judgment, and that independent judgment, in turn, can rest upon what our individual feelings are about the nominee's position on various questions of public policy.

Obviously, I can agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER) that we are not simply rubberstamps, as he put it, but equal partners in the constitutional process set forth in the 25th amendment.

However, in exercising that independent judgment, I think we ought to be careful not to substitute merely our personal prejudice about the views of the Vice President-designate, not to substitute our personal prejudice in that regard for an objective examination of the exhaustive record that has been compiled by the House Committee on the Judiciary. That record shows conclusively that it was not a whitewash. This committee went into the matter of Nelson A. Rockefeller's fitness and qualifications—as the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ROJINO), told us when this debate opened—extensively and intensively and on the broadest possible scale.

In answer to the one speaker who earlier expressed concern about the great fortune of the Rockefeller family and their economic interests—they do, admittedly, stretch into many different areas. Here again I would suggest that it is our duty in exercising that independent judgment to be guided exclusively by the record of the nominee's stewardship both as a public servant and as a private citizen of the United States of the assets which he enjoys.

That is the record on which we are to proceed, rather than on the basis of some vague inchoate suspicion that may lurk in the back of someone's mind. I am satisfied that this same House Committee on the Judiciary, of which I was so very proud earlier this year, which performed so magnificently in connection with the impeachment inquiry, has again done the kind of careful job that entitles us to accept the recommendation that they have made by a vote of more than 2 to 1 that Nelson A. Rockefeller should be confirmed by this House as Vice President of the United States. He can help to provide the kind of positive and progressive leadership that our Nation requires in the critical years that lie ahead.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York, who represents the State of the former Governor of New York (Mr. STRATTON).

Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding there will be an additional request.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the nomination of Governor Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. Perhaps my views on this matter may be of some interest to the Members of this body, for two reasons. First of all, because I am, at least in a sense, Governor Rockefeller's Congressman, since I happen to represent the city of Albany, the capital of the State of New York, where the Governor served for 15 years. Actually, his voting residence is in Westchester County, but I think the people of Albany have come to know him pretty well in those 15 years.

Second, because I do hold a view which has been mentioned earlier today in debate, but which until today has been almost completely ignored, and that is that there is a difference between the confirmation procedures set forth in the Constitution for the Senate of the United States to advise and consent to the President's nominations and the job that is imposed upon us by the 25th amendment to the Constitution.

Traditionally, the Senate has felt that if they cannot find anything to disqualify a nominee, they have to let the President have his own man.

But this is a different procedure we face today, in my judgment, for two reasons. First of all, because the House this time is included, and not just the Senate; and, second, because the people we are being asked to confirm are those who in the normal course of events would have been elected by the people themselves in a general election.

Therefore, it seems to me that the primary obligation on our part, in the circumstances of selecting two of the top men in our Government without the election that ordinarily is called for, should be to represent in our votes a kind of surrogate for that national election and so to try, as well as we basically can and insofar as we possibly can, to vote the way the people would like to have us vote.

So with this view of our obligation and having the privilege of serving here in Congress the people of the capital of New York, who know Mr. Rockefeller best, I intend to vote against the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller.

How do I know, Mr. Chairman, what my people want on this question? Well, I have conducted no scientific polls, I have not even sent out a questionnaire on this subject. But in the 5 months during which Mr. Rockefeller's name has been before us, I have talked to literally hundreds of people in my district on this subject, people from all walks of life. I believe that their views on this question represent a fair sample of the basic views of the people in the capital district of New York State.

In addition to that, I made my position concerning this nomination a part of my recent election campaign: that I intended to vote the way the people of my district wanted me to vote. At that time, my mail was running about 85 to 1 against the Governor. When the campaign was over, I urged the people to write me or call me and let me know how they felt. It still ended up 3 to 1 or 4 to 1 against Mr. Rockefeller. Now, why is it that they feel this way in upstate New York? Some people have said, "This is just the antiabortionists writing in." Yes, I have had some antiabortion sentiment expressed to me in my mail, but this is certainly not the bulk of it. The bulk of it, I think, shows that the people of New York State have a little different view of Nelson Rockefeller than do the people in the other 49 States.

The people of New York have become, frankly, disenchanted with his administration of our State. We have had an eightfold increase in the State budget over his 15 years; we have the highest taxes of any State in the United States; and we now have the highest bonded indebtedness of any State. Moreover, that bonded indebtedness is scattered through a maze of independent authorities, with virtually no accountability to the people themselves.

The people of my district recognize that this is a time when we are trying to put our national fiscal house in order and when we are talking about restraint and budget reduction, and they are afraid that Mr. Rockefeller is just not the person who, on his record, can contribute to that kind of objective. They are afraid that if Mr. Rockefeller should become President, he will put into effect nationally, the same program he put into effect in the State of New York.

Mr. Chairman, there is another fear that the people of my district have, and I think I have an obligation to express it too. They know that Mr. Rockefeller is a take-charge guy. They know that he ruled New York State with a firm hand during the 15 years he was our Governor, not only in the executive department but in the legislature as well. They know he is not the kind of person who is going to accept the kind of docile, subordinate role that is traditionally the Throbbottom image of the Vice President.

My people have a gut feeling about this point, Mr. Chairman. They do not know any better than anybody else knows just how this might be accomplished, but they have an intuitive feeling that if Nelson Rockefeller becomes Vice President of the United States, in a very short time he is going to be taking over from Mr. Ford and is going to be President of the United States; and they just do not want him to be President.

Finally, I want to make it clear, Mr. Chairman, that while I will cast my vote against the nomination, I do so without any animosity toward Governor Rockefeller himself whatsoever. I have known him over these 15 years. I know of his fine qualities; I know of his tremendous energy; I know of his long dedication to public service. But I shall cast my vote, Mr. Chairman, in conformity with that which I interpret to be the primary responsibility placed upon us under the Constitution to make this vote in the House today reflect, as much as we humanly can, the voice and the vote of the sovereign people of the United States.

Mr. GUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRATTON. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from New York on his statement. I agree with it in most respects.

Mr. Chairman, I will vote against confirming Nelson Rockefeller as the 41st Vice President of the United States.

This has been a difficult decision, because of the long period of instability our country has experienced during the dark night of national turmoil and disgrace which began with the indictment and forced resignation of the former Vice President, and finally reached its depths with the forced resignation of the previous President of the United States under the certainty of impeachment.

The first President to hold the highest office in the land without having been directly elected as President or Vice President by the people has now sent us the nomination of a Vice President of the United States also not elected by the people.

The extraordinarily critical responsibility of the Congress in such a circumstance under the 25th amendment to the Constitution becomes undeniably imperative, for that reason alone and of itself before weighing all the other critical implications attendant with this nomination. The responsibility we are required to meet today with respect to the confirmation process, as a process, rises far, far above the level of that responsibility as is exercised routinely and at times perfunctorily in confirming the appointments of admirals, or another foreign U.S. Ambassador, or department head, by the Senate. The 25th amendment recognizes the unique level of responsibility placed upon the Congress in these circumstances, and the fact that the process of installing a new, non-popularly elected Vice President is a jointly and fully equal one between the President and Congress, and in this instance, involving a confirmation process in which the House, as well as the Senate, is mandated to participate and give its consent.

The 25th amendment thus recognizes the special constitutional role of the House as that body closest to the people, in circumstances where the people themselves may not directly represent themselves in the process of selecting their two highest national leaders. There is no presumption, therefore, as with the lower level political appointments of a popularly elected President, that he is entitled by virtue of that popular election to staff the executive branch with any qualified choice congenial to the purposes of his administration.

The only presumption today that matters here is that the House will, in fact, represent the people to whom our body is closest, and who are prevented from directly representing themselves in the selection of a constitutional head of state in a free and democratic society. With this presumption goes the additional, inherent presumption that the process itself by which we vote or deny confirmation will have been adequate to the gravity and nature of the special responsibility the 25th amendment thrusts upon us. Specifically, it means that all of us who now debate and will shortly vote on this nomination have adequate information and knowledge on which to base such a historic decision, and one so critical in its implications for the life of the country.

This would be an imperative requirement in any event for the process of fair and impartial consideration of the Vice Presidential nominee under the provisions of the 25th amendment. The national tragedy and instability we have gone through makes it, if possible, even more so.

We have before us as a nominee, the name of a man about whom serious legal, financial and moral questions were raised and explored by the Senate Rules Committee and the House Judiciary Committee, in some instances, and in my judgment, not sufficiently and thoroughly explored in others.

We have before us a report and recommendation by the Judiciary Committee. We know that a number of members of that committee felt it essential to the adequacy of the record that certain witnesses be called who were not, and certain questions thoroughly explored, which were not, and that 12 members of that committee, nearly a third its membership, do not join in that report and that recommendation.

We consider this nomination in the full House today under strict limitations of time for debate and exploration by those of us not privileged to sit on the Judiciary Committee, but who must nonetheless exercise a personal responsibility under the Constitution.

I was one of those who felt that the House Judiciary Committee should have begun its hearings on this nomination earlier, so that the committee record could have been more fully and more adequately developed, in keeping with the gravity of the occasion and the requirements placed upon Members who have not had the benefit of sitting on the committee.

On the basis of the information that is presently available to me, Mr. Chairman, I will be compelled to vote against confirmation on substantive grounds, notwithstanding the difficulty of arriving at my decision to do so.

For though I recognize the long uncertainty and instability and turmoil the Nation has lived through for so many months, far too long now, with the political tragedy of the forced resignation of its two highest leaders, and with the whole sorry chapter and tragedy of Watergate, I think it essential that we not possibly tempt the occurrence of still another such tragedy by shunting aside and failing to soberly recognize the many serious questions that still remain about this nominee.

Such questions are only, in part, personal.

They are also institutional, with respect to the function of high office within a democratic society and democratic process.

If we have before us the name of a nominee about whom questions still remain and information yet remains lacking, we also have before us a proposal of institutional, governmental, and constitutional marriage between extravagant private wealth and extravagant public power.

We have before us, finally, and perhaps in the last analysis, most importantly, a moral choice and a special moral responsibility to the people of our country already ravaged once too often and far too long by the consequences of granting vast power to those lacking the sensitivity to the values and purposes of our democratic process itself in a free society.

In all these respects, finally, we are required to weigh the nominee's qualifications not to become Vice President, but to be President. Our most recent national experience makes real that transcendent fact and commands our full and sober recognition of it.

On all counts, I will vote against the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller.

I will do so primarily because on the basis of the inadequate but available record, I cannot agree to help perform this marriage of public power and private wealth. Were I persuaded that no part of the public record contained or hinted that in the past public performance of the nominee, the dangers and concerns and fears of misuse of the combination of power and wealth ever materialized, I might be more inclined to consent to the nomination.

But in the case of this nominee, such fears have been made real, caused by his own long and consistent and varied exhibition of total insensitivity to the dangers raised by the combining of his vast private wealth with previous public office he has held.

In an effort to thoroughly and vigorously explore the full nature of and extent of possible private economic influence over the affairs of National Government, were he confirmed, I asked the Judiciary Committee last month to summon David Rockefeller to testify. I did so because I strongly believed that no question as to the possible degree of a potential and inherent conflict of interest could be answered by asking such questions of the nominee alone, but also required vigorous questioning of David Rockefeller and the fullest identification of, and most thorough, examination of the implications of the economic power and influence in virtually every segment of the U.S. and world economy by Chase Manhattan Bank, one of the largest banks in the world, which David Rockefeller heads. Because Chase Manhattan cuts into every segment of the American economy, with major holdings in four of the Nation's largest airlines, all three television networks, and every conceivable kind of major corporation in every field, it is patently insufficient to let the question of possible conflict of interest pass with the mere assurance by the nominee that he will place his own individual fortune into a blind trust. There is no way Governor Rockefeller may place his brother and the rest of his family into a blind trust, or the $1 billion fortune they have amassed.

David Rockefeller, despite the desire of some members of the Judiciary Committee, was not called to testify. The potential, really inherent, conflict of interest posed by the vast economic power and interests of Chase Manhattan Bank, was not identified, examined, and weighed.

If that was perhaps the single greatest omission in the confirmation hearings held by the committee, and the most single important part of the record lacking before us in the House today, there were many other omissions as well.

I previously urged that Governor Rockefeller be asked to testify at length with respect to his economic holdings and interests in both the country of Venezuela and in Exxon, the major supplier of Venezuelan oil to my consumers in Florida, as well as to other parts of the country. Given the economic extortion practiced against the people of the United States in the oil prices charged by Venezuela, and the nominee's own economic ties to both that country and that major oil company, surely the failure to weigh this question thoroughly and examine it vigorously is a most serious omission.

So was the failure, in my judgment, to adequately examine the relationship between Chase Manhattan and the taxpayer-backed and State Department-supervised Overseas Private Investment Corporation, which many feel should be eliminated but which Chase bank desires to maintain as a taxpayer-guaranteed insuring agency for its lending and banking operations in Brazil, South Vietnam, South Korea, India, the Dominican Republic, and Guiana.

As Vice President, what influence would the nominee have over the decision to continue or eliminate this program, and how could he not be aware of the vital interest Chase Manhattan, headed by his brother, has in the continuation of the program?

In the House today as we prepare to vote, we cannot even know the full extent of the additional kinds of questions of this nature which demand to be asked, because the full extent of the economic power of Chase Manhattan is not in the record before us.

We do have, however, the record of the nominee's past willingness to distribute private financial aid to public officials. The legal questions remain to be resolved. The nominee remains under a legal cloud, no less than a moral one. In light of recent history, we ought not tolerate the slightest doubt and yet vote to confirm.

The variety and degree and nature of his insensitivity to the attitude of mind, the abuse of spirit, and ignorance of public ethics, which brought so much tragedy down on the people of our land, for so long, and from which we now must emerge again into the sunlight of reborn hope, would, if we vote to confirm, proclaim our own darkness of knowledge, and our own insensitivity.

I urge that the insensitivity of Nelson Rockefeller in high office not befall the already ravaged political spirit of our people, and that our own insensitivity not, and that we vote to deny his confirmation today.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUBBS).

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I, too, bring to this matter much the same approach as did the gentleman from New York who spoke before me, although in my case it will lead to a different vote.

Mr. Chairman, I think the people of this Nation are extremely uneasy at the prospect we face of having both a President and a Vice President, neither of whom was elected by the people. I feel very, very strongly that the vote which we must cast later today is unique among all the votes we are ever called upon to cast as Members of Congress.

I think the selection of the Vice President and, consequently, of a potential President is one case in which our judgment should not be imposed upon that of the people.

To ascertain the wishes of my constituents I sent a questionnaire to the people in my district, as I did a year ago when President Nixon nominated Gerald Ford.

The people of my district were given precisely the question that we must face shortly:

Do you wish me, as your Congressman, to vote for or against the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller?

December 19, 1974

Over 29,000 people responded, with a vote of 69 percent for and 31 percent against. Consequently, when the roll is called later today, I shall vote, in their name, to confirm Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STUDDS. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, for the second time in this Congress, we are asked to stand in for the American people to elect a Vice President of the United States. I have approached the nomination of Mr. Rockefeller in the same manner as I did for the confirmation of Gerald Ford.

Partisanship has no place in this proceeding. Mr. Rockefeller is the choice of a Republican President and a Democratic-controlled Congress should not veto President Ford's choice unless proof is presented to show that Mr. Rockefeller is personally unfit to hold the office.

I perceive to be one of my responsibilities as a Member of Congress to reflect as accurately as possible the majority thinking in my district. Therefore, I conducted a survey in my district calling several hundred citizens asking their opinions on the Rockefeller nomination. This was a statistically selected sample broad enough to give an accurate profile of First District opinion.

I repeat that I have taken this survey on this special issue because normally the American people are permitted to cast a direct vote for Vice President.

The results of that survey show that 75 percent favor the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller, 17 percent are against, and 8 percent had no opinion.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in an effort to vote what my district wants, I shall cast a vote in favor of Mr. Rockefeller for Vice President.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. McCLOY).

Mr. McCLOY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. DENNIS).

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Chairman, we are engaged here today in the important business of voting on the confirmation of the Honorable Nelson A. Rockefeller, who has been nominated by the President of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of the 25th amendment to the Constitution, to fill the existing vacancy in the Office of the Vice Presidency.

As I understand the purpose of the 25th amendment, in regard to the area with which we are now concerned, that purpose is to assure continuity in the Office of the Vice Presidency; continuity in the physical sense that the office shall not be allowed to remain vacant, and continuity in the political sense that it shall be filled by an individual of the same political party, and of the same general political philosophy as that of the Chief Executive who makes the nomination.

The individual nominated should also and naturally be personally acceptable to the President; and he should, of course and above all, be an individual of integrity, ability, competence, and experience equal to the duties of the high office for which he has been nominated.

If these criteria are met then a Member of Congress ought, in my view, to vote to confirm. He is not, as I understand it, to decide the question on the basis of whether he personally would have made the nomination had he had that prerogative, nor on the basis of whether he would have supported the nominee had the Member been voting as a delegate to a national nominating convention, nor on the basis of whether, in his view, the nominee would be likely to carry the Member's district or State at a popular election; for no one of these is the situation which is now before us.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee I have listened carefully to the testimony before us, and have examined as much as I could of the voluminous documentary evidence.

The record before us indicates that Governor Rockefeller meets the criteria under the 25th amendment which I have mentioned. It indicates that he is a man of honor, competence, and experience, who has devoted his life to public service, and who has dealt responsibly with the great wealth with which his particular fate has endowed him, and which not only does not, but in my judgment, ought not to disqualify him from office. He is the choice and the nominee of the President of the United States, who has performed his function under the 25th amendment. In performing my own and different function under that amendment, the record before me discloses no persuasive reason why I should not ratify the executive choice; and I shall, therefore, cast my vote for the confirmation of Governor Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. PIKE).

Mr. PIKE. Mr. Chairman, as we conduct this debate on this allegedly vital issue before this half-empty Chamber, with these half-empty galleries, it becomes pretty obvious that the stockings are already hung by the chimney with care, the TV time has been ordered, the champagne is cooling in the bucket, and the question becomes: What do you give to the man who has almost everything? You give him almost everything he wants. I do not like taking the role of Scrooge at this particular time.

I would like to say first the things which are not my reasons for opposing this confirmation.

It does not have to do with the overwhelming barrage of mail which has come to my office opposing this confirmation, because I believe most of it is for the wrong reasons. I do not find relevant the nominee's personal life. I do not find disqualifying his views on particular issues. As to his conduct at Attica, I think there has been a great deal of second-guessing on that. I find also disturbing, but not disqualifying, the statistics. Governor Rockefeller was elected Governor of the State of New York on a campaign promise of "pay as you go." That was his campaign promise—"pay as you go." The total budget of the State the last year before he became Governor was $1,390,000,000. The total budget the last year he was Governor was $8,881,000,000, an increase in the budget of 800 percent.

The total debt of the State in the last year before he was Governor was $912 million. The total debt the last year he was Governor was $9.1 billion, an increase in the debt of 1,000 percent.

We are told that we have a right or an obligation to confirm a man of the political philosophies of the President of the United States. Is this the political philosophy of the President of the United States? I submit not. Still I find this disturbing, but not disqualifying.

What I do find disqualifying is not the fact that he is wealthy but that he has used this great wealth improperly to buy political strength and political power. His gifts, to, for example, William J. Ronan were not just improprieties, they were illegalities. They were criminal illegalities, and they were not prosecuted in any manner in the State of New York because we tend not to prosecute the wealthy and the powerful.

I find his promise to put his holdings, if confirmed, in a blind trust rather unimpressive. Does he mean that in all the years he was Governor of the State of New York he did not make any decisions whatsoever? He did not do anything as Governor which might have required that they be in a blind trust while he was Governor? He did nothing about, for example, offshore oil drilling that might inure to the benefit of Exxon? I do not find this credible. This is why, although Santa Claus is coming to town, I decline to be one of his helpers.

Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIKE. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I certainly want, Mr. Chairman, to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be with a minority of the U.S. House of Representatives as I cast my vote against the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. This is an especially difficult vote for me because I am cognizant of the talent and ability and past contributions of the nominee. I am also fully aware of the great philanthropic contributions of the Rockefeller family. Because I am a black man, I am also aware that black Americans have benefited greatly by the philanthropies of the Rockefeller Foundation. However, I must vote against the confirmation.

No person should condemn any other person because he has a great abundance of wealth or because he is abjectly poor. Yet I cannot disabuse my mind of the gnawing, nagging fear that the awesome combination of political power and economic power in the long run bodes ill for the Nation. Perhaps this persisting, nagging fear would leave me if, as Governor of the State of New York, Mr. Rockefeller, had not lavished big gifts and big loans to public officials and influential citizens. It concerns me gravely that wealth could be used to pay for the writing and publishing of a book which was clearly designed to smear the life and political career of a political opponent of Governor Rockefeller.

Along with these concerns, I must remember Attica, a stain against the Nation that will not be washed away for many years to come. I must remember the "get tough on welfare recipients" posture that Mr. Rockefeller assumed when he apparently believed it was to his political advantage to do so. I must remember that it was at Nelson Rockefeller's insistence that antidrug legislation which was violative of civil liberties was rammed through the New York State Assembly.

Finally, we must inevitably come to grips with the problem associated with the second use of the 25th amendment within less than a year. At the time of the Nixon debacle, I, along with many of my colleagues, was grateful that the Congress had enacted this measure. However, I remain convinced that none of us contemplated that the Congress would, within less than a year, twice act as a surrogate for the people by naming a Vice President. We must make some changes in the law because citizens should not be denied the basic right to select a Vice President of their own choosing.

These are troubled, chaotic times for our Nation. We need strong and effective leadership in our highest elective offices. We need to pledge fulsome support to strong, effective, positive leadership. My negative vote against the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller for Vice President does not and should not mean that he will not receive cooperation and support from me after he is Vice President. My negative vote means only that I have wrestled with my conscience and conscience has prevailed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO).

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ECKHARDT).

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote to confirm, and I shall do it for two reasons, one quite pragmatic, and the other upon a reasoned judgment of the basis upon which I think my choice should be governed.

First, as to the pragmatic basis: If this nomination were stopped, it would be by the votes of widely divergent elements of this House who could not coalesce to stop the nomination of a much less qualified nominee. Do any of my friends, my National Democratic friends, think that a better nominee from their standpoint would be forthcoming if Nelson Rockefeller were rejected?

Second, as to the philosophic basis, it is true, of course, that we are not called upon here to act upon the advise and consent basis that underlies the confirmation process of the Senate of officers of the United States. That is the basis, of course, provided in Article II of the Constitution. We are called upon to act on the basis provided in the 25th amendment a confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress. There is a difference, as has been stated by the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON), that is, when the question is whether or not to act on the advise and consent basis, the rule is generally considered to be whether or not there are negative factors that should block the selection of the person nominated by the President. Usually that selection is of a person who is to fill an executive office.

In this instance, as the gentleman from New York correctly states, the question is whether or not, on positive grounds, the nominee is within the brackets of ability and integrity so as to make him a fitting candidate for the office of Vice President, an office which may eventually vault him into the Presidency.

I differ however from my friend, the gentleman from New York, in the conclusion at which he finally arrives. I feel that Nelson Rockefeller is within those brackets rather clearly. I have not found—as my other friend from New York (Mr. PIKE) says—such positive disqualifying factors as would persuade me to vote against him.

For those reasons I shall vote to confirm.

I do not support the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller because I would choose him for the Vice Presidency on the merits. I would not, I think, agree with this President on his choice for the Vice Presidency on the merits in any case. But that is not the question here. It is as I have said, only whether Mr. Rockefeller is within the brackets of competency and integrity from within which a nominee may properly be selected. So I shall vote to confirm.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. FISH).

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the Judiciary Committee has again distinguished itself in these proceedings under the very able leadership of Chairman PETER RODINO and the ranking Republican EDWARD HUTCHINSON. We have conducted an extensive and intensive investigation of the nominee's credentials and public career which has consumed 4 months. It has already become a cliché that the nominee has been subjected to the most grueling scrutiny of any in the history of our Republic. It is important to remember that before us was not a political novice, an unknown, but a man with a long public career which is fully known and which has been confirmed four times at the polls. In assessing the nominee's qualifications, we have his record before us—fact and history, not mere speculation.

Like so many others, it is my conclusion that our Nation has few others as uniquely and eminently qualified to be a mere heartbeat away from the Presidency. The nominee served my own State of New York as its Governor for 15 years. His administration was one of unparalleled accomplishment and progress in such varied fields as education, health, transportation, environmental protection, urban development, and human rights.

Over the years, Nelson Rockefeller has served five Presidents, beginning with President Roosevelt as coordinator for Latin American affairs and then Assistant Secretary of State. He was deeply involved with the creation of the complex Department of Health, Education, and Welfare under President Eisenhower, and served as its first Under Secretary. Today, he serves President Ford as a member of the Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board. So, he brings with him both a knowledge of foreign affairs as well as domestic issues.

A major concern remains, however, for some of our colleagues—the merger of vast personal wealth with a position of high public trust. The conflicts of interest, they say, are inherent and unavoidable. True, the melding of great personal fortune and public power is unique in our country and it demanded, and received intense examination by the members of the House Judiciary Committee.

Governor Rockefeller's 40-year record of public service has been exhaustively scrutinized. And yet, other than the rather vague feelings expressed that somehow the merger of economic power with the political power of the Vice President would be wrong, or a threat to our Government, no one has submitted one proven example to the Members of this House that the nominee has in fact ever abused his public trust. Can one deny that as Governor of one of the largest and diverse States in the Union, or as the first Under Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, political power was merged with the Rockefeller economic power? Yet we have heard no evidence that would indicate that such a merger was harmful to the government or people of the State of New York, or the operations of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Surely during these many years of service a personal character susceptible to corruption—to abuse of trust—would have been revealed.

During the confirmation hearings held by our committee and in the Senate, Governor Rockefeller publicly disclosed a list of the assets owned by himself and his wife, together with a list of assets held in the two trusts of which he is a beneficiary. This list is available for all to see and examine. The media know of these holdings. The nominee himself is aware of the deep concern of the Congress regarding this issue.

I would submit that with the increased public awareness of the extent of his assets, and due to great concern expressed by both congressional committees before which he appeared, Governor Rockefeller will, as Vice President, be sensitive to the possible conflicts of interest, and will scrupulously avoid even the appearance of the improper use of his power.

Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that an examination of this nominee's record of public service, together with his actions during confirmation hearings, give assurance that as a man of high character, purpose, and dedication, Governor Rockefeller's conduct as Vice President will be above question.

In his appearances before our committee, the Governor demonstrated a belief in the ideals of this country and an impressive grasp of the problems we currently face. His performance can only serve to reinforce the feelings of many of us that he is a man of high ideals and a remarkable public servant. He qualifies to be Vice President on the basis of talent, dedication, and a keen sensitivity to the problems facing America and the world. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting his confirmation.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

The nomination of Mr. Rockefeller was submitted to Congress barely 2 weeks after Gerald Ford became our 38th President. The new President, acutely aware of the suddenness with which a Vice President may be called upon to assume the highest office in the land, acted expeditiously in the nomination with the hope that it could be promptly confirmed and the Nation relieved of the worry of Presidential succession. Yet, also knowing only too well the heavy responsibilities a Vice President may suddenly have to shoulder and the need he will have for the acceptance and support of the Nation and its leaders, President Ford carefully sought the recommendations of Members of this and the other body and looked for an individual whom he knew well and whose abilities were well tested. The person he finally chose certainly met these qualifications. Not only has Nelson Rockefeller been a personal friend and adviser of Mr. Ford, but he comes from a family which has figured prominently in the history and growth of this Nation and he brings with him years of administrative and political experience at the State and national level.

Yet perhaps because his family and career in public service have been so vigorous and at times controversial, difficult questions quickly arose regarding Nelson Rockefeller's fitness to be Vice President. While recognizing the desirability for an early confirmation, the House Judiciary Committee, on which I am privileged to serve, felt a deep responsibility to pursue these questions closely in order to assure that future revelations would not jeopardize the fragile public trust which had been so sorely strained during the past year.

The committee considered in detail the actions Mr. Rockefeller has taken in the past in numerous policy areas. Needless to say, no member of the committee, myself included, agreed with all of Mr. Rockefeller's positions during his long career. His record includes some actions with which I would take strong exception and some which he himself now regrets. Assessing that record as a whole, however, and recognizing that no one is free from human fallibility, I feel that the record clearly indicates strong intelligence and executive ability.

Much attention was also devoted to Mr. Rockefeller's wealth, the uses to which it has been put, and the potential conflict of interest it may create. While these are vital questions to ask in determining whether Mr. Rockefeller should become Vice President, they are unfortunately not matters which can be finally resolved. In the end we are forced to judge the possible future role of Mr. Rockefeller's fortune in terms of his previous public service and his statements to the committee that the national interest will always come first. Certainly his long career has demonstrated a continuing commitment and concern for the public weal, and nothing in his record indicates that he has used his public position to enhance his or his family's economic power. As to his future actions, the ancient Greeks expressed the belief that "the oath does not make the man, but the man the oath." From all that I have seen and heard from and about Mr. Rockefeller during the past long weeks, I am firmly convinced that he is a man of honesty and integrity who will do his utmost to live up to the assurances he gave the committee and the Nation.

In the past critical year, this Congress has already once exercised its responsibility for confirming a Vice President under the 25th amendment. At that time it wisely recognized the two-part requirement inherent in that amendment. The first part of that responsibility is to fully and publicly scrutinize the Vice-President-designate in a manner which will provide an adequate substitute for the public knowledge gained as part of a normal election. The second part of the constitutional charge is to make the final decision on confirmation not on a narrow basis of one or two policies the candidate may have taken in the past but on the broad grounds of whether the chosen nominee of the President has the competence and the integrity needed to fulfill his new duties.

Mr. Chairman, during the past months, the Senate Rules Committee and the House Judiciary Committee have fulfilled the first part of the constitutional responsibility for confirmation. Although regrettably the process has not been as expeditious as we would have hoped due to the diverse and complex aspects of Mr. Rockefeller's background and career, nonetheless we have brought to public attention a wealth of information regarding Mr. Rockefeller's public and private life. I might add that this was accomplished with the full cooperation of Mr. Rockefeller despite his and his family's understandable preference for personal privacy.

The final aspect of our constitutional duties is now upon this body. Although I appreciate the concerns and objections to confirmation being raised by Members today on various grounds, I hope my colleagues will recall the broad basis on which this decision should be made. It is my firm conviction that Nelson A. Rockefeller has the experience, intelligence and integrity necessary to serve his President and his Nation faithfully and well and I strongly urge his confirmation on that basis.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. WALDIE).

Mr. WALDIE. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SANDMAN) mentioned, I, too, am engaging in perhaps my last appearance in the U.S. Congress. It is with mixed feelings, but with very positive feelings about my service on the Committee on the Judiciary and about my colleagues on both sides of the aisle and, most particularly, of my able and fair chairman, Mr. RODINO. The responsibilities that have been assigned to our committee have been quite enormous and have been acted upon with great credit to the House of Representatives; but it is from service on that committee that some of my dilemma today confronts me. As I have been sitting listening to the debate I have become more and more uncertain what motivates my objection to the nominee. Perhaps it has been my service on the Committee on the Judiciary during the impeachment of Richard Nixon that has caused me to become distorted in my approach to judging this nominee. Perhaps I now insist on unreasonable standards of political ethics.

I thought we had set a standard in the impeachment of Richard Nixon that was a new standard in this country for political morality and political conduct. Perhaps I erred. Perhaps I misunderstood the extent of the demands of that new standard and that we now will revert to a tolerance and approval of political expediency. If it is true, and I believe it to be true, as the gentleman from New York (Mr. PIKE) suggested, that the nominee engaged in criminal conduct in the matter of his loans converted to gifts and if it is true in the matter of the Goldberg book that the nominee engaged in criminal conduct, then applying the new standards certainly he should not be confirmed. In the Perry Duryea case, there is a great parallel to the Goldberg book in determining what is criminal conduct. Duryea was a minority leader in the Republican Assembly of the State of New York during the time of Governor Rockefeller's incumbency. Perry Duryea was indicted for the crime of failing to identify campaign literature circulated by his campaign people.

Nelson Rockefeller's financing and distribution of the Goldberg book was clearly, under all the evidence, including his own admissions, the distribution of campaign material, not labeled, not identified, and, therefore, clearly a criminal act under the existing law of the State of New York at the time.

Now, if these allegations are correct, and I believe them to be as the result of our investigation by the committee thus far, and I call every Member's attention to the cross-examination of the nominee on these points in the record, then the standard we set in the Nixon impeachment is not being adhered to in the Rockefeller confirmation.

The Nixon impeachment came about because essentially article 1 of the impeachment resolution alleged criminal conduct on Mr. Nixon's part of obstruction of justice. This was an allegation brought about solely by reason of our committee inquiry. There was no indictment of Richard Nixon, nor any criminal accountability even sought against Richard Nixon. There was just a determination of this committee on the facts given them and, unlike the instant case, without Richard Nixon's personal testimony. We then said that obstruction of justice is criminal conduct and therefore constitutes an impeachable offense. I said, "Governor, why did you not forgive the loans to public officials during the terms of your office?"

His response to that was, "Because to have done so would have violated the law of New York."

Of course, that is why they were not forgiven. Every transaction Governor Rockefeller engaged in with these individuals was highly suspect as having violated the criminal statutes of the State of New York.

How can we now say that there is now a new standard of political morality as to which we will measure nominees when we judge whether they should be approved? Conduct in two instances of this nominee, his gifts to public officials and the Goldberg book, constitute potential criminal conduct as great, in terms of its demonstrability, as any alleged and proven act of Richard Nixon. How can we ignore that conduct?

If we have not set a new standard of conduct, if the impeachment of Richard Nixon by this great committee is no longer to be considered as having set new standards of accountability, morality, and ethics for future politicians, then we have done Richard Nixon a great injustice, as well as the people of this Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO).

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BIAGGI).

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the Chairman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I have great misgivings over the fact that the vote on a nomination for Vice President under the 25th amendment is taken by the yeas and nays. It should be by secret ballot. I had originally intended to bring my arguments before the Rules Committee, but felt it might be misconstrued. At this time I would rather have the question dealt with after today when the legislative objectivity will be unimpaired by the consideration of any particular nominee. Nevertheless, I want to place in the Journal of the House and before you, today, my case for a secret ballot.

House Rule XXXVIII provides that secret ballots may be taken. Past precedent shows that this was used during early history for the selection of House officers and the election of President Thomas Jefferson.

While some will argue that no vote in the House should be secret, this is a special exception. The Constitution provides for two methods of voting in the House. One is by the yeas and nays, the other is by ballot. Under the former procedure, an individual is voting as a Representative of his constituency and should be held accountable to them for his vote. Under the latter procedure, however, the individual is acting as a Member of the House to whom the Constitution entrusts the obligation to choose a President when no candidate has a majority.

It is the latter procedure that should be applied to consideration of nominations under the 25th amendment. To continue to use the yeas and nays in such confirmations is a mistake that should be corrected at some point before the precedent becomes too firmly entrenched in our history.

Elections for President and Vice President are conducted by the people voting by secret ballot for electors who then vote by secret ballot. The only exceptions to this long history of secret balloting are the confirmation of President Ford and Nelson Rockefeller. On one other occasion when the House voted to select President Jefferson over Aaron Burr, the voting was done by secret ballot.

Secret balloting has long been established in democratic states as a means of insuring that a vote will be conducted uninfluenced by outside pressures. A person can vote his conscience without any fear of retribution and without being held accountable in any other place for the manner in which he voted. Throughout the history of democracy, secret ballot has been the hallmark of fairness. In recent times, the right to a secret ballot was fought for by the valiant civil rights leaders of the sixties who knew that only by privacy in the ballot box could true democracy be assured.

Arguments have been made that a nominee could be in a position to influence the outcome of the election through the exercise of his personal power before the election, or through the threat of the use of his power once confirmed as Vice President.

Even dismissing these arguments, one could look at it from the vantage point of a nominee. Some might argue that the final outcome was influenced by fear of retribution. By conducting the secret ballot, we accord all fairness to a nominee that his election was gained in the most democratic manner without any hint of possible influence, without any fear on the part of those voting that they might later be held accountable to the nominee in some fashion for their actions. I am sure that a nominee would want to remove any vestige of impropriety or any hint of influence through the use of a secret ballot.

The Office of Vice President is a powerful one despite its lack of constitutional or statutory directives. It is the second highest public office in the United States. Its holder has the ear of the President and the respect of the key officials of Government. His presence or viewpoint adds great weight to any argument.

Add to this, a Vice President who in his own right may hold a position of immense power and prestige in economic and political circles, and a situation is created where—rightly or wrongly—those voting might fear retribution at a later date. It is incumbent, therefore, that such fear, or even the possibility of such fear be eliminated, and that can only be done by secret ballot.

Should it become necessary to confirm a nominee for Vice President under the 25th amendment again, I announce now my intentions to urge a secret ballot on that confirmation. Irrespective of the identity of the nominee, I hope that if I am not here to do so, others will read these proceedings and see the merits of my case.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Seventy-three Members are present, not a quorum.

The Chair announces that he will vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the Committee appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred Members have appeared. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON).

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RAILSBACK).

Mr. RAILSBACK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add my strong personal support to the resolution providing that the House of Representatives confirm the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States.

Nelson Rockefeller's political philosophy, his background, his public and private life have all withstood an unprecedented unveiling. The Senate Committee on Rules and Administration scrutinized the nominee, and then unanimously voted to favorably recommend him to the full Senate, which overwhelmingly approved his confirmation, 90 to 7, earlier this month.

We on the House Judiciary Committee have also independently researched every imaginable aspect of the life of Nelson Rockefeller. The Internal Revenue Service and the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation conducted thorough audits of the nominee's financial transactions.

In addition, an extensive investigation was undertaken by the FBI. More than 350 FBI agents, involving 38 field offices, conducted over 1,400 interviews. Ninety-nine percent of those persons interviewed indicated strong approval of Mr. Rockefeller.

There is no issue even remotely connected with Nelson Rockefeller which has not been thoroughly examined. The committee looked closely at the loans and gifts, the Lasky book, the potential conflicts of interest due to the vast wealth of the nominee, his taxes, and his financial transactions, and we found absolutely no evidence of any sinister or improper motives relating to the activities of Mr. Rockefeller.

It has been a trying experience for him, his wife, and other members of his family, and I want to commend them for their understanding and patience. However, I believe it was necessary for all the information to be made public, and, upon reflection, I feel it has enhanced Nelson Rockefeller's position, and proven that the 25th amendment does, in fact, work.

Mr. Chairman, there were two themes that clearly surfaced during our hearings and investigations. One, that Nelson Rockefeller is a man of the highest integrity; he is candid, honest, dedicated, and sincere. Two, he is a man of tremendous knowledge and experience, both in the field of foreign policy and in the area of domestic affairs. Both are of critical importance at this time in our history.

Mr. Rockefeller has served five Presidents of both parties in various capacities. He has held important positions in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and in the Department of State, so he knows how the Federal Government works both nationally and internationally.

The voters of the State of New York elected him Governor on four different occasions, and, in his last reelection, he received his largest vote of confidence ever. For 16 years, Nelson Rockefeller dealt with and handled the almost insurmountable problems which plagued this country's largest city, in what was then this country's largest State.

His familiarity and sensitivity to State and local problems, his humanitarian concerns, his support and leadership in the areas of education and civil rights uniquely qualify him to serve as Vice President. Our country desperately needs the experience and dedication which Nelson Rockefeller will bring to the Vice Presidency, and I would hope we would put our partisanship aside and stand behind him.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to take this opportunity to commend our distinguished chairman from New Jersey (Mr. ROBINO) and our distinguished colleague from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON) for their leadership and guidance in this historic proceeding. Also, a great deal of thanks is owed the Judiciary Committee staff for their fine work in conducting such a thorough investigation on the nominee.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MOSHER).

Mr. MOSHER. Mr. Chairman, we are about to confirm Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President, undoubtedly an historic decision in several respects. Personally I believe it is a wise and right decision.

So, now it becomes a crucially important question, how will the new Vice President's extraordinary experience and abundant competence, his tremendous enthusiasm and energy, his genius for attracting persons of exceptional talent into public service, how will these great assets be most effectively used for the public good?

Throughout our Nation's history it always has been a difficult question exactly how any Vice President can best serve. The men elected to that high office have varied tremendously in their qualifications. But, in my opinion, few if any have ever been more qualified than Governor Rockefeller. Never has there been a more likely candidate to render superb, innovative leadership as Vice President of the United States.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am presuming to suggest a couple of specific ways in which I hope Vice President Rockefeller's exceptional talents might best be used. I already have presumed to make these suggestions in a personal letter to President Ford. Obviously, Mr. Ford himself will determine the roles to which his new Vice President will be assigned.

I am confident the President will welcome specific suggestions concerning those Vice-Presidential roles as we know he does welcome other suggestions from his former congressional colleagues. Our new President's willingness to consider congressional advice is a blessed asset that we should use wisely and with respect, but nonetheless use vigorously.

Therefore, I hope other Members of this House will agree with my two proposals and may join actively in communicating these to the White House.

Mr. Chairman I submit that our Nation is scandalously lacking in any coherent, comprehensive, vigorous maritime policy. I see a crucial need to better identify our long-time needs and goals in the uses of the oceans, and to agree on a program for attaining those goals. This new world in which we are groping, this world of diminishing limited resources, forces us to give new attention to the incalculable opportunities that are available in the oceans, opportunities for tremendous inputs toward the solution of our energy, minerals, chemical, and protein needs, to name only a few of the more obvious probabilities.

There is hardly any facet of our national needs and problems that is not somehow directly related to these maritime opportunities.

But there is hardly a facet of the oceans' resources which does not need immediate, aggressive research effort to bring it to true fruition.

There is also the complex problem of our lagging merchant marine activity.

There is an imperative need for us not to attack these various oceans opportunities and problems on a piecemeal basis. There is the imperative need to recognize that we cannot "go it alone" in any national oceans policy; it will be essential for us to coordinate in international management of the ocean resources. There is need for a global food policy, with the protein from the oceans as an important element, for example.

There certainly is the need for an international regime of the seas, and we must vigorously press for success in the Law of the Sea Conference.

The point I am making is that all of these ocean activities need to be pulled together under very energetic leadership at the White House level, rather than scattered in such a weak fashion through more than 20 different Federal offices. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is doing an excellent job, I think. It was a great step in the right direction, but it is not enough.

Therefore, I suggest that one superb use for Mr. Rockefeller's talents would be to assign him the coordinating and leadership role in achieving and administering a new, vital, dynamic maritime policy. I suspect that such an assignment would be very congenial to his interests and talents. I believe he would do a great job in that role.

Many of us remember that an earlier Vice President, HUBERT HUMPHREY, was at one time an ex officio Chairman of the National Council on Marine Resources and Engineering Development. He provided really excellent leadership in that role. But that Council was later abolished. I very definitely believe that something of the same sort at the White House level deserves to be reactivated, and I am presuming to urge that as a proposal for President Ford's consideration.

Then, Mr. Chairman, closely associated with that concept, I also suggest the urgent need for some form of mechanism in the White House by which one or perhaps two or three professionally eminent, knowledgeable, and wise scientists and engineers shall have very ready and immediate access to the President, and also to participate responsibly in the budget-making process, in the coordinating of national policies for science and technology in the broadest sense.

Personally, I think that Dr. Guy Stever, who is presently science adviser to the President and also Director of the National Science Foundation, is doing an excellent job, but I feel strongly that the present organizational structure handicaps his efforts. He should have the opportunity to be much more effective, in the national interest.

So, if it is assumed that one of Vice

December 19, 1974

President Rockefeller's chief assignments will be to direct the efforts of the Domestic Council in the White House, I would hope that he would be assigned rather specifically the mission of working with the relevant committees here in the Congress, quickly to provide a more effective mechanism to coordinate and manage the Government's tremendously important and complex research and development efforts.

Who better can provide aggressive and savvy leadership in those areas—who better than Nelson Rockefeller?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. HORTON).

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States.

Over the 12 years that I have served in the Congress, there have been many times when I have agreed with Presidential appointments or nominations, and many when I have disagreed. There has almost never been a time when I felt the nominee in question was perhaps the most qualified man in the Nation to fill the post. I have that good feeling with regard to the Rockefeller nomination.

In this case, of course, the nomination is hardly run-of-the-mill. With his nomination of a Vice President, President Ford was setting in motion a set of circumstances which we in America have never before experienced—a situation where neither the President nor the Vice President have stood for election by the American people. No matter how one looks at this situation, it is uncomfortable and unfortunate. It is particularly difficult for this to occur at a time when our Nation is still emerging from the cloud of Watergate, and is now in the thick of the worst economic crisis in 30 years.

The fact that this is not an ideal or even desirable situation does not make our job under the 25th amendment any easier. We must be at once aware that we are voting on a potential President of the United States, and that we are doing so as the representatives of and surrogates for the people we represent. The Constitution calls upon us to exercise our judgment on the nominee of the President for this high office. There have been few times in history when our votes here on this floor have had a greater potential impact on our country than today's vote.

Fortunately, the precedent for exercise of the confirmation power under the 25th amendment was properly set only one year ago when the nomination of Gerald R. Ford for Vice President was considered. We were well aware then that we could be confirming a man who could become President, and we went about the confirmation task in a deliberate and careful way. Had this not been the case, President Ford would today be under an even greater disadvantage than he already faces as a result of his being the first nonelected President in our history.

The appropriate committees of the House and Senate have exercised even more care in the examination of the character, the record, and the philosophy of Nelson A. Rockefeller.

Their hearings and investigations have generated much controversy and discussion, but they have been worthwhile in that they have served in place of an election campaign as a more pointed, but less perfect way, of familiarizing the people with the details of the nominee's background, and, familiarizing the nominee—often during grilling sessions—with some of the concerns of the people and their representatives.

I said at the outset that I support the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller without reservation. That statement will sound strange, and even unwise to many who have followed the hearings, and who may themselves oppose the nomination.

Many feel that Rockefeller's wealth alone disqualifies him from the office. Others find episodes which occurred during his massive record of public service to be distasteful, or to show lack of judgment or wisdom. I do not doubt that in 16 years as Governor and in even more years as a citizen and public servant that Nelson Rockefeller has made some mistakes—even some very serious ones. I do not doubt that there are probably innumerable actions he took or decisions he made that I would have wanted handled a little differently, or perhaps altogether differently. I could say the same for many other public figures. No man or woman is perfect.

One of the problems which I think we have developed as a nation, partly as a result of Watergate, is that we have become hero worshippers who revel in the destruction of our own heroes. We must remember that we are human beings and that we elect human beings to office. When we find incurable or intolerable flaws in a man's character, we can and should find him unfit for office, just as we may find his views unfit, or not to our taste. But when we spend so much time examining blemishes that we forget to examine the man, we have lost the perspective of an enlightened electorate.

America has examined the blemishes on the Rockefeller background more closely than we have ever examined any man in history. I know of no person who could stand as harsh an inquisition and survive it as brilliantly.

Certainly, the wealth of a man is a problem if you assume he will use it for greedy purposes or for illegal ones. This has not only not been shown in Nelson Rockefeller's case, the reverse has been shown. His record of generosity and compassion, and his use of wealth in pursuit of worthwhile causes is to me a strength, not a weakness in his character.

If wealth has any relevance to this inquiry, it is in the sense that wealth since birth has probably given to Nelson Rockefeller the optimistic outlook that the resources are available to solve even the most difficult and costly of the world's problems. Many of my constituents in New York State feel that Rockefeller, as Governor, carried out such optimism with their money—and they have a point. He probably learned the hard way, as evidenced by his greater fiscal conservatism in his final years as Governor, that he must respect the limitation on the availability of resources he had to work with.

But at the same time, his concern and his optimism have given Nelson Rockefeller his greatest strength—his vision and depth of understanding of deeply complex human, international, and economic problems. It is this quality which to me most qualifies Nelson Rockefeller for the high office of Vice President.

Although there are increasing cries in this country for simple answers and quick answers to the things that trouble and plague us, these cries cannot be answered simply or quickly. There have been few times in our Nation's history when we have had a greater need for leadership which understands and can deal with the complexities which make up our society, our economy, and our world.

In fact, the Rockefeller confirmation hearings in the Senate contained some of the most constructive and creative discussions on economic, population, energy and other problems that I have heard in recent times. The fact that the Senate, after 3 months of grilling and questioning the nominee, was able to confirm him by a vote of 90 to 7 is a substantial tribute to the respect he has garnered among both liberals and conservatives and among Republicans and Democrats.

It is the vision, the perspective, the depth of knowledge, the ability to recognize and utilize expert talent, and the demonstrated effectiveness in communicating with and dealing with people of diverse backgrounds and points of view which are most persuasive to me about this nominee. My vote for his confirmation is not an endorsement of everything he has ever done or said—any more than a voter endorses everything a candidate stands for by pulling his or her voting lever in the voting booth.

It is our responsibility to do the best we can under the 25th amendment procedure to examine and pass judgment on a nominee. My judgment is that this nominee is worthy of my vote for confirmation.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. Chairman, as we turn to the final business of this Congress, we could not possibly consider a more important subject than the determination of our national leadership. During the time I have served in Congress, the Vice Presidency has become, not just an historical symbol, but an important adjunct of the Presidency. It is of utmost importance that the office be filled, forthwith, in accordance with constitutional procedures.

The Vice President-designate, Mr. Nelson Rockefeller, has been subjected to searching official and unofficial scrutiny over a period of months. His detractors have been heard and he has passed all the tests.

We should not forget, Mr. Speaker, that this man was chosen four times by the citizens of the State of New York for their highest office. Few persons in public life can cite equal evidence of popular confidence and trust.

There has been criticism of Mr. Rockefeller because of his great inherited wealth. The essential question, Mr. Speaker, is not whether a person has wealth in great or small amounts, but how that wealth is used. When we consider that Mr. Rockefeller might have lived his entire life without ever becoming involved in any constructive endeavor, that he might have spent his time entirely in pursuit of personal pleasure, both he and the country are to be congratulated that he chose instead to devote his years, his energies, and his great abilities in public service.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate to have a man of his caliber, able and willing to fill the office of Vice President. I am pleased to express my confidence in him, and my support for him.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. MAYNE).

Mr. MAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON) for yielding to me at this time. I want to compliment the gentleman from Michigan as well as the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO), for the manner in which they have handled this nomination, the responsibility for which was assigned to our committee by the House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, certainly it is no exaggeration to say that the nominee, Governor Rockefeller, has undergone the most intensive investigation and questioning of any person ever appointed to public office.

As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I know that our own staff spent weeks investigating every conceivable aspect of his background before we ever got to the hearings stage. We had not only their work product available to us, but also the work product of the very thorough investigation of the staff of the Senate Committee on Rules, as well as the transcript of 8 days of testimony before the Senate committee, when 38 members of the House Committee on the Judiciary commenced questioning the nominee.

It was obvious even before the hearings started on November 21, that a very determined and thorough effort had been made to uncover any flaw serious enough to disqualify this nominee from being confirmed as Vice President of the United States.

Our own hearings lasted for 9 days. A great many witnesses were called, some of whom had been working for many weeks in preparation for their testimony. Three days of our hearings were taken up by the most thorough and intensive cross examination of the nominee himself. I do not believe that any objective observer could fail to be most favorably impressed by the manner in which the nominee conducted himself during those 3 days when he appeared before our committee. I am sure that he persuaded many by his coolness under fire during some very searching and at times heated cross examination.

He persuaded a number of members of the committee through his well reasoned responses and the very capable way in which he conducted himself that he is, indeed, a highly dedicated public servant, fully qualified for the Vice Presidency. Upon the entire record it seems to me that while he has made mistakes and is far from perfect, nothing has been turned up which is serious enough to disqualify him.

The most questionable activity on his part which has caused me the greatest difficulty was his gifts made to Dr. William Ronan totaling $625,000. But when we view the entire record it becomes evident this Ronan matter was a very remarkable departure from the good judgment and sensitivity to ethics which has otherwise characterized the nominee throughout his career, and it should be pointed out that he has recognized this by agreeing not to make any such gifts or loans in the future.

Mr. DENNIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYNE. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Indiana, a member of the committee.

Mr. DENNIS. I thank my colleagues for yielding.

I agree with what the gentleman has said. The record will show that that is the thing which concerned me, too, which I questioned him about; but at the same time it ought to be pointed out that there are some very sweeping and unsupportable statements that have been made here.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. PIKE) has said, flat out, the Governor was guilty of a criminal offense in this connection. Then the gentleman from California (Mr. WALDR) said if he is guilty of such an offense, then certain things should happen. Maybe they should if he is guilty, but that is a very highly debatable proposition, to say the least, under these statutes and under the facts of the case.

The statutes apply to giving a benefit to a public servant for having engaged in official conduct which he was required to perform. In other words, there is a serious question of the intent with which any benefit was conferred, and there is a serious question in Ronan's case whether he was a public servant or officer of the State of New York at the time that most of the gift was made. It is also true, if I recall correctly, that many of these transactions took place before one of the main statutes in question had been enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MAYNE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the nominee's qualifications, another very practical consideration which impels me to vote for confirmation is the fact that this nomination has now been pending 1 day short of 4 months. In other words, this country has already been too long without a Vice President.

If Governor Rockefeller were to be rejected by this body today, the nominating process would have to start all over again, and this matter might well take another 4 months. I think any such further prolonged delay would subvert the spirit and purpose of the 25th amendment and clearly would not be in the country's best interest.

I will for this and for the reason of the obvious qualification of the nominee vote yes on the motion to confirm.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield so much time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. MOSS).

Mr. MOSS. Mr. Chairman, the House is confronted with a task greater than many observers may realize; approving or disapproving the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States. Many news stories have dealt with the House role under the 25th amendment as if we were merely required to rubber-stamp Mr. Ford's selection. Some Members of this body seem to share that view. I do not. Our role is far more an elective one than it is merely confirmative. In light of the somber events of the past several years, we would be grievously amiss in fulfilling our oversight responsibilities as the people's representatives if we did not view our role in that more significant light.

A distinguished Member of the other body, prime sponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 1, 89th Congress, which eventually became the 25th amendment, in speaking of Congress' role in filling a Vice Presidential vacancy, stated:

... The Congress should act on the President's recommendation by electing or rejecting the nominee.

... Certainly the Congress is the proper body—with its hand on the pulse of public opinion—to elect a Vice President upon the nomination of a President.

My interpretation of the intent of Congress when framing the 25th amendment is that we are required to exercise vigorous independent judgment. In effect, we must stand in the stead of the people, our electorate, when selecting a Vice President. Use of the term "upon confirmation" in the 25th amendment is in conformance with other language in the Constitution and therefore appropriate. In this instance we are filling an office normally filled through the electoral process. We must act in accordance with the manner in which the electorate selects a national ticket. It is easy to distinguish between confirming appointment of a Cabinet officer, for example, who serves at the President's pleasure. The Vice President, on the other hand, will be a constitutional officer removable only by resignation, death, or impeachment. After the cases of Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew, I believe we must view Nelson Rockefeller as minutely and calculatingly as possible.

And his record, under such scrutiny, fails a number of critical tests. Taxes and State debts are of interest for a start. As Governor of New York, he presided over the backdoor financing of the billion-dollar Albany mall project, implemented not by direct vote of all the people, but through financing by Albany County, which then leased the properties in question to the State. New Yorkers paid the bill, and are still paying it, without having a full say in that decision, or a role in determining its ultimate cost.

From January 1, 1959 through June 30, 1973, the New York State Legislature, acting under his leadership and urging, enacted one new tax and took 17 actions increasing rates of existing major taxes. A sales tax was enacted in 1965, reaching 4 cents in 1971. In 1959, withholding of personal income taxes at the source was adopted along with changes in rates and base amounting to an increase of 35 percent. Further increases in individual income tax rates were made in 1968 and 1971.

Total taxes collected during fiscal year 1960 were almost $2 billion. In fiscal year 1973, they amounted to $8.2 billion, an increase of $6.2 billion. Forty percent of the higher yield came from individual income taxes; 28 percent from general sales taxes. General obligation debt during this period increased by 265 percent. Guaranteed debt in the State rose by 35 percent, while nonguaranteed debt grew by 388 percent. In States elsewhere it grew by 166 percent.

In terms of relative change, the total debt outstanding at the end of fiscal year 1973—March 31—was 4.1 times larger than the amount outstanding on March 31, 1960. Short-term debt was 19.9 times larger, guaranteed debt one-third larger, and nonguaranteed debt almost five times greater at the end of fiscal year 1973 than in 1960, when Rockefeller took office. What emerges is a pattern of confiscatory taxation of the middle class.

Much has been made of gifts and loans made by Mr. Rockefeller. Not enough has been made of the fact that these large sums of money handed over to high-ranking State employees are a serious violation of law. Section 200.30 of the New York State Penal Code specifically prohibits any individual from bestowing gratuities on public officials for their having engaged in official conduct. Only general intent need be proven. Nor does the donor have to have had intent to influence the official's actions. Nor is the donor relieved of criminal responsibility because the donations were not intended to break the law.

Even more important than questions of whether or not "gifts or loans" were lawful, is the "why" for such gifts. They seem directed toward persons, especially toward Dr. Ronan, who, by virtue of their office, were in a unique position where they could make decisions directly or indirectly affecting the Rockefeller family holdings. Was it an act of compassion by a very wealthy man for a dear friend working for the State? If such an employee or employees were so underpaid, why did not the Governor recommend raises for all State workers? Mr. Rockefeller may claim an understanding of such use of money, but it leaves a sour taste in my mouth. As I understand it, the Rockefellers rarely expend money without seeking a practical benefit of some kind. Nelson Rockefeller is such a man and I cannot accept his basis for being so generous with a few uniquely situated people who could be of such value to his family. I will not dwell at any significant length on the book commissioned on Arthur Goldberg. The revelations of recent weeks speak for themselves respecting both tactics and thinking behind that provocative volume. Suffice it to say that Nelson Rockefeller disclaimed in his first testimony before the Senate Rules Committee that he had any advance knowledge that the book was to be financed by funds provided by his brother Laurance. Later, before the same committee, he acknowledged having had just such advance knowledge about the book project.

Yet what disturbs me most about his nomination and the willingness of so many to accept it is Mr. Rockefeller's inextricable intertwinement with big oil and other vast corporate interests who view the public as fair game to be bilked, deluded and led. He and his family control 315,000 shares, or what many informed people would consider to be a crucial interest, in Exxon, largest energy trust in the world. They possess massive holdings in Standard Oil of California, Mobil, and other energy-related corporations. These three companies, for example, have for years controlled the overwhelming majority of shares in Aramco, the Saudi Arabian oil concession which has taken such cumulative advantage of Americans as both taxpayers and consumers. A combination of Rockefeller interests in oil and the Chase Manhattan Bank presents us with financial power unrivaled in recorded history. Their shareholdings, made even more potent by the cohesiveness of the manner the family acts financially, allows them unique leverage within the Nation's corporate and banking structure. To deny this is to indulge in self-defeating intellectual callisthenics.

Great political power is supposed to be interposed in order to prevent abuse of equally great economic power. Yet in this instance, after the atrocities of the Nixon-Agnew era, and in the face of Nelson Rockefeller's obvious shortcomings and failures, Congress is supposed to solemnize the marriage between these two forces and place the beneficiary one step away from the Presidency's absolute power. I will not lend my name or vote to such a confirmation or election.

Mr. Rockefeller is a decent man. No one will argue with that. Yet more than that is involved. We must evaluate the nominee in terms of the central issues of our time. And no issue is more vital to all of us than that of concentration of power in huge institutions. What are the implications of rapidly increasing concentrations of economic power in large institutions and fewer hands?

The Rockefeller fortune is more than just a vast lump of money. It is an integral, partially controlling part of a mammoth, monopolistic economic infrastructure which fixes prices, crushes competition, saps the vitality of free enterprise and wields huge political and economic power without accounting for it to anyone, least of all the public. Their end is profit, not any common weal. Among corporate equals such behavior is acceptable. Among real people, it is a moral abomination.

The Rockefeller wealth is part of what we are supposed to be opposing; part of what we fought when we unraveled the Nixon abuses of campaign financing. In response, the malefactors of great wealth sought to excuse their behavior by saying they were playing by the rules of the game. It was a bad game. And the rules were worse. Let us bear in mind that every successful campaign waged by the former Governor of New York was lavishly financed by money secured from his family, nor was any effort put forth by him while Governor to curb campaign abuses.

These are the same corporate behemoths who squeeze the average American mercilessly, extracting vast sums in interest, mortgages, unfair prices and shoddy goods. Their growing success is attested to by the evils abounding in our market places, the unwillingness of government to regulate them and the burgeoning misery of millions of our people.

Monopoly, as represented by the Rockefeller interests, is the enemy of all types of human freedom. If Nelson Rockefeller could turn his back on it, betraying his class, which he is not expected to do, he would be fit for the post in which we are asked to confirm him. And because he cannot and will not do this, I must oppose his nomination. Theodore Roosevelt said in 1906—August 9—in a letter to Frederick Scott Oliver:

Monied classes, especially those of large fortune, whose ideal tends to the mere money, are not fitted for any predominant guidance in a really great nation. I do not dislike but I certainly have no especial respect or admiration for and no trust, in the typical big monied man of my country. I do not regard them as furnishing sound opinion as regards either foreign or domestic policies.

It is essential that we should wrest the control of the Government out of the hands of rich men who use it for unhealthy purposes, and should keep it out of their hands.

Mr. Rockefeller speaks of setting up a blind trust for his wealth. Are we so naive as to believe that the Rockefeller holdings could be placed in such a trust where a family member would be unaware of the effect of his decisions on such investments? I quote T. R. merely to show the continuity of concern over massive wealth and great power. In this case, the revelations disqualify Nelson A. Rockefeller from becoming Vice President of the United States. I therefore shall vote against the President's nomination of him, and shall, in the next Congress, offer legislation to modify the 25th amendment.

It is not enough for us to bow in the direction of the symbols of America. It is not enough for us to facilely mouth the catchphrases of liberty. Rather, it is for us to address ourselves to these interests which by their very growth and power, continue to sap our liberties, erode our institutions and limit our freedoms. To make a person who is the very epitome of such abuses of power Vice President of the United States is, in my belief, to betray the people we represent, turn our backs upon our beliefs and guarantee further erosion of all we constantly claim we hold most dear.

It is our clear duty to see, in the interests of the people, that there is adequate supervision and control over the business use of the swollen fortunes of today, and also wisely to determine the conditions upon which these fortunes are to be transmitted and the percentage that they shall pay to the Government whose protecting arm alone enables them to exist.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield so much time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE).

Mr. CRANE. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of the 25th amendment the Congress has the responsibility of approving or disapproving any individual nominated for the position of Vice President of the United States.

This position is one of awesome responsibility, and any man approved for the office of Vice President must be considered, in every respect, to be fully qualified for the office of the President. Beyond this, such a man must be one who individual Members of Congress casting their votes on the question believe would make a President they could support with regard to the major questions facing the Nation.

Thus, while there is significant concern over the role of the present nominee with regard to the distribution of funds, the financing of a campaign book critical of his opponent, and a variety of similar concerns, a vote against Mr. Rockefeller need not rest on the belief that he has acted in either an illegal or immoral manner in the past.

In this regard, I wish to state that I have the highest respect for Governor Rockefeller as a man who cares deeply for his country and who has acted in a manner which he believes to be consistent with the public interest. I do not believe that the hearings in the Senate and in the House, although they have raised serious questions, have shown beyond a doubt that Mr. Rockefeller's actions should disqualify him for this position.

Nevertheless, it is my intention to vote against confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller for the position of Vice President. My decision has come as a result of a careful study of his record as a public official, not a negative assessment of his character as a man. I do not believe that, according to my responsibility under the 25th amendment, I must find anything more than inadequacy for the position of Vice President based upon the past public record in order to cast a negative vote. The primary question I have asked myself is whether the Nation will be well served, or poorly served, by having in national office a man who has advocated a series of policies, and implemented in the State of New York a series of programs, which I would like to share with my colleagues.

As Governor of New York for 15 years, Mr. Rockefeller proved himself an advocate of big—and expanding—government. He was, in addition, a generous spender of public funds. The State budget last year was $8.75 billion in New York and the debt was four times what it was when Mr. Rockefeller took office. Taxes also quadrupled during his regime.

Governor Rockefeller and the usually Republican State legislature raised taxes eight times in 15 years.

By the end of his term of office, there were 183,383 employees on the State payroll, a huge jump over the 101,729 who were there when he started. Welfare rolls also soared from a monthly average of 513,581 clients in 1958 to 1.8 million—1 out of every 10 persons in New York State—in the current fiscal year.

New York observers agree that one great failure of the Rockefeller administration was his inability to cope with the State's narcotics problem, despite spending more than $1 billion. He started out with an elaborate hospitalization program and ended up cracking down hard on addicts and prescribing stiff jail sentences. The problem has persisted despite his efforts.

As Governor of New York, Nelson Rockefeller increased the cost of State government approximately 400 percent—from $1.9 to $9 billion a year. In addition to raising State taxes eight times, he doubled the rate of State income and gasoline taxes and imposed a 4-percent sales tax.

Under his leadership, New York State taxpayers became the most overburdened in the country. One result is that New York's share of manufacturing declined significantly, from 11.2 to 9.2 percent. New York State, under Governor Rockefeller's leadership, lost 400,000 jobs, and many national companies moved to other parts of the country.

When Richard Nixon defeated GEORGE McGOVERN in the 1972 election, the American people made it clear that they desired an administration which would move toward a balanced budget, which would cut back on deficit spending, and which would restore fiscal integrity to the workings of government.

President Ford, as a man who was not elected to his present position, has a special obligation to fulfill the mandate of the voters. Governor Rockefeller's record in the State of New York indicates that he is hardly the man to assist in restoring fiscal responsibility to the Nation. His entire record tells a far different story, one of deficit spending, huge budget increases, rapidly increasing taxes, and decreasing productivity. The American people voted against such a philosophy in 1972 when they rejected the candidacy of GEORGE McGOVERN. The 25th amendment was not designed to bring in through the back door what the voters rejected at the front door.

It is my belief that Governor Rockefeller sincerely and honestly disagrees with the positions taken by the overwhelming majority of voters in 1972—decisions in opposition to forced busing, opposition to such schemes calling for the redistribution of wealth as a guaranteed annual income plan. He has every right to disagree with those positions. The American people, however, deserve as Vice President a man who shares the positions which voters supported in the most recent Presidential election.

The unfortunate fact is that the first policy which Mr. Rockefeller supported after his nomination to the position of Vice President was a scheme to have the Federal Government freeze mass transit fares at a low level. This indicates that his traditional views have not, in any sense, changed. He remains an advocate of Government intervention in and control of the economy—again, precisely what voters opposed in 1972.

An indication of the unchanging nature of Governor Rockefeller's opinions on national questions may be seen in the composition of his critical choices panel. His panel consists almost solely of men and women who advocate deficit spending, Government control of the economy, and further redistribution of wealth. These include such individuals as Pat Moynihan, Wilson Riles, and Bess Myerson. They are honorable men and women. They are advocates, however, of a philosophy the voters rejected in 1972. As Human Events, in an important editorial in its December 14, 1974, issue, stated:

Rockefeller's Critical Choices panel—which he selected this year—could have been a Cabinet-in-waiting for Teddy Kennedy.

Mr. Rockefeller is far from a popular choice for this position. Just after President Ford sent Governor Rockefeller's name to the Congress for confirmation, polls showed support to be 55 percent in favor of confirmation; 31 percent against. As more and more Americans have come to understand Governor Rockefeller's political philosophy and political record, this has changed dramatically.

In a Harris poll conducted September 23-27, during the first Senate hearings on the nomination, Governor Rockefeller's popularity was already waning. Forty-seven percent approved his appointment, and 40 percent disapproved.

A Gallup poll conducted during the last week in October showed his approval rating at 44 percent and his disapproval rating at 38 percent. The most recent poll, conducted by Louis Harris during the period November 1 through November 14, shows support for Governor Rockefeller eroding to only 39 percent in favor of confirmation and 43 percent opposed.

In that latest poll, a majority of the American people, 54 percent to 28 percent, felt that it was "not all right for him to give $2 million as gifts and loans to people he appointed to high office." By a vote of 47 percent to 34 percent, the public felt "there would be a conflict of interest if he were confirmed as Vice President because of his family's financial holdings and investments."

I am concerned about Governor Rockefeller's loans. I am concerned about the question of laundered funds so reminiscent of what we have faced during the past Watergate period. I am concerned that the use of great wealth can influence public decisions. More important to me, however, is the future of a free and democratic society. The American people voted in 1972 in landslide proportions for a series of public policies which Nelson Rockefeller, in most instances, opposes. To appoint a man to this high office despite the fact that he is not in agreement with the overwhelming majority of Americans on the major issues facing the Nation, is to reverse the mandate of 1972, and to hold the democratic process itself in disrepute.

It is for this reason, beyond all others, that I find it necessary to vote against the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller to the Office of Vice President. The American people deserve as Vice President a man whose philosophy is consistent with their own. To make a mockery of the 1972 election is to reverse the will of the people themselves. Should this be done, our long run freedom and the stability of our political order will be that much less safe and less secure.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES).

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, it is imperative to recognize that there is in issue here today a very fundamental question as to how American society should operate and what the relationship should be in our society between political power and economic power. It is my own view that an underlying premise of our society is that public power shall be available to check and restrain, to limit and control, private economic wealth and power.

Resting upon that premise we have an economic system that allows private individuals to accumulate significant economic wealth and power. We allow that to happen on the assumption that public power will be available to check private economic power and to channel it in the public interest.

The decision confronting us here today, going to the very premises of the operation of our society, is whether a great concentration of private economic power ought to be melded with public power, thereby eliminating this fundamental separation and the resulting basic checks and restraints.

In my view we have only begun to perceive the reach of the private economic power of which we speak. The financial charts submitted to us by J. Richardson Dilworth, the investment counselor for the Rockefeller family, really the chancellor of the exchequer of the Rockefeller financial interests, indicated $1.3 billion in assets. That report by Mr. Dilworth covered: Those assets owned outright and in trust by the 84 descendants of John D. Rockefeller Jr. which are supervised by the family officer; those assets held in trusts created by John D. Rockefeller, Jr. for his descendants and supervised by trust companies, primarily the Chase Manhattan Bank; and those assets held by certain charitable foundations and organizations advised from the family office. It did not include the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, the Rockefeller Family Fund, or the Rockefeller Foundation, which, if included, would add over another billion dollars in assets, giving us a figure of approximately $2.4 billion in assets. It did not include the economic influence of the Chase Manhattan Bank, in which the Rockefeller family, individually and through its trusts and charitable foundations, is the single largest stockholder, approximately 3 percent of the Chase stock, and of which a Rockefeller brother David Rockefeller is the chief executive officer.

We never looked at the reach of economic influence of the Chase Manhattan Bank, the third largest bank in this country with assets of $37 billion and loans outstanding of over $22 billion. There is a Senate subcommittee study which indicates that the trust department of that bank is the leading stockholder in Atlantic Richfield; it holds 5 percent of the stock in Mobil Oil; 14 percent of the stock of CBS; 7 percent of the stock of ABC; 10 percent of the stock of Safeway stores; significant holdings in numerous airlines; and on and on and on.

Looking for a moment at only the oil interests and adding together all of the Rockefeller holdings including the charitable foundation holdings, they exceed $300 million in Exxon alone. It was brought out in the discussion before the committee that taking together these various economic holdings of which I have spoken, including the foundations and the Chase Manhattan, you are talking about a leading influence for this family group in the following oil companies: Exxon, Standard Oil of California, Standard Oil of Indiana, Mobil, Atlantic Richfield, Amerasia Hess, and Marathon Oil. Aramco, which for a long period of time was such a major influence on governmental policies in the Middle East, was primarily owned—that is, 70 percent—by three of the above companies: Exxon, Standard Oil of California, and Mobil.

It must be recognized that what we are talking about is the single greatest aggregation of private economic power in this country. This is not simply the case of a wealthy individual. This is a case of a person and a family with unprecedented private wealth and financial influence being placed in a position where he can also exercise the public power of the executive branch of the National Government of the United States.

The Governor was asked about the very important basic question with respect to the interrelationship between public power and private economic power and if he were sensitive to it, and he made an interesting point. He said he brought it up to President Roosevelt when he was asked to become coordinator of the Inter-American Affairs office. He asked President Roosevelt how President Roosevelt could appoint him when he had connections with the oil companies. And he testified that President Roosevelt said:

That is my responsibility. I understand you. I understand these countries. I know and I trust you. Let me take that responsibility and all you have to do is remove yourself from these decisions relating to oil companies.

Governor Rockefeller indicated he did. If Nelson Rockefeller were to be the President of the United States, who would be in a position to make that judgment and determination as Franklin Roosevelt was able to do at that earlier time? In effect, what this appointment means, is that we are taking the captain of the team and also making him the umpire of the game.

I believe we should think long and hard about the implications of such an action because I believe history will perceive this confirmation as representing a watershed in the American experience when a fundamental principle governing the operation of our society was discarded.

Now, the people of the United States may make the direct judgment that they wish to transform the basic relationship between public power and the great concentrations of private economic power in a direct election. The nominee is not precluded from high office, because he can stand in a direct election and receive a direct mandate. The people may choose in a direct election to make the judgment that they do not consider this separation as a fundamental premise of the operation of our political and economic system.

In closing I want to underscore how extremely important to the operation of both our economic and our political systems I consider the separation of public power from great private economic power. I think the abridgment of that fundamental separation carries with it consequences and implications that we can only dimly perceive today. I do not believe that this Congress ought to abridge that fundamental premise, which I think is so important to the operation of our free society.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. KETCHUM).

Mr. KETCHUM. Mr. Chairman, I did not plan on speaking for or against this nomination today. I really think it is perhaps an act of futility, because I do not think there is going to be a single mind changed by all this 6 hours of debate. I have heard on this floor today individuals from both sides of the aisle speaking for and against the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller and I have heard reasons for and against his great wealth. I have heard reasons expressed that we have gone to school together and we are old buddies and he is a good fellow.

I have heard, by the same token, allegations of practically everything from seduction to bribery. My decision is not based on any of those allegations or lack thereof. The thing that I have not heard expressed on this floor today is, do the people want Nelson Rockefeller?

Under the provision of the 25th amendment, and there are as many interpretations of that amendment as there are points on a compass, under those provisions the people will not have a right to make that selection by casting a ballot. Be that as it may, that is the law of the land.

Therefore, they have only one way to make that decision and that is through your vote here today. In my own case, in an attempt to do my job as I see it, I solicited, with the help of the media in my district, an opinion, yes or no, on Nelson Rockefeller. I did it before all the allegations and before the hearings proceeded.

The overwhelming majority of the people in my district, and I believe in the other districts of the Members here, say no.

Therefore, I shall vote no on this confirmation and hope that I am reflecting to the best of my ability the wishes of the people of my district.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT).

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I intend to take a little time to make a confession, if we do not get anything else done. I confess that in 1965 and a few years preceding that I fell, like most and practically all of the Members of Congress at that time, for the great barrage of propaganda being put out against the fact that we had a couple of leaders who were first and second in succession to the Presidency, the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, who had lived beyond their three score years and ten, or more. We were led into doing something that I believe was ill advised, illogical and a very serious mistake.

Because of expediency, we tampered with a constitutional provision that had worked well for almost 200 years, never having caused a ripple of discussion or dissent in this Nation, and the Nation had not suffered because there was in direct line for accession to the Presidency the Speaker of the House, in that there was no Vice President.

We are all excited today because there is no Vice President. How would it strike the Members to know that almost 40 years of the existence of this Nation of less than 200 years, there has been no Vice President? There has been no catastrophe; there has been no disaster; there has been no wild jumping in the streets because we had no Vice President.

I would not vote for anybody today for Vice President of the United States because the line of succession right now is as it was intended in that Constitution written by wiser men than we have proven ourselves to be. It is the Speaker of the House. As far as the candidate is concerned, if I were voting against or for a candidate, I could probably find one more to my liking.

I believe that at this time we have all forgotten the one cardinal sin that all of us have been guilty of in one way or another. We have subjugated the welfare of this Nation, the survival, the very survival of this Nation to an internationalism that is probably closer to the Rockefeller creed than anything else.

I want to say to all the Members today that if we had the courage that we ought to have, we would say that we made a mistake in the 25th amendment. We would pass the repealer I have introduced and would go back to fundamental government which is sound, because the Speaker of the House does, in a sense, represent a vote by all of the people of the United States in the body of the House. At least, it is one qualification he has.

He is knowledgeable of the problems from an unselfish and a political view, which is exactly what we are—politicians. This Nation is a nation of politics, and that is why it is free. We cannot continue the 25th amendment as it is now written without having opened up a possible avenue for anybody rich enough, ambitious enough, and powerful enough through connections and otherwise to become a virtual dictator by succession without election to the Presidency.

I predict—I predict that before my lifespan has run out, we will have exactly what I am talking about. We will have a President of the United States in a triple succession, either by design or accident. Ambition is something that has no soul, and ambition will step over all rights of all men to achieve itself.

I fear for the country and I fear for the life of this Nation, not exactly the person before us today, but in the fact that we have passed legislation by way of the constitutional convention that makes it possible for this to happen, not only possible, I say to my friends, but probable.

I read last night in the paper that the President is going to turn over to this new Vice President all of the economic problems of this Nation.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS).

Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, we are called upon to discharge a unique constitutional function.

The 25th amendment provides in relevant part:

Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

The President having nominated Nelson A. Rockefeller to fill a vacancy occurring in the office of the Vice President, our responsibility is to determine whether the nominee of the President is to be confirmed.

A threshold matter for decision is to define the standards against which we are to test the nominee of the President so as to justify his confirmation. We are invoking the provisions of the 25th amendment for only the second time in its brief history and no general agreement on such standards has yet evolved. It is especially important, therefore, that Members articulate the criteria against which they test the qualifications of a nominee for the guidance of future Congresses.

First, of course, the nominee must meet the constitutional qualifications of age and residency required of the President. Mr. Rockefeller meets this standard.

Beyond the first agreed qualification, there is some divergence of view. There is a clear consensus, however, that the nominee is to be politically compatible with the President and must not fail of confirmation solely for the reason that a majority of the Congress may be of a different political party and would, understandably, prefer a nominee with whom it is politically compatible. But agreement with this wholly appropriate "politically compatible" criterion does not deter some of its adherents from promptly nullifying its effect.

Congressman CONYERS, for example, interjects the nullifying test which requires the nominee to be in tandem with the political philosophy of a Member who must confirm the nomination. Our colleagues, Congressmen WALDIE and DRAXAN, see their roles to be that of surrogates representing the political views of their constituents.

It may be safely assumed that the constituents of some Members do not support the President or any nominee with whom he is politically compatible. And my friend, Congressman DANIELSON, reads a special meaning into the word "confirm" which requires a personal endorsement of the nominee.

To accept any of these points of view is merely paying lip service to the standard of political compatibility between the President and his Vice Presidential nominee. It is admittedly difficult for individual Members to divorce subjective views on political issues from an objective appraisal of the overall fitness of the nominee. However, if the lessons of history which prompted the adoption of the 12th amendment are to be respected—and there is no suggestion that the 25th amendment requires these lessons be disregarded—the President has the clear right under the 25th amendment to nominate a member of his own party with whom he is politically comfortable. Confirmation cannot properly be rejected solely because of political differences, however phrased, between a Member or his constituents, and the President or his nominee.

The President having nominated Nelson A. Rockefeller, it may and should be assumed by all Members of Congress that the test of political compatibility has been met.

Apart from the political compatibility test, I would state the additional criterion as follows: Is the nominee one who has demonstrated the capacity to serve the Nation well as its Vice President?

The answer to this question properly focuses upon the integrity of the nominee, his experience, and most of all, his judgment. It does not, as I have indicated, permit considerations of personal or constituent partisan preferences to impact the question.

At this point it would be appropriate to review the record of Nelson A. Rockefeller as it may bear upon his integrity, experience, and judgment. The evidence accumulated by the Judiciary Committee is voluminous and exhaustive. Others have discussed it in detail. For purposes of these remarks, however, it is sufficient to observe that the evidence before Congress reveals a man capable of occasional error, but taken as a whole, establishes beyond all reasonable challenge that Nelson A. Rockefeller is a man who has demonstrated the capacity to serve the Nation well as its Vice President.

Our inquiry should end there. But there remains the nagging and widely held view that the economic power of the nominee and his family is incompatible with his service as Vice President. Analytically, the issue fits neatly within the standard enunciated above, but some consider the matter of the nominee's wealth to be an independent ground for opposing his confirmation.

The principal, and exceedingly able, spokesman for this point of view is Congressman SARBANES. The argument goes as follows: Society tolerates the accumulation of private wealth but does so subject to the limitation that accumulated wealth shall not be used contrary to the interests of society itself. The public, through its designated representatives, must oversee and regulate where necessary those who have benefited from the policy which tolerates the amassing of a fortune of the dimensions of Nelson A. Rockefeller and his family. According to the argument, how can the nominee, in his public capacity, fairly umpire a game in which he and his family are among the dominant players?

The argument has superficial appeal, but does not, in my view, withstand critical analysis.

Power, be it economic or political, or a wedding of both, may be abused. A rich man, no more than a poor man, is capable of abusing power. If the mere potential for abuse is unacceptable, then the answer must be to eliminate the power of the office itself so as to insulate all men from its temptations. We cannot do this, of course, because a President and his Vice President must, within constitutional limitations, possess such power, admittedly vast in scope, as is necessary to serve the needs of the Nation.

Our concern, therefore, must focus not on the existence of the power, but rather its abuse.

My colleague, Congressman SARBANES, urges us to recognize as a fundamental governmental principle that political and economic power must be separated. Abuse, according to his view, is irrelevant. He contends that it is the joinder of economic and political power itself which is offensive.

I respectfully disagree. My friend has confused a simple factor, but only a factor, which is entitled to appropriate consideration, with a bottom principle.

As a matter of fundamental principle there should be no dissent from the proposition that any citizen, constitutionally eligible, is entitled to a fair consideration of his qualifications to serve as President or Vice President. No class of citizens—rich or poor—must be passed over. And yet, adherence to the view urged strenuously by Congressman SARBANES would disqualify all members of a disfavored economic class—the very rich—from serving in policy positions in government when the power of the office might enhance the economic status of the officeholder or give the appearance of bias in regulating economic power in the national interest.

The imposition by government of disabilities upon a class of citizens is constitutionally suspect. The arbitrary denial to some of rights and privileges conferred by government and their enjoyment by others, is clearly offensive to the egalitarian traditions of this country which find expression in several constitutional provisions. No implication is intended here that Congress may not adopt criteria for confirmation under the 25th amendment which might fail to meet equal protection muster in another context. But it should not do so.

The Sarbanes argument does not justify the disqualification of the very rich on any rational basis. There is no evidence before the committee that the assumed evils have occurred historically when economic and political power have been wedded. To be sure, there have been occasions, not documented in our record but which should not be overlooked, when rich and powerful men have abused their public trust. But the incidence of such abuse is rare.

On the other hand, evidence exists in abundance that men and women of considerable wealth have served the Nation faithfully and well throughout our history. No better modern example can be found than the nominee himself.

Nor does the Sarbanes argument properly respond to the contention that it imposes an unworkable standard upon Congress. Wealth, of course, is relative. If $1 billion in family assets is intolerable, how much should the Congress be willing to accept as compatible with Government service? The question posed has not been given a reasonable answer.

Nor can it be argued persuasively that the electorate may reward the very rich with public office, but the Congress in the discharge of its 25th amendment responsibilities may not. One would wish that every person duly elected completes his designated term. But vacancies do occur and the 25th amendment places the responsibility to fill such vacancies as may occur in the office of Vice President upon the President and the Congress. The electorate is uninvolved in a decision which only we can make. It would be ironic if our choice must exclude a class of citizens which the electorate has supported repeatedly. And yet, that is the clear consequence of a rule which permits only the people, in a direct election, the option of selecting a man of wealth to be Vice President. This decision is ours and the time for decision is now. It cannot be deferred or delegated.

The point need not be labored. The Sarbanes argument should be rejected as imposing an arbitrary disqualification upon a class of citizens otherwise qualified to serve. It should be rejected in favor of a standard which looks to the nominee's individual qualifications, be he wealthy or poor, and examines that individual's record for conduct abusive of his economic status in terms of the public interest.

Measured against the criteria here suggested—constitutional eligibility, political compatibility with the President, and the demonstrated capacity to service the Nation well as its Vice President—I am satisfied that Nelson A. Rockefeller should be confirmed.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGINS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COUGHLIN).

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to lend my strong support to the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States.

In evaluating this nomination, I have kept in mind three basic criteria. First, the person confirmed as Vice President must be capable of serving as President of the United States. Second, he should add breadth and depth to the administration. Third, he must be acceptable to both Houses of Congress.

On the basis of these criteria, Nelson Rockefeller is an outstanding choice to serve as the next Vice President of the United States. Mr. Rockefeller is eminently qualified to assume the Presidency as evidenced by his many years of service as an administrator and legislative advocate in his home State of New York, as public servant and policymaker in the Federal Government, and as representative of the United States abroad. While there is no adequate training for the offices of President and Vice President, few can match the range of relevant experience which Nelson Rockefeller has acquired during his long and distinguished career in public service.

In addition, Nelson Rockefeller will significantly broaden the national leadership with his vast experience, his sound judgment, his superior intellect, and his firm grasp of political realities. I am especially pleased that Nelson Rockefeller will bring to this administration the benefit of 16 years as Governor of New York, and I would hope that he will continue to serve as a link between Washington and State and local governments whose problems and needs he knows firsthand.

That such a capable administrator and leader on domestic issues should also be a respected authority in the field of foreign affairs and have served in a diplomatic capacity is a bonus that will add still greater breadth and depth to the Ford administration. Mr. Rockefeller's personal experience and expertise in Latin American affairs are well known and will be a great asset to the administration.

I am fully satisfied that this nomination, which has been subjected to exhaustive scrutiny, is one which will serve our Nation well. I am pleased to cast my vote for the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be 41st Vice President of the United States and I look forward to working with him in the days ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, if we consider only the personal qualifications of the nominee, Nelson Rockefeller, it would be hard for me to quarrel with the nomination we are considering. Mr. Rockefeller appears to me at least to be a person of unusual ability, outstanding experience, and high integrity. While I disagree with the nominee's political philosophy in some areas, I cannot say that he lacks the personal qualifications to be Vice President or President.

However, this nomination confronts us with an unprecedented situation. When we considered the Gerald Ford nomination a year ago, the committee tracked down every lead. We investigated even the most minute details of his modest financial interests and transactions, as well as those of his family. We even got into the way he financed his condominium at Vail with loans from his children, and we got into a few small Government contracts that the Ford Paint Company had over the years. We convinced ourselves that there was no conflict of interest.

Considering the Rockefeller nomination, the Committee on the Judiciary did indeed conduct an extensive investigation. The investigation was sufficient to reveal the scope of the nominee's personal wealth and many details of his personal affairs and his political career. It also revealed the outlines of a vast web of economic interests of the Rockefeller family, including many interlocking relationships involving other members of the family, private foundations, banks, and other family-controlled institutions. The financial value of this web of interests is measured in billions. In that sense, Mr. Rockefeller is not representative of a class as the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) implied. He, with his family, is in a class by himself.

This economic power extends into many key areas of the Nation's economy.

Yet, the committee did not attempt to investigate even the main lines of these interests and the precise way in which they are managed and controlled.

Confronted with the complexity of this web and the difficulty and time it would take to unravel the facts, the committee simply threw up its hands.

Some have attempted to rationalize this result, as has the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), on the ground that wealth alone should not disqualify a person from holding high public office. Of course, that is true.

From George Washington to John F. Kennedy, some of our finest Presidents have been men of wealth and men from wealthy families. However, the case before us is not a case of wealth alone. We are not confronted by Nelson Rockefeller alone, nor by his personal wealth alone.

What confronts us is the greatest aggregation of private economic power in the history of the United States. It is a grouping of wealth so vast that it becomes not merely a difference in degree, but a difference in kind.

If we were faced only with Nelson Rockefeller and his personal fortune, the problem might be solved by his offer to place his fortune in a blind trust. Certainly that is the minimum we should insist upon, but if the blind trust solves his personal conflict-of-interest problem—and I am not at all sure that it does—it does not even approach a solution of an equally serious problem that will be faced by every civil servant—in fact, by every Member of Congress—when faced—as they will be—with the necessity of making a decision that will affect one of the many interests of the vast Rockefeller economic power.

Is it right to place public officials in a position where they must weigh the effects on their personal careers of taking action adverse to the economic interests of the Rockefeller family?

Does not the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to the Vice-Presidency, or to the Presidency place every such public official in a potential conflict-of-interest situation?

From this standpoint, the failure of the committee to call David Rockefeller, the chairman of the Chase Manhattan Bank, is a serious omission. Here is the brother of Nelson Rockefeller controlling the third largest bank in the country, which holds controlling interests in four of the Nation's largest airlines and in all three television networks and in many other major corporations. Surely, we should have placed in the record the facts as to the Rockefeller relationships with Chase Manhattan and its methods of control of this empire.

With their great commonsense, ordinary Americans understand there is something inherently wrong with giving extraordinary governmental power to an individual who, with his family, already has an enormous influence over the Nation's economy.

Although the Constitution does not mandate the separation of governmental and economic powers in the same manner, the principle is just as valid.

This principle finds expression in many of our most basic laws and traditions. The antitrust laws, for example, not only have an economic purpose—to protect our free enterprise system, they also have a political purpose—to prevent aggregations of economic power from becoming so great as to threaten the independence of our political institutions.

The original John D. Rockefeller's economic empire was just such an aggregation, and it was broken up under the antitrust laws because it became just such a threat to the independence of our political institutions.

Certainly there are grounds to fear that by approving this nomination, we will be breaching the principle of separation of powers and will be creating a threat to the independence and integrity of our institutions.

Truly, this is a momentous occasion, since it involves a fundamental break with our traditions, and one with grave and far-reaching implications.

If the American people, through the electoral process, choose to break tradition by selecting a President or Vice President who has such enormous economic power, that is their right and privilege. But at this time of flagging faith in our institutions, surely the Congress should not be the one to break that tradition by endorsing this enormous concentration of power.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) for his statement, and to associate myself with his remarks. The gentleman has responded very effectively to the statement that was made by the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS) which failed to understand and appreciate our position in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. ROBISON).

Mr. ROBISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, for a Congress that has already faced a seeming overabundance of critical and historic decisions, it is implausible that we should encounter, today, yet another such choice. This one, however, unlike some of the earlier ones, is not a difficult one—at least, not for me.

For I count it a high honor, and a personal privilege, as one of my final acts as a Member of this House, to be able to endorse, and vote for, Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of these United States.

I take this action not out of the narrow partisan or parochial considerations that might be ascribed as my motivation, but because—as one who has known Nelson Rockefeller well during the years he served as Governor of my State, which period of time almost coincides with the years I have been in the Congress—I have come to appreciate the positive and progressive leadership capacities of this man, the personal qualities of honesty and candor that mark his actions, and the courage and forthrightness that illuminate his career.

As President Ford's nominee to become Vice President under procedures established by the 25th amendment, Governor Rockefeller has undergone a searching examination of his record in public office, of his financial situation, and of that of his family. He has outlined and explained his views. He has answered all questions put to him. He has patiently endured the efforts of a few to malign his record or, through innuendo, to defame his character.

Some argue that this inquiry was not complete enough, and that it should still go forward—virtually ad infinitum. Certainly, some of the concerns they express have validity, and it is a judgmental matter to determine when any inquiry of this nature can be termed "complete." But a substantial bipartisan majority on the committee feels that its investigation has—to use the adjective found in its report—been "exhaustive," and it is my conclusion that those who still want to look further for some disqualifying reasons so argue, in the main, merely because neither Nelson Rockefeller nor any other person President Ford might nominate would ever satisfy them.

As for the rest of you who might have harbored some doubt about Nelson Rockefeller's qualifications, it seems to me that, subjected to days of hard, difficult, even occasionally hostile questioning in both this and the other body, as he was, he came through as few among us could have done and, thereby, gained even greater respect and strength as a nominee.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, that that fact—alone—tells more about Nelson Rockefeller than hours of discussion and debate here could ever do.

For myself, I would like the record to show that Nelson Rockefeller was the only individual I suggested to President Ford, some months ago, when he asked for our recommendations in this matter. I thought then, as I think now, that his qualifications are such as to enable him to stand head and shoulders above any potential candidate for Vice President whose name might come to mind. I shall not, here, take the time to expand upon my reasons for that belief since I did so as a witness before both the Senate Rules Committee and our own Judiciary Committee. Besides which, I really believe this is one of those rare times when it can truthfully be said that this man's record "speaks for itself."

If, however, there is one area of our investigation of Governor Rockefeller that might be said to have been neglected—because of the concentration by the majority of his examiners on political matters and upon his and his family's obviously great wealth—that would have been in the area of the nominee's own basic, and motivating, philosophy. Governor Rockefeller did address himself at some length to such matters in his own preliminary statements, but it was not often that the committee members ventured back into such area. With the idea in mind, therefore Mr. Chairman, that it might be helpful, I would here wish to insert several, rather extensive excerpts from that truly remarkable, and fine, series of lectures that Mr. Rockefeller delivered at Harvard University, in 1962, and entitled "The Future of Federalism."

In introducing his own remarks then, Mr. Rockefeller said he hoped they would state:

... the urgent, historic necessity summoning Americans of this generation to match the founders of this nation in their political creativity, boldness and vision.

Turning, then, to the "Federal Idea" and its evolution in our Nation, he continued with these thoughts:

Let me first make it clear that I do not speak of the federal idea as merely a mechanical or technical or abstract formula for government operations.

I refer to the federal idea broadly as a concept of government by which a sovereign people, for their greater progress and protection, yield a portion of their sovereignty to a political system that has more than one center of sovereign power, energy, and creativity.

No one of these centers or levels has the power to destroy another. Under the Constitution, for example, there are two principal centers of government power—state and federal. As a practical matter, local government, by delegation of state authority under the principle of "home rule," is a third such center of power. The federal idea, then, is above all an idea of a shared sovereignty at all times responsive to the needs and will of the people in whom sovereignty ultimately resides.

Our federal idea is complex and subtle. It involves a balance of strengths. It puts into play a sharing of powers not only among different levels of government but—on each level—a separation of powers between the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of government. And it clearly signifies more than mere governmental structure. It demands faith in—and an environment for—the free play of individual initiative, private enterprise, social institutions, political organizations, and voluntary associations—all operating within a framework of laws and principles affirming the dignity and freedom of man.

A federal system, then, seeks stability without rigidity, security without inertia. It encourages innovation and inventiveness—governed by principle, and guided by purpose. It assures responsiveness more thoughtful than mere reflex—and liberty that does not lapse toward anarchy. In short, it seeks to hold the delicately precarious balance between freedom and order upon which depend decisively the liberty, peace, and prosperity of the individual.

A more full and meaningful "definition" of the federal idea may be offered in the form of what I believe are four of the critical ways in which the federal concept operates. First: The federal idea fosters diversity within unity.

In this land that reaches from ocean to ocean, the great social, economic, and political problems vary profoundly as they may appear, for example, before the people of Wyoming, the people of Louisiana, or the people of Massachusetts. In meeting many of these problems, a sweeping generalized edict from the national government might well be futile or even fatuous. Yet, in our federal concept, the national government is called upon to work with state governments in ways encouraging the states more effectively to resolve their own problems in their own way.

Second: The federal idea permits and encourages creativity, imagination, and innovation in meeting the needs of the people. Those needs, if not met by private action, can be met at the local, the state, or the national level of government.

By providing several sources of political strength and creativity, a federal system invites inventive leadership—on all levels—to work toward genuine solutions to the problems of a diverse and complex society. If local solutions are not forthcoming, it is still possible to bring to bear the influence, the power, and the leadership of either the state or the national government.

Third: The federal idea is a pluralistic idea. It gives scope to many energies, many beliefs, many initiatives, and enlists them for the welfare of the people. It encourages diversity of thought, of culture, and of beliefs. It gives unparalleled opportunity for the development of private institutions—social, political and economic.

Whereas a tightly centralized government tends, by its disproportionate weight and power, to stifle diversity and creativity in both the public and private sectors, a federal system provides room for both infinite variety and creativity in all sectors of national life.

Fourth: The federal idea is characterized by a balance which prevents excesses and invites the full, free play of innovation and initiative. This balance is essentially achieved by: the division of powers between the national and state governments, the separation of legislative, executive, and judicial authority, the absence of monolithic national parties, the permissive encouragement given to local municipal governments to achieve a measure of home rule either in fact or in law, the competitive action of commercial enterprise, and—above all—the freedom of individual initiative, rooted in a basic and unwavering belief in the dignity of the human person.

Further on, Governor Rockefeller entered upon a discussion of what he called "political labels." And, since Mr. Chairman, it would appear to me that, in a sense here today, some of us are worried over whether or not Mr. Rockefeller is either too "liberal" or too "conservative" for our—or our constituents'—tastes, I believe what he states in this context might also be useful for the RECORD:

A second distortion of political reality... is the obsession with political labels which results in the rigid classification of laws, leaders, and policies as "liberal" or "conservative." We all know that, in any serious historical sense, these terms have lost all meaning. The use of such artificial labels, in political debate, merely distorts the issue and confuses the citizen. It substitutes the slogan for thought, the false label for the serious goal.

Under the now-meaningless terms of "liberal" and "conservative," some would hold that economic policies welcomed by labor are "liberal," while those cheered by business are "conservative." Yet all progress for all sections of the community depends upon inter-related factors of economic growth.

When I took office as governor, there were 600,000 unemployed in the State of New York. Business had been leaving the state because of an unfavorable economic climate. And the outgoing administration left, as its fiscal heritage, budget requests calling for expenditures of $2.3 billion, backed by revenue of only $1.6 billion—a deficit of $700 million.

To restore the state's fiscal integrity required cutting expenditures, instituting economies, and raising taxes. None of these moves was popular. I can assure you. But the restoration of confidence in the state was fundamental to improving the climate for economic growth. And it set us on the road to expanding business and industry, rising employment, declining unemployment, and a far greater capacity to meet our social responsibilities as a state. As an example of this capacity, the state this year provided $500 million more for education than when I took office—in other words, a 90 percent increase in state aid to education in just four years.

Where—in all this brief history—does a policy or an act become "liberal" or "conservative"? According to these labels, action to improve the business climate is "conservative," and increased aid to education is "liberal." The fact is that the implied distinction is false and deceiving.

Then, Mr. Chairman, Governor Rockefeller discussed his idea of political leadership. Again, let us note his words:

The power of the federal idea rests, in important part, upon the opportunity it gives for action. Yet there may be no limitation upon leadership of any kind so severe as the simple unwillingness to lead.

If a state government lacks the political courage to meet the needs of its people by using its own taxing power—if it prefers to escape by letting the national government do the taxing and then return the money to the state—the leadership of this state puts itself in an exceedingly poor position to weep over the growth of federal power. The preservation of states' rights—in short—depends upon the exercise of states' responsibilities.

The key to this exercise, obviously, is responsible leadership in the executive and legislative branches of government. It must have the vision to foresee and the courage to meet problems and challenges before they grow to the ugly size of crises.

We live in an age that, by its very pace of change, severely tests all capacity for such leadership. The challenges themselves come large, and they surge swiftly.

In such a time of rapid change, timidity in government only compounds the problems.

Yet few things may trouble [our American] destiny so much as a political disposition to confuse the leading of public opinion with the reflecting of it. We have all witnessed, in recent years, the widening temptation to hinge political judgment on the techniques of marketing research—the polls and surveys supposedly measuring the public temper. Any leadership that is merely a creature of such devices is not even playing politics.

I do not believe that the public wants any such acquiescent leadership. It does not turn to leadership as to a mirror, to study its own reflection. It looks for a definition of, and a dedication to, those principles and policies which enable a free people to grow. I doubt if any democracy, without such vision and courage, without such leadership, can seriously expect to survive the mortal trials of our century.

Finally, then, there was this summary in this particular lecture—in words which I found as exciting and as meaningful back then, 14 years ago, as I do today when it is even possible that we have a greater need to consider and think upon them:

Let me summarize briefly:

The historic application of the federal idea—reconciling unity and diversity—is probably the supreme American contribution to the struggle of all self-governing peoples to build political structures strong enough to assure freedom and order in their lives.

Our own federal system provides a unique arena for imaginative and inventive action and leadership, responsive and responsible to the people.

The practical fulfillment of this promise in our political heritage depends critically, however, upon the health of the national economy, the momentum of our social progress, and the vitality of the whole political environment. This environment can be rendered cold and barren by a citizenry fearful of political partisanship, by a public or a leadership that prefers to deal with labels and slogans rather than real problems and needs, or by a leadership too timid to venture from seemingly safe paths of the past.

The truth, in short, is that the federal idea—like the whole American experience—is a political adventure. It is no static thing, no dead definition, no dogmatic proclamation. Old as it is in our history, its secret strength is that it forever summons a free people to learn and try the new. It requires us, I believe, to imitate its authors in only one respect: to be, like them, unchained to the past and unafraid of the future, to be—in our time as they were in theirs—political pioneers.

Mr. Chairman, in his own words—somewhat outdated as they may be, but still so very pertinent to our need—Nelson Rockefeller has set forth far better than could I in my own words, the reasons why I not only endorse and will vote for him as Vice President, but why I do so with enthusiasm and with trust that this is the right man, at the right time for America.

When I announced my retirement from Congress nearly 11 months ago, I said that, in doing so, I hoped to be able to concentrate during the balance of this year in putting behind us some of the gnawing problems facing the Nation.

Among those problems was the need—and a great need it was—to restore public confidence and trust in our system of government. I believe we are well along toward accomplishing that important objective, but I see the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President as essential to that task.

It is time to vote, and to vote to confirm President Ford's choice of a Vice President, so that this administration—and this Nation—can get on with the urgent business confronting it.

Mr. CONABLE, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CONABLE, Mr. Chairman, we are here today discussing a foregone conclusion. Nelson Rockefeller is going to be Vice President of the United States. Our country decided, by constitutional amendment, not to leave such an important office vacant and that it was in the national interest to create a presumption in filling the vacancy in favor of the man the President wants. That presumption should not be overturned lightly, although it is entirely appropriate that an unelected Vice President—or an elected one, for that matter—should be subject to the most exhaustive scrutiny. Given the long public service, the intense political involvement, and the vigorous personality of Nelson Rockefeller, no one in this room can seriously believe that the congressional investigation of his background has revealed flaws of a disqualifying nature. The current popular style is to be skeptical of public leaders, and yet in any relative scale Nelson Rockefeller stands before this House virtually unscathed by the 3 months of poking, pulling, and pushing to which his record has been subjected.

Like many other Members of this House whose confidence has been abused in the past, I withheld final judgment on Mr. Rockefeller until all the evidence was in. When I vote to confirm him in a few minutes, therefore, I feel that I should make public my reasons for approving his nomination. Since I have not always been in agreement with Mr. Rockefeller on public issues here or in the State legislature, where I previously served, some place me historically in the role of critic of Mr. Rockefeller. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

One of the toughest roles in American public life is that of the Governor. New York is not the easiest State in the Union to govern. That he survived more than 14 years in this demanding leadership position says something about Nelson Rockefeller's capacity to lead. Because any Governor who does his job also acquires the scars of battle, I want to express the belief that people dissatisfied with the Rockefeller activism as Governor should keep an open mind about the performance to be expected of him as Vice President. The two jobs are very different. The same person will respond differently to the expectancies of the different offices and will bring different qualities to different responsibilities.

Those of us who have been associated with both Gerald Ford and Nelson Rockefeller are struck by the differences in these two men, and the opportunities for supplementation in direction of national policy which can result. As Vice President, Mr. Rockefeller can add the strength of his administrative experience to the executive branch. He is a man skilled by long experience in staff work, in establishing and working with single-mindedness toward long-term goals, while the President's experience has been one of legislative responsiveness. Tough individual decisions have been a necessity in the career of Nelson Rockefeller, while Gerald Ford has proved his ability to direct the group decision. In short, while each of these men is attractive in his own right and for his own personal strength, each brings a very different experience to the effective partnership we all hope the leaders of our country can have. While I do not have any doubt that the President will be the leader of the country, his well-known capacity to draw strength from the people around him will make good use of the talents and experience of Nelson Rockefeller, to the benefit of the country.

A word to my Republican friends who think of Nelson Rockefeller primarily as an ideological liberal testing the conservative traditions of our party. Nobody has done more for the pluralism of our Federal system, the bedrock of our belief in responsive decentralization. Mr. Rockefeller believes in strong State government as the only antidote to poisonous centralism. Instead of espousing the negativism which conservatives frequently show when serving on the level of central government, Mr. Rockefeller pushed the only viable alternative, State government. The creative leadership he brought to New York State government, while not always comfortable for New Yorkers, has long set a standard for the other States, and without it the central government in Washington would be a much more dominant force than it is.

A word to my New York friends, some of whom claim in their letters to me that Nelson Rockefeller's leadership has damaged our State. Everyone thinks his problems are unique. If New York's problems are unique, it is only because of the unique structure of our State, and its inclusion of the world's most complicated city, whose budget is greater than the State budget. It is these circumstances which produce financial problems unmatched elsewhere.

Some perspective for New Yorkers on Nelson Rockefeller's contribution to the recent history of our State is suggested by the following statistics. Although New York ranks first among all States in combined State and local taxes in proportion to personal income, taking State taxes alone, New York ranks 20th among the States according to the most recent statistics. It stands first among all States in percentage of State expenditures for aid to local governments, contributing 57.5 percent of State general expenditures to the localities, compared to an average for all States of about 38 percent.

Those of us who believe in strong local government strongly approve of this aspect of our State budget and must acknowledge the leadership Nelson Rockefeller has provided in developing this constructive pattern of government.

Mr. Chairman, if what I have said sounds defensive, it is only because of the negative traditions of American politics, which lead us to give more prominence to accusations and regrets than to more positive factors. Everything about Nelson Rockefeller is personally positive. He is a vital man, an optimist. At his age and after comparable experience, few of us would have as open a mind as he does, would be willing to go through what he has gone through to become Vice President, or would express the enthusiasm which is such a remarkably durable Rockefeller characteristic. He is the man the President wants, he is highly qualified by experience, he is personally attractive and ideologically acceptable, his honesty has been attested by the most rigorous investigation, and it would be transparently hypocritical for us to reject his nomination in this light. I hope he will have overwhelming support from my colleagues.

Mr. McEWEN, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

(Mr. McEWEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McEWEN, Mr. Chairman, my remarks shall be brief. Were they extensive and persuasive, they would not change one vote. We all know that soon the vote will be taken, and we know what the result will be. We shall confirm the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller, of the State of New York, to be Vice President of the United States.

My vote will be for that confirmation.

The prolonged hearings by the committee of both Houses of the Congress, fully reported to all of our people by the printed and electronic media, have told us more than anything that we might now add. The American people approve the nomination and their Representatives should and will do likewise.

Mr. MITCHELL of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MITCHELL of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the Record.

In rising to support the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States I have a good feeling. It is that good feeling we have all experienced in public service that comes when participating in an endeavor of conscience and conviction tell you to be in the best interest of the people you are privileged to represent and the Nation you are honored to serve. Nelson A. Rockefeller is the personification of those qualities we seek in those we select to govern. He is a leader with the courage to lead. He is knowledgeable with the ability to put that knowledge to good use for the common good. He is innovative, a man of reason and a man of conscience, of compassion and understanding.

Vice President-Designate Rockefeller is uniquely qualified for the awesome responsibilities that will shortly be his. He has no equal in the broad base of experience that he brings to the job.

At the Federal level his prior service in the Departments of State and Health, Education, and Welfare, as well as within the White House as a Presidential adviser, has earned for him much praise.

At the State level, as Governor of New York, his record is also strong. His accomplishments as chief executive officer for the Empire State are legion. With justifiable pride he can point to the finest State University system in the Nation, an educational complex for which he has been the principal architect, building with precision and care from a student body of only 30,000 on a few scattered campuses to a present enrollment of more than 400,000 in facilities across the State that are geographically and financially within the reach of all.

There is so much more. New York State's fine highway system that predated our own Interstate Highway program. A mental hygiene program second to none. State agencies that are concerned with and doing something about the problems of our cities and those who are disadvantaged. All of these endeavors, which have enjoyed so much success, stand as lasting monuments to the Rockefeller years as Governor.

The many dimensions of Nelson A.

Rockefeller go beyond domestic considerations. He is schooled in international affairs and is viewed around the world as a man of great depth and understanding in matters affecting the family of nations.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, Nelson A. Rockefeller is a complete man and this body will do itself proud if we follow the example set on the other side of the Capital by voting overwhelmingly for his confirmation as the 41st Vice President of the United States.

Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. Chairman, this Nation will not rise or fall on what I have to say in the next few minutes. Nevertheless, I feel compelled to state my reasons for supporting the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President.

The domestic and foreign problems facing us today require a complete executive. The President needs a strong Vice President to help him carry the weight of these burdens. He has chosen Nelson Rockefeller.

In considering this nomination, we should ask ourselves two main questions: First, What qualifications should we demand of the person who stands second in line to the President? Second, Does Mr. Rockefeller possess those qualifications?

During the past 4 months, the House Judiciary Committee and the Senate Rules Committee held intensive hearings to answer those questions.

Throughout those hearings, Mr. Rockefeller's ability to serve was never a question, even to his most adamant opponents. His experience covers almost four decades during which he has become an expert in Latin American affairs, governed the vast State of New York and shaped its history, advised Presidents and headed numerous national commissions seeking answers to this country's problems.

What has been at issue is the fact that Mr. Rockefeller and his family are tremendously wealthy, and that over the years he has disbursed portions of this vast fortune in gifts and loans to private individuals and public servants. The far-reaching nature of such immense wealth has aroused doubts in the minds of many as to whether Mr. Rockefeller can carry on the Nation's affairs without an ever-present potential for conflicts of interest.

To my mind, these gifts and loans do not necessarily mean that strings were pulled to obtain favors. In fact, not even a hint of illegality has come out, even under the bald light of the committee hearings.

There have also been criticisms of his involvement in Victor Lasky's controversial book on Arthur Goldberg and of his inconsistent record on prison reform.

These and other matters reveal a certain amount of insensitivity in some areas of his previous public life. They are questions not easily put aside. But the fact remains that Mr. Rockefeller has responded to questions on these subjects openly and fully and I believe he now realizes what difficulties they pose for the American people. While I certainly do not agree with some of Mr. Rockefeller's decisions on these and other matters, I do not feel they should disqualify him from the Vice Presidency.

Why? Because I believe that the unusual and thorough disclosure of Mr. Rockefeller's personal and family wealth and his activities now in the public record are effective protection against similar incidents in the future.

No other candidate for the Vice Presidency or the Presidency has ever undergone such close scrutiny as Governor Rockefeller has since he was nominated last August. The Senate Rules Committee held 7 weeks of public hearings and the House Judiciary Committee held 3 weeks before recommending confirmation by an overwhelming margin. In addition, such agencies as the FBI and the Internal Revenue Service have thoroughly investigated every aspect of his long career in public service and his personal and family finances. Furthermore, the nominee has agreed to end such practices and to put his fortune in a blind trust for the duration of his term in office.

The true Rockefeller fortune is not in his money, but the wealth of talent and experience he brings to the Vice Presidency. His career in public service and a vast number of positions of great responsibility eminently qualify him for fulfilling the duties of the Vice Presidency, and even the Presidency, if some tragedy should require it.

The times we live in demand that our Nation be led by experienced men, not experimenters. Men who can decide for the Nation, not divide it.

Nelson Rockefeller meets these demands. Therefore, I intend to vote for his confirmation and urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of confirming Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States, mindful that we meet today to discharge a solemn obligation. Indeed, it is a responsibility that may well prove to be unique in the history of our Nation.

The 25th amendment to the constitution is quite simple. When a vacancy occurs in the office of the Vice Presidency, it requires that the President designate his choice to fill the Vice Presidential vacancy. Such a nominee may only become Vice President when the Congress has voted, a majority of both the House and Senate, in the affirmative, to confirm.

Just over a year ago Gerald R. Ford became the first Vice President to be confirmed under the 25th amendment. Richard Nixon's resignation—an unprecedented departure from our Nation's highest office of public trust and responsibility—then caused Mr. Ford to assume the Presidency. It is President Ford's nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York for the office of Vice President that we must decide upon today.

In deciding on Mr. Rockefeller's qualifications and fitness, I believe we must apply a standard that meets two somewhat conflicting tests: it must be the highest possible standard; but it must also meet the test of being a reasonable standard.

We cannot set a standard so high that it is impossible to achieve. Yet experience and prudence dictate that the test should be stronger than either of our political parties apply in the choice of their Presidential and Vice-Presidential nominees since the electorate at large will have no chance to measure candidates and then decide.

There is almost no question that Mr. Rockefeller has the basic intellectual capacity and experience to govern and accede to the Presidency. His four terms as Governor of the great State of New York and the numerous other positions of trust that he has held under both Democratic and Republican administrations establish this beyond reasonable doubt. Moreover, as stated in the Judiciary Committee Report on page 20.

Mr. Rockefeller's record as Governor of New York shows outstanding achievements in providing improved transportation services, health care, protection of the environment, promotion of the arts, and accomplishments in many other areas which are fully documented in the record of the Committee's investigation.

Mr. Rockefeller cited as a key to his faith in our Federal system the return to local governments of 62 percent of every dollar of state taxes collected while he served as Governor.

At the national level, Mr. Rockefeller has demonstrated his ability in a wide range of governmental posts—from his Chairmanship of President Eisenhower's Committee on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government to his crucial role in organizing the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare as its first Under-Secretary.

At the international level, Mr. Rockefeller has served five Presidents of both parties in behalf of many aspects of the foreign policy of the United States. As Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs under President Franklin D. Roosevelt, later as Assistant Secretary of State for American Republic Affairs, and on subsequent diplomatic assignments, the Vice President-designate has amply demonstrated his mastery of the skills necessary for the development of an effective foreign policy.

Finally, in the area of inter-governmental affairs, Nelson Rockefeller's four years of service on President Johnson's Advisory Committee on Inter-Governmental Relations are indicative of his expertise in this increasingly important field of national policy.

In summary, the Committee's exhaustive investigation of Nelson Rockefeller's extensive record of public service provides convincing evidence that he is uniquely well qualified as the right man to serve our country as Vice President at this time. Nelson Rockefeller qualifies under the 25th Amendment as a national leader of exceptional intelligence and admirable dimension.

While I strongly agree with the above conclusion, this is not the first occasion when I have carefully examined Mr. Rockefeller. I did so over 6 years ago, in 1963, as an elected delegate to the Republican National Convention, when, after careful study, I felt Mr. Rockefeller had every qualification to become the President of the United States. And, at that convention, I voted to nominate Nelson Rockefeller as the Republican candidate for President.

Our shattering experience with the events known as Watergate has taught us that there is far more to being President or Vice President than intelligence and experience. We have been reminded that integrity is vital, and that conduct of the Nation's affairs has but one and only loyalty: to the Nation and the public that has entrusted to the Presidency so many vast responsibilities and powers.

The House Judiciary Committee has made a minute examination of Mr. Rockefeller. I have listened carefully to both the proponents and the opponents of Mr. Rockefeller's confirmation and examined hundreds of pages of testimony in the hearing record of the Judiciary Committee. Clearly, Governor Rockefeller has made his share of unpopular decisions. On occasion he has made mistakes. But I believe no one in public service can avoid making either unpopular choices or decisions that turn out to be wrong. These are the inevitable battle scars of fighting for what you believe is the good of the people of your State or Nation. Our society places great value in fighting for what we believe in. It is clearly not something that should disqualify a man or woman from holding any high position of public trust.

I except the circumstances involving the book on former Supreme Court Justice Authur Goldberg from the category of unpopular choices or mistaken decisions. In what the committee has determined to be a single and isolated instance I question Governor Rockefeller's judgment and handling of the issue. It is a blemish on an otherwise distinguished record of public service which I do not condone. But I am satisfied that it is a single instance, and that it is not indicative of Mr. Rockefeller's basic character. I do not believe it is sufficient to disqualify him.

Before the Judiciary Committee began its searching inquiry, it was clear that Nelson Rockefeller was a man of tremendous wealth. It has, of course, been suggested that this wealth should disqualify him whether or not Mr. Rockefeller, as he has pledged, places his holdings in a blind trust. That we should apply this standard seems totally inconsistent with the American belief that we judge a man on what he has done, not how much money he is worth. Application of this test would have prohibited public service by some of our most distinguished Presidents and greatest high Government officials, including Presidents Kennedy and Roosevelt. Nelson Rockefeller's own career, exemplified by the unparalleled record of honest administration during his 16 years as Governor of New York State, is in itself a further demonstration that individuals of very considerable wealth can and do put the public trust consistently above any temptation of private gain.

Our country needs a strong and responsible executive branch to work with a strong and responsible Congress if we are to overcome these difficult and challenging times at home and abroad. In supporting the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller, I am hopeful that this Nation can and will make use of his considerable talents to make America a land of equal justice and genuine opportunity for all our people.

Mr. WYDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WYDLER. If the gentleman would yield to me further, I would just like to say I have listened to the main theory put forth in the House here today by some of the opponents of Nelson Rockefeller to the effect that the Rockefeller family has too much wealth to qualify him for the job. That seems to be a very strange argument, indeed, because, of course, it would disqualify every member of the Rockefeller family. They would all be subject to that same criticism, including a member such as a gentleman known as Jay Rockefeller who was running for Governor in West Virginia as a Democrat not long ago. He might be surprised to find out that he is disqualified in the minds of some Members of this House of ever being considered as able to run for President or Vice President of the United States.

Mr. BIESTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BIESTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I firmly believe Nelson Rockefeller is uniquely qualified for the position of Vice President of the United States, and I rise in support of his nomination to that office.

As Governor, Mr. Rockefeller placed New York in the forefront of State—and national—leadership in addressing social, economic and environmental problems. He worked and fought for the elimination of discrimination in housing, expansion of the State university system and increased aid to elementary and secondary schools, establishment of a strong air and water pollution control program and extensive improvements in the State's transportation network. In word and deed, Governor Rockefeller has been an innovator and aggressive exponent of an invigorated Federal system of government.

His career at the national level has been nothing less than impressive. He has worked in the administrations of four Presidents of both parties. He has served as an assistant Secretary of State, an Under Secretary of HEW, a special assistant to a President and a chairman or member of numerous national boards and commissions.

Nelson Rockefeller, although he has been before the electorate in his own State and nationally on a number of occasions, has not won the public's endorsement to be Vice President through the customary campaign and electoral process. Instead, he has had to gain its confidence indirectly through Members of the House and Senate acting under the procedures set forth in the 25th amendment.

Accordingly, the Congress examined Nelson Rockefeller—his personal and public lives—in the minutest detail. Because the traditional route of campaign appearances and media testing was not available for the public to size up and measure the nominee's qualifications, Congress initiated a probing investigation into Mr. Rockefeller's background. Much was already on the record dating back to the beginning of his public service in the Roosevelt administration and continuing through his 15 years as Governor of New York. Personal and family finances—a subject intensely personal to each of us—were laid bare and scrutinized.

All this revealed Nelson Rockefeller to be an accomplished administrator with experience both nationally and internationally, a man who in the long course of public service has inspired considerable progress in many areas of social concern. During these many years he has made some mistakes and errors of judgment and, quite expectably, his policy decisions as Governor were not always well-received by certain people and groups. This does not disqualify him from being Vice President.

Much has been said in a negative way of Governor Rockefeller's wealth and financial interests and that this should somehow prevent him from becoming Vice President under the 25th amendment. I believe this argument is without substance and, in fact, suggests a totally unacceptable precedent for the consideration of future Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates.

Nelson Rockefeller was born into a family of great wealth, and that family remains one of the most wealthy in the country. It is also a family which has maintained a generous philanthropic involvement with a wide spectrum of deserving groups and causes. Mr. Rockefeller has neither experienced firsthand nor undergone the many severe handicaps facing the poor in this country or, for that matter, had to cope with the everyday problems of the middle-income wage earner. He has not, however, allowed his wealth to isolate him from becoming involved in efforts to resolve the social concerns of the average American. His financial independence has allowed him the freedom and flexibility to devote himself, as few men have, to serving the public. In so doing, he has involved and educated himself intimately and widely in an extensive range of problem areas.

American history shows that, in the past, wealth—or the absence of it—has not prohibited individuals from running for office and getting elected, including a number of Presidents and Vice Presidents in recent decades. Mr. Rockefeller has given his assurance that his financial interests will not be permitted to interfere or conflict with the execution of his Vice Presidential responsibilities and his oath of office to the United States. I believe we can and should accept his word.

The 25th amendment and the examination to which Congress has subjected Nelson Rockefeller, as exacting as it was and must be, was not intended to set standards for the office so unreasonably stringent that no one can qualify. If we are saying Nelson Rockefeller should not be Vice President because of his wealth, or because he has offended some people and interests during his career, or because he has erred in his handling of certain situations, then we are virtually saying that no one should be Vice President—or President—who is wealthy, or who has to make some difficult and unpopular decisions or who has erred in judgment. Mr. Rockefeller has been a dynamic and aggressive leader willing to tackle controversial problems and eager, personally and as a public official, to right wrongs as he sees them.

I have studied the arguments and propositions raised against his confirmation very carefully, and while they do reveal some unfortunate errors of judgment they do not convince me that his nomination should be rejected. I have looked at the totality of his record and am voting to confirm him on that basis.

I look expectantly and optimistically to having Governor Rockefeller adding his extensive expertise to national problem-solving during the next 2 years. Few people are as uniquely qualified to serve during such an uncommonly challenging period in American history. Let us confirm our new Vice President and free his abundant energies and intellect for the big job ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DANIELSON).

Mr. DANIELSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, there has been an implication in the debate today that perhaps we are trying to set a double standard in considering the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller. I say that in one respect that may be true, and should be, and in another it should not. We are not the electorate of the United States. The people of the United States can choose as their President or Vice President, whomsoever they wish. They have a right to vote for whomever they choose. But we, as trustees for the people of the United States under the 25th amendment, must adhere to a higher standard than that. We are not conducting our own business; we are conducting the public business; and we must be held to the highest standards of trust and select a Vice President who is beyond criticism for that office.

In another respect, should we have a double standard for different nominees under the 25th amendment? I say that we should not. The standards we apply to Nelson Rockefeller—or applied to Gerald Ford a year ago—or to any other nominee under the 25th amendment, should be the same.

If conflict of interest is too great a disqualification for one nominee, then conflict of interest is too great a disqualification for another. Could the Members sit here and state that if someone other than Nelson Rockefeller had a massive conflict of interest, they would still vote to confirm?

When we considered Gerald Ford, we even traced out the fact that he got some money for his mountain home from his children's piggy banks, of course, with their permission, and yet we overlooked billions of dollars which lie unexamined in the Rockefeller vaults.

Mr. Rockefeller has a massive conflict of interest. Never again will we find one quite the equal. His conflict of interest reaches into every nook and cranny of our economy. It is congenital, and it is insoluble. I submit that if conflict of interest is to be a standard and should be an issue, we must acknowledge the fact that here is the greatest conflict of interest in the United States, and then if we are going to confirm, we must confirm despite that fact.

The thing that concerns me most, however, is the gifts and soft loans to public employees of the State of New York at the time he was Governor. I am not going to recount them here, but if the Members will look at pages 287 to 289 of the Hearings, they will find a listing of the various gifts and soft loans he made to public employees of the State of New York, and they will find that scarcely ever were they collected.

Again, if they look at pages 954 through 957, they will see the explanation given by William Ronan, the recipient of the greatest gift, some $625,000.

I am not going to repeat the whole Ronan story here but the Members will know that during his employment with the State of New York he received $510,000 in soft loans, with no interest, no collateral, and no effort to collect, but during the little 13-day window in time last May, after he resigned from the State government, all of these were forgiven, all of them, plus an added tip of $40,000, so that in the course of 16 years he came out a net beneficiary of $625,000. A summary of the Ronan transactions is as follows:

FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS BETWEEN WILLIAM J. RONAN AND NELSON A. ROCKEFELLER, AND SIGNIFICANT DATES OF WILLIAM J. RONAN'S EMPLOYMENT, DECEMBER 19, 1958 THROUGH MAY 16, 1974

December 19, 1958: Gift, $75,000.

January, 1959: William J. Ronan became New York State Employee under Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller.

January 8, 1963: Loan, $100,000; balance owed, $100,000.

May 1, 1965: Loan, $50,000; balance owed, $150,000.

May 1, 1965: Loan, $50,000; balance owed, $200,000.

July 15, 1966: Loan, $110,000; balance owed, $310,000.

December 16, 1966: William J. Ronan became full-time Chairman of the Metropolitan Commuter Transportation Authority (later known as the Metropolitan Transportation Authority).

January 24, 1967: Loan, $50,000; balance owed, $360,000.

October 16, 1969: Loan, $150,000; balance owed, $510,000.

May 1, 1974: Ronan resigned from Metropolitan Transportation Authority, left state employment.

May 3, 1974: Gifts, $510,000, $40,000; total gifts, $625,000.

May 3, 1974: Ronan became Chairman, Board of Commissioners, of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey (unsalaried).

May 13, 1974: Ronan became salaried employee of Rockefeller Family and Associates.

May 16, 1974: Ronan became a Trustee of the Power Authority of the State of New York.

The nominee would tell us he was concerned that Ronan did not have enough money for his retirement. Is that not something? Could it be that Mr. Rockefeller never knew anybody else without enough money for his retirement and, if he did, did he give that person $625,000?

I ask the Members, at this time when the restoration of public confidence is such an important concern in our Republic, when the lack of faith is such a grave problem, can we now, in good conscience, confirm as Vice President, as potential President, a person who is unaware, insensitive, and ignorant of the effect of wealth, badly used, to corrupt public officials? I say we cannot and I say we should turn down this confirmation.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BADILLO), soon to become a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BADILLO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller for Vice President of the United States. In my judgment, the confirmation hearings before the House Judiciary Committee and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration establish clearly that Nelson Rockefeller, as Governor of New York State for 15 years, availed himself extensively of the economic power and influence of Nelson Rockefeller, the private individual. That power and influence were used in the conduct of political campaigns for the governorship, in the appointments to office made as Governor and in the development of policy decisions affecting the people of New York State. In my opinion, Rockefeller the Governor and Rockefeller the billionaire were one and inseparable and governed as one. I oppose the nomination because there is nothing in the record of the hearings that reassures me that Rockefeller the Vice President or Rockefeller the President will conduct himself any differently in the future than he has in the past in terms of combining political know-how with private economic wealth and influence. I oppose the nomination because I would consider such a combination a serious danger to our country.

Many of the issues presented at the confirmation hearings remain unresolved and for that reason I was among those who sought to delay the confirmation vote until additional facts could be secured. Nevertheless, I believe the following conclusions are justified from the available data:

First, Nelson Rockefeller and his family spent nearly $20 million to elect and maintain Nelson Rockefeller as Governor of New York State. In addition, the record shows that the private wealth of Rockefeller and his family was used extensively to finance campaigns of political supporters. It is impossible to compile total amounts contributed by related interests but even the limited amounts revealed to date indicate that the fortune of Rockefeller the candidate was heavily dependent on candidate Rockefeller's fortune.

As far as the future is concerned, the nominee has testified that he intends to continue to make political contributions to selected political candidates if confirmed as Vice President not unlike contributions he has made over the years. Presumably, the same would apply to the nominee's family and related interests. Such a prospect can hardly be called reassuring.

Second. The case of the Goldberg book indicates clearly that the resources available and used by Governor Rockefeller included not just money but the best talent and connections available in the legal community of the country.

It is apparent that the entire Goldberg episode involved a complicated scheme which embraced establishing separate corporations and requiring the services of law firms in Washington, New York, and Philadelphia. Anyone familiar with legal firms' fees knows that the cost of devising and carrying out such a scheme in legal fees alone would have been several times the amount of the alleged investment and that the project would have been abandoned on that ground if the client had been anyone but Nelson Rockefeller. As it happened, the project went ahead and there is nothing in the record to indicate that the normal legal fees and other costs were paid. This case points up clearly that access to talent and connections can be more important than actual amounts of money involved and that such access was availed of where necessary.

Third. The gifts and loans made by Governor Rockefeller to appointed public officials in key positions established an additional layer of obligations between the Governor and his appointees which conflicts with the public interest. Even if the most charitable and innocent explanation for gifts and loans to appointed officials is accepted, the inevitable result of this practice is the establishment of a new and special relationship between the Governor and his appointees which would give an appointee greater pause in criticizing his benefactor. The prospect of being fired is obviously an inhibiting factor but the necessity of having to repay a debt while looking for another job would certainly serve to deter even the most outspoken public official. It is surprising that Mr. Rockefeller could be so unsophisticated that he failed to perceive this problem until it was called to his attention during the hearings.

However, it is not totally reassuring to know that Mr. Rockefeller pledges to make no additional gifts or loans in the future because the hearing record indicates that the special relationships established by Governor Rockefeller include not just gifts and loans but future employment at substantial salaries with family enterprises. For example, Dr. Ronan was retained as a "family consultant" at a salary of $100,000 per year when he resigned from his paid position in State government. Mr. Alton Marshall became the president of Rockefeller Center at a substantial salary when he resigned from State government. No attempt seems to have been made by the committee to trace this line of inquiry but there is enough mention of other former key officials working in different family enterprises to indicate to me that the private resources of the Governor were used extensively to offer inducements that could conflict with the public interest.

Fourth. The interests of the Rockefeller family were so pervasive in New York State that they could not be separated from the public interest in the development of basic policies for the State. The hearing record documents clearly that the merger of the Metropolitan Commuter Transportation Authority with the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority came about as a result of an agreement between Nelson Rockefeller, acting as Governor and David Rockefeller, president of Chase Manhattan Bank, acting as trustee for certain bond holders. The conclusion of this agreement was indispensable to Governor Rockefeller's political career and it is inconceivable that David Rockefeller could have failed to recognize the importance of the agreement to his brother.

The record indicates that the potential for conflicting interest is even greater on the national scale. As stated by Representative Kastenmeier in his separate views:

A review of their holdings indicates that they maintain a sizable personal influence in virtually every important aspect of American life.

Accordingly, it is clear that there is no reasonable way in which it could be expected that future conflicts of interest of even greater magnitude than existed in New York State could be avoided.

It is in the light of the above circumstances that I have decided to oppose the nomination of Mr. Rockefeller. I must point out that I disagree strongly and, so I believe, do the people of my district, with Mr. Rockefeller's views on Attica, Chile, Watergate, tax reform, the role of the military in American life, his views of his accomplishments as Governor of New York, the continuance of CIA covert operations, and indeed most of the important issues in our society today. This basic disagreement would be enough under the intent of the 25th amendment to justify a negative vote for confirmation on behalf of the district which I represent. However, I believe the earlier reservations I have raised apply to every district and therefore cast my vote on the grounds that confirmation would not be in the best interests of any community in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. ICHORD).

Mr. ICHORD. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against the confirmation of Mr. Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. I shall do so because of a commitment I made to the constituents of my congressional district to follow the outcome of a districtwide poll on the question. I would also like to state that I do not differ with this directive because of my own serious reservations about his confirmation. I should say at the outset that I have no illusions about the results of the vote on Mr. Rockefeller's confirmation but I do feel that it behooves me to state the reasons for my opposition and the opposition of the majority of my district.

For the first time in the 14 years I have served in Congress, Mr. Chairman, I bound myself to the results of a legislative poll. During my tenure in the U.S. Congress I have sent out an annual questionnaire soliciting the opinions of the people in the district I was elected to serve, on the major issues confronting the Nation. On each occasion I have stated my belief that an elected official has the responsibility to weigh all sides of each issue to the best of his ability and should never let public opinion be the sole factor in his decisions. I do feel that any officeholder should realize that his judgments are not always right and that it is important for him to lay his judgments alongside of the people who elected him. However, I have always insisted that the final responsibility for each vote rest with me and that I stand ready for the people to hold me accountable for my voting record.

In the case of the poll asking for the opinions of the residents of Missouri's Eighth District on Mr. Rockefeller's confirmation I made an exception to my general rule and bound myself to the results of the poll for the following reasons: First, for the first time in the history of this Nation we have a President who was not elected by the people to either the Presidency or Vice Presidency; second, once a Vice President is confirmed we will have, also for the first time, two men serving in the Nation's highest offices who have not attained these positions through a vote of the people, and third, since any man who serves as Vice President is only one heartbeat away from the Presidency it is entirely possible that the man we confirm as Vice President might become President. It was my judgment that allowing the people to determine my vote on confirmation by their responses was the closest means I could find to give them a ballot on the selection of their Vice President.

Although the results of my poll were not as large as I had hoped, 20,529 people responded to the question of Mr. Rockefeller's confirmation, 11,078, or 54 percent of those responding, voted against confirmation while 9,451, or 46 percent voted for the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller. Certainly the vote was too close to contain any overwhelming sentiment on the issue but the fact that the percentages ran about the same from the earliest returns to the latest probably indicates a fairly accurate gauge of opinion of the voters in the district.

Many reasons were given by Missourians who opposed Mr. Rockefeller's becoming Vice President. Certain themes reoccurred, such as: "We don't need an oil man as Vice President," "I am opposed to a man who would rather make gifts to his friends than pay his honest taxes to the government of his country," "he is very liberal, a pro-abortionist, and his record of deficit spending while governor of New York, should prevent him from being one heartbeat away from the presidency," "he was rejected by the voters for President in 1964 and should not be appointed to an office for which he could not be elected," "he has used his great wealth to gain political power and influence," "his vast economic empire would involve him in a conflict of interest on almost every subject," and many similar statements.

People on the other side of the question assured me that such a wealthy man could not be bought, that he might have even less power as Vice President because he would be watched closer, that he had tremendous administrative experience and was well versed in foreign and domestic problems. It goes without saying that I recognize that there are two sides to this issue.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not believe that any man should be prevented from holding any office because he is wealthy just as I do not believe that wealth entitles anyone to public office. I have strongly favored a revision of campaign spending laws for many years in order that public office might be within the reach of the nonwealthy as well as the wealthy.

In examining the disclosure of loans and gifts by Mr. Rockefeller to his political friends and associates there remains a question of how extensively—perhaps unintentionally—his wealth was used to obtain his political power and influence. The fact that these gifts ranged from judges, New York State officials in agencies dealing with banks, transportation, and taxation, to the U.S. Secretary of State cannot help but raise doubts in our minds about how great his influence might have been over these people.

Yet I feel that the most alarming observations were made by Bill Moyers in a December 2, 1974 Newsweek article where he points out that if Mr. Rockefeller is confirmed:

There is next in line for the Presidency a modern Croesus whose own resources constitute a fifth estate of government—a network of alliances so invisible and vast they are immune to ordinary accountability and represent private means to supersede the public process.

He then makes the point that: Simply being Rockefeller is a conflict of interest.

As he complains that the entire story "of wealth and power mingling in high office" has not been told by Mr. Rockefeller he finds a point missed by most "of how corrupting great wealth can be, not just to the people who possess it but to those who stand in awe of it."

Mr. Chairman I do not question Mr. Rockefeller's honesty, integrity, or sincerity—nor am I passing blanket judgment that he is unfit to serve in the high office of Vice President or President for that matter. I am, however, convinced that enough serious questions have been raised about his economic and political power, his past dealings and decisions to indicate that we could certainly find many other men more capable of inspiring the confidence and providing the leadership sorely needed in this country in the aftermath of Watergate. Therefore, I can carry out the wishes of the majority of those in my district answering the poll with the conviction that my people have directed me to do that which is in the best interest of this Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. HARRINGTON).

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, no vote in the 5 years I have been in the

December 19, 1974

Congress is as difficult and fraught with uncertainty as the one I intend to cast this afternoon for Nelson Rockefeller. A year ago, on December 6, I stood here and urged this House to reject Gerald Ford. I could take a momentary and perhaps ill-placed satisfaction in having some of my predictions borne out. I take no other pleasure in coming today to support Nelson Rockefeller precisely for the reason that Gerald Ford is President.

His well-intentioned, ambivalent, leaderless and almost absence of philosophy tenure over the last 4½ months, superimposed on 11 years of foreign and domestic discord, of shattering of the fabric of public confidence in the institution of government to the point of where whatever is left is fragile and tenuous, prompt me to support someone who in other times less bizarre, less unique, less significant, I would find easy comfort in joining with those who have spoken against him.

I do not believe we can afford, in attempting to, in vicarious fashion, offer judgment this afternoon, lose sight of what this country has gone through, lose sight of the precipitous decline in public support of the present occupant of the office in the obvious inability to inspire, to nurture, to develop that fragile, subjective element called confidence in government.

I do not know that Nelson Rockefeller can. I do not suppose, frankly, that, situationally, I would not find myself very, very defensive when each of the specific issues raised appear, or the general concern of the divergence of wealth and political power are brought to the forefront. But I have, despite a clumsy degree of optimism in our ability to muddle through most of our problems, a persuasive sense of pessimism about where this country has been and where, in reckless fashion, it appears not to be going.

Whatever one may say about Rockefeller and his tenure in public office over 40 years, he has not hesitated to fill vacuums, to attract and to use talent, and to a degree to be decisive, even in a controversial way.

I suppose in an era attendant to having a lesser time to deal with someone not as controversial as Nelson Rockefeller, contrasted with the fact we had almost double the time given us 1 year ago to deal with someone as bland as Gerald Ford was in his 25 years in the Congress, it says something for the standards which even these concerns today make disparate allies in this House.

But it is the pessimism and the bleakness of the uncertainty of what we have left of the institution, both private and public, that compels me on an act of faith and not expectation in support of Rockefeller in general in the broadest sense it stands for, the firmness, purposeful execution of whatever the role is he has filled. I hope that we can see, out of the next few years, perhaps the emergence of a dual Presidency, perhaps the filling of that vacuum which is so profound, which has disturbed me on occasions like today.

Let me close by suggesting that, having been forewarned twice in the instance of the use of the 25th amendment, and once in the tortuous process called impeachment that we have gone through, that I hope that the process we have seen used by the Committee on the Judiciary over the course of the last year will be the basis for more widespread and deeper-rooted inquiry into the institution that we have had for almost two centuries and not wait until some other trauma befalls us before we act in a hasty fashion and ill-conceived fashion.

Ms. ABZUG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Ms. ABZUG. Do I take the gentleman's words to mean that, in his judgment, if we confirm today, what we do is confirm not a functionless Vice President but, hopefully, in his view, an acting President?

Mr. HARRINGTON. Exactly.

Ms. ABZUG. In that case, in the opinion of the gentleman, does it not matter what he stands for, what position he takes, although it be entirely contrary to those of the gentleman?

Mr. HARRINGTON. I would prefer always to have someone who has positions of philosophy and purpose than someone who has an absence of those qualities, whether I agree or not.

Ms. ABZUG. In other words, it is the view of the gentleman that what we do here today is install a President, and the gentleman does so willingly, even though it may mean that this man may oppose everything that the gentleman has fought for?

Mr. HARRINGTON. I disagree with "installing a President," but other than that, up to now, I would concur in what the gentleman is suggesting.

Ms. ABZUG. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON).

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MARAZITI).

Mr. SARASIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARAZITI. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SARASIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I rise in support of the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller.

Mr. Chairman, I will cast my vote in favor of the confirmation of Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States in the conviction that this course is in the best interest of the Nation as a whole and in conformity with the responsibility placed on the House of Representatives by the 25th amendment to the Constitution.

Exhaustive investigations by the Judiciary Committees of both the House and Senate have covered every aspect of Mr. Rockefeller's personal and public life. No candidate for any office in the history of this country has ever been subjected to such intensive and far reaching scrutiny. While the committee hearings revealed actions by Mr. Rockefeller which were less than exemplary, his overall qualifications were deemed to be compatible with the requirements of the Office of the Vice Presidency. Consequently, I agree with the majorities on both these committees and the overwhelming majorities in both the House and Senate that nothing revealed disqualified the former New York governor from becoming Vice President.

The 25th amendment, for good reason, does not call upon the Congress to judge a vice president-designate on his political philosophy, but on his fitness to hold the office. Mr. Rockefeller's long and honorable record of public service, his vast experience in government at all levels and his many admirable personal qualities give us all reason to expect him to carry out the duties of Vice President with distinction.

Mr. CONLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARAZITI. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. CONLAN. Mr. Chairman, today we are being called upon, under the 25th amendment to the U.S. Constitution, to vote our approval or disapproval of President Ford's appointment of Nelson A. Rockefeller as 41st Vice President of the United States.

After carefully considering the many arguments and evidence given for and against this appointment, I have come to the conclusion that I will have to vote no on Mr. Rockefeller's confirmation.

My responsibility under the 25th amendment, as I see it, is to be a representative for the views of the voters of my congressional district, voters who have not had a chance under the 25th amendment to express their vote at the ballot box for either our President or Vice President. Communications from citizens in my Arizona district overwhelmingly indicate he is not their choice for Vice President or President.

I myself think our country would be better represented and served by a younger man closer in generation and thought to the majority of our people. And also, I think it would be most difficult for a man of this wealth to personally comprehend the needs and desires of the working men and women of America.

However, my voters major concern, and one that I personally share, is that confirmation today of Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President, and possibly successor President of the United States, will merge the world's most powerful private fortune and financial empire with the world's most powerful government.

This will fuse in the hands of one man a family heavily involved in world finance and trade in both the free and Communist worlds with the leadership of our executive branch of Government, which is daily called upon to make vital choices and decisions greatly affecting the personal economic lives of our people and our political survival as a nation.

Many Arizona voters have expressed to me their belief this is fair neither to the man nor to the people of this great Nation. Mr. Rockefeller will have a great personal burden, in this position of tremendous governmental power and influence, separating his family loyalties from the active conflicts which will confront him as he serves as Vice President or President.

December 19, 1974

Mr. Speaker, I have come to the conclusion that these circumstances I have touched upon would prevent Nelson Rockefeller from ever being elected to this high office by the voters of my State, and perhaps all America, were he ever to come before them under our normal election processes. When people vote, they go beyond a candidate's philosophy and capability to do a job, beyond a simple weighing of problems confronting them and our country, casting a vote of confidence in political leaders, our political institutions, and our Nation's founding principles themselves.

Consequently, I must, as honestly as I know how, represent the voters of my district and cast a "no" vote against his confirmation as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARAZITI. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support, and very strongly so, of the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to speak on behalf of Nelson Rockefeller who will be considered today for confirmation by the House of Representatives for the office of Vice President of the United States.

I think no person has been subject to a more rigorous examination of his qualifications than Mr. Rockefeller. Both the House and Senate committees are to be commended for the thoroughness with which they did their jobs.

Hardly any facet of his life, public or private, was left untouched. Some valid questions were raised about his great wealth and power but I feel the answers given by Mr. Rockefeller were forthright and dispelled any serious grounds for disbarment from the high office of the Vice Presidency.

Mr. Rockefeller has spent 34 years in public life—15 of those years as Governor of the State of New York. As a former member of the New York State Legislature, it was my privilege to be closely associated with him and I can attest first hand to his devotion and skill in seeking to solve the many problems that confronted the State of New York.

He faced tough decisions and admittedly not all his actions were popular but in the long run, he served the people well and they elected him their Governor four times.

Few men today can offer the Nation the expertise, experience and enterprise that Mr. Rockefeller can. He has demonstrated himself to be the possessor of a keen comprehension of the complexities of government and a comparable awareness of international affairs, both of which are so vitally needed today to buttress our national vitality at home and abroad.

I am aware that there are those who have misgivings about Mr. Rockefeller because of differences in political philosophies but I think my colleagues need not be reminded that this is not a reason for disqualification.

Under terms of the 25th amendment, nominations must be considered on the basis of the nominee's qualifications for the office. Certainly Mr. Rockefeller's more than 30 years of superior and unselfish service at both State and National level more than meet the test.

We have been without a Vice President since August 9 during a time when troubles deepen every day. I think the Nation will be greatly served if his enormous talents and energies can be utilized to help shape our national policies and I strongly urge my colleagues to confirm Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARAZITI. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to support the confirmation of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller for Vice President of our country. Mr. Rockefeller has been investigated more thoroughly than anyone in the history of the United States. The very fact that he has stood up under this grueling experience with calm, dignity, and even an excellent sense of humor, indicates he has the character, courage, and stamina to do the job.

As Governor of the great State of New York for 15 years, Nelson Rockefeller demonstrated great executive ability and leadership. He was admired and respected by his fellow Governors from throughout the Nation. He made many appearances before our Committee on Public Works. There he was a familiar and able witness for some of the greatest programs in world history.

We particularly respected his opinion on water quality legislation, economic development, housing, mass transit, rivers and harbors, and Federal highways.

Mr. Rockefeller has the rare ability to compromise when necessary for positive progressive programs. He has the ability to bring diverse factions and diverse viewpoints together for a common cause. He will provide for this administration the balance urgently needed. He is not only well versed in economic matters, but is thoroughly familiar with foreign affairs and has the friendship, associations, and contacts the world over to help our country during these troubled times of international stress and crisis.

I am proud to have been one who suggested to the President the nomination of Mr. Rockefeller. When flying back to Washington with the President from the National Convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Chicago on August 19, I proposed to him that Mr. Rockefeller would provide for his administration a broader base of economic, regional, political, and philosophical balance. I still strongly feel the same way today. I urge the House to vote overwhelmingly for Mr. Rockefeller and thus demonstrate the unity so vital for our country in these critical times. I commend the President for recommending such an experienced, dedicated, patriotic, and devoted American to become Vice President of these United States.

Mr. MARAZITI. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Judiciary has conducted a thorough study and investigation of the qualifications of Governor Rockefeller. During that inquiry many points were covered, and properly so.

It seems to me that the central issue, as we have heard it here today, is the question of wealth, and, more especially, the question of the combination of wealth and political power. This issue raises a very profound question in American politics and American Government. The question is: Should wealth disqualify a citizen from holding public office?

If we accept the principle that it does, we in my opinion establish a very dangerous doctrine. Let us examine this concept for a moment.

If we agree that wealth should disqualify an individual from holding office, we must then ask the next question: How much wealth? A million dollars, $2 million, $10 million, or more?

Mr. Chairman, the point is this: Where do we draw the line?

And then there is another question we must decide: Who shall draw that line? Shall the Congress of the United States draw the line? Shall we amend the Constitution and deprive some citizens of this land from holding office because they are exercising their constitutional right to hold and acquire wealth?

Then we come to another question: Should the same rule apply to all public officials? Should the rule apply to the Members of this House? Should the rule apply to the Members of the other body?

It seems to me that the only reasonable and logical and sensible test is the integrity of the individual.

Fortunately, in this case before us involving the nominee, we have a record of past performance which allows us to judge the nominee. He has had a long term of public service. During the hearings before the committee there has been no apparent substantial conflict of interest shown to exist during the course of the term of office or during the course of the public service of the nominee. If there had been a conflict of interest of any substantial nature, we would certainly have heard of it.

Mr. Chairman, on the question of qualification to be the Vice President of the United States, I feel that the nominee is highly qualified. I say this because the Nation today faces serious economic problems. It seems to me that Mr. Rockefeller is an individual who can assist in the solution of these problems, and that he has the special knowledge and economic expertise that are needed in this period of our Nation's history. I feel he can be of tremendous assistance to the President of the United States and, more importantly, to the people of this Nation.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I urge the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARAZITI. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, if a wealth test is to be established for the Vice President and, presumably, for the President, should not a wealth test also be established for Members of the U.S. Senate and for U.S. House of Representatives?

I understand the Senate is half full of millionaires, and I understand too there are a few millionaires alive and well in this body.

December 19, 1974

Mr. MARAZITI. That is a point I seek to make. If one is going to do it for one public official, he has to do it for all. Where does anyone draw the line, and who draws the line?

Mr. WYDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARAZITI. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WYDLER. I have also noted that one of the arguments raised here today is that Nelson Rockefeller has used his wealth to help himself run for office.

I would like to know of one man who has had any wealth of any kind, and even some who have had very little money, who has not used his personal wealth to help him run for office.

As a matter of fact, this Congress has recognized the right of people to do that by passing laws that have tried to set limits on it, but have recognized the right of people to use money that they have to run for office.

People sitting in this Chamber and in the Senate Chamber have always done the same thing. Democrats and Republicans have done the same thing.

The argument is specious.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON).

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment on the statements that have been made rather extensively in the last few minutes by my good colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey, and my good colleague, the gentleman from New York, about a wealth test.

I wish to assure my colleagues that many of us understand full well that people of wealth, and people of substantial wealth, have every right to run for office, as everybody has, and they should have this right. To imply that all of this concern over the use of wealth is somehow a reason that an individual should not run for office is false. I think that it should be made clear that it was the use of wealth in gifts to public officials that caused the problems many have talked about.

I can imagine, as my good colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. WIGGINS), mentioned in the hearings, if any Member of this House or of the Senate had used his wealth to make substantial gifts to public officials, great concern would have arisen, and with good reason, because of the potential feeling of obligation that might have been implied with those gifts.

For instance, let us take the gift of $50,000 that was given to Mr. Kissinger, on his departure as an employee of the Rockefeller family and on his becoming Chief Foreign Affairs Adviser in the Nixon administration. Would, in fact, that have some tendency to encourage Mr. Kissinger to look favorably on the Rockefeller interests internationally? For instance, let us take the recent reintroduction after many years of American banking interest in Peking: Who gets it—the Rockefeller's Chase Manhattan Bank.

I am sure that Mr. Kissinger did not, in his discussions in Peking, make that a major item on the détente agenda—that is, who would get the first and only American bank in Peking; or while in Moscow in talking to Breshnev suggest which bank might obtain a branch in Moscow. But I did not find this point adequately considered in the hearings. That lack of discussion on this subject disturbs me. What would Mr. Rockefeller do, as Vice President, for the Rockefeller business interests around the world? They are substantial. Are those gifts having some impact on our international relations?

Therefore, to imply that it is solely a question of wealth that is the main means test is incorrect.

The report, "Tax-Exempt Foundations and Charitable Trusts; Their Impact on Our Economy," of subcommittee No. 1 of the House Select Committee on Small Business, dated December 21, 1966, states:

Between 1961 and 1964, Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller provided practically all of the funds of the Government Affairs Foundation, Inc. of Albany, N.Y.—a foundation which received $310,469.49 in gifts (all from Governor Rockefeller) and paid out exactly zero dollars for contributions, gifts, grants, scholarships, etc. . . .

This report goes on to state that this Rockefeller-controlled foundation, however, during 1961 and 1964 did pay out—

$120,000 in salary to Frank C. Moore, former Lieutenant Governor of New York. Additionally, during the same period, Moore received $10,000 per year expense account allowance. The $160,000 paid to Moore during that period represents approximately 57 percent of the foundation's total expenses of $284,193, and about 52 percent of the $310,469 contributed to the foundation by Governor Rockefeller.

This brings to mind many unanswered questions that were not covered in the confirmation hearings—

Exactly what was the purpose of this foundation?

Was it to create a full-time job for Frank Moore, and at the same time provide a tax deduction for Governor Rockefeller?

What functions did Mr. Moore perform?

How many other foundations does the Governor support that pay out nothing in contributions, gifts, grants, or scholarships, but pay high salaries to Rockefeller friends for unknown services?

Clearly, the Democratic Party has nominated substantial people of wealth, the Kennedys, the Harrimans, and many others. Nobody complained about their wealth because there were no substantial questions about the use of money to influence public officials.

Mr. Chairman. I rise in opposition to this nomination for several reasons. One, the opinion polls in this country show substantial opposition, well over 50 percent. It is the same in my district in California. It is a tradition in our country that the President and Vice President have general support of the electorate. Obviously, under these unique circumstances, Mr. Rockefeller has no way of running for Vice President. In the case of Gerald R. Ford, our new President, came from the House of Representatives. Gerald Ford was already elected to a position of leadership by individually elected Representatives with a broad national constituency.

The concern here is that three times Nelson Rockefeller was turned down in the nominating process of his own party for the office of President. As the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. HARRINGTON) has just said, it is his judgment that Mr. Rockefeller will in fact be almost an acting President of the United States. By the words of Gerald R. Ford himself, the President has said that Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President will probably have substantial involvement in the domestic economy of our country, and therefore will be, in some ways, the acting President, as surmised by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. HARRINGTON). I agree with the gentleman. I think he will be in many ways the "acting President" of the United States, and for that reason we must give deliberate thought, concern and carefully contemplate the possible conflict of interest.

On the subject of domestic policy—If the same economic policies which Mr. Rockefeller imposed as the Governor of the State of New York, are implemented on our Nation, there is much reason for concern.

Editor Robert Bleiberg reported in Barron's of December 17, 1973 that—

Nelson Rockefeller has spent the taxpayer's money as if it were his own. Since he moved to Albany a decade ago, New York's expenditures have nearly tripled, while New Yorkers—local businessmen in particular—have been saddled with the heaviest tax burden in the U.S. . . .

Since then, things have gone from bad to worse. In the past five years both the state budget and tax burden have mounted by more than half. New Yorkers remain far and away the most heavily taxed Americans, while the relative decline of the Empire State, political and economic alike, proceeds apace. . . .

Since 1959, the state budget has increased from $1.9 billion to the $8.8 billion estimated for the current fiscal year, ending March 31, 1974, not far behind New York City's disastrous financial spiral. Under Governor Rockefeller, taxes have been imposed or increased at least every other (usually non-election) year; in 1959, 1963, 1965, 1966, 1968, 1969, 1971, and 1972. Since Rocky took office, the maximum rate on the personal income tax has more than doubled, from 7% to a ponderable 15%; last year, moreover, a 2.5% surcharge (temporarily suspended) was decreed. Over the same period, the state gasoline levy has advanced from four to eight cents a gallon, the cigarette tax from three to fifteen cents per pack. A state sales tax, which now runs to 4%, and a host of nuisance taxes (including the notorious "hot dog" tax on meals costing less than one dollar) have gone on the books.

Mr. Bleiberg went on to point out that the tax load for New Yorkers has multiplied almost five times under the Rockefeller administration, from $94 per capita to $460. He also labeled New York as "the Nation's costliest and least efficient welfare State." During the Rockefeller administration the welfare rolls soared from 513,681 per month to 1.8 million. An audit of 9,000 cases selected by the New York State Department of Social Services revealed that 11.3 percent of those receiving AFDC aid were ineligible, and 23.2 percent were overpaid. This works out to be a fraud rate of 34.5 percent.

The Bleiberg commentary said with regard to education expenditures:

Another major rathole, New York State spends $1,584 per pupil in elementary and secondary schools, 17% higher than the second biggest spender (New Jersey) and a staggering 53% above the nationwide average.

He concludes with the observation that—

Tax and tax; spend and spend; elect and elect. For 15 years, the old New Deal formula has worked famously for the retiring Governor, less well for his state . . . Americans may face Critical Choices—but Governor Rockefeller scarcely ranks among them.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I will not vote to confirm.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. Chairman, while we are called upon here today to confirm or reject a nominee for Vice President, I must look upon this action as I am sure many other Members of the House of Representatives will, in direct relation to the highest office within the gift of the people of this Nation—the Presidency of the United States.

Twice within a little more than the last 10 years have Vice Presidents been elevated to the Presidency.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot support the nomination of Mr. Nelson Rockefeller.

I am convinced that should he become President, and in view of his vast, worldwide business and financial involvements, he would be repeatedly faced with conflicts of interest.

It is my opinion that no wall of blind trusts could be built high enough to insulate him from conflicts of interests arising from his operations in this country and abroad.

Mr. Rockefeller is a confirmed internationalist and supporter of the Council on Foreign Relations, the avowed goal of which is a "new world order"—in other words world government.

Time magazine has reported that Chase Manhattan Bank, owned by the Rockefeller interests, and which has an admitted $39 billion in assets, also has 28 foreign branches and "a globe-circling string of 50,000 correspondent banking offices."

As far as I know, there is nothing illegal about these farflung domestic and foreign financial interests, but they are the fertile fields from which, in my opinion, serious questions of conflicts of interest and ethics will inevitably spring.

His record as Governor of New York is scarcely a recommendation for either the Presidency or Vice Presidency.

Editor Robert Bleiberg, writing in the December 17, 1973, issue of Barron's, had this to say:

Since 1959, the (New York) state budget has increased from $1.9 billion to the $8.8 billion estimated for the current fiscal year, ending March 31, 1974, not far behind New York City's disastrous financial spiral.

During the past 15 years, says Bleiberg, New York's tax load has been multiplied nearly five times—from $94 per capita to $460.

This is only part of the record of a

Governor who states it as his desire to bring fiscal sanity to Washington.

Mr. Chairman, I hold no brief for Arthur Goldberg or his ill-fated journey into the New York political arena, but I cannot accept the Rockefeller denial of knowledge of the issuance of a $60,000 undermining campaign document, and then the admission that he did. Neither can I accept the explanations of loans, all too often converted to gifts, to political associates.

In the wake of Watergate, with all its evils and corruption—largely spawned by the misuse of vast sums of money—we need not even a hint of additional tarnish.

Mr. Chairman, I have not supported Mr. Rockefeller in the past in his quests for the Presidency. I cannot support him now.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. I am opposed to Rockefeller on philosophical grounds and I think that there are some things that my colleagues, especially on the Republican side, should consider.

During his political career of the last 20 years or so Rockefeller has followed a policy of tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect. In New York he created a political base through certain powerful vested interest groups which benefited—or thought they benefited—from inflation and debt. For 15 years he ruled New York by forging an alliance of certain sectors of big business and big labor at the expense of the average taxpayer. He is a champion of government intervention at every level and of creating bigger and bigger bureaucracies in the name of "problem solving," although most of the "problems" were created by government in the first place. There is reason to suspect that—like any political machine—the expansion of government at the hands of Rockefeller was used to solidify absolute political control through patronage and other government favors. I share the opinion of Senator GOLDWATER that Rockefeller has used his wealth to buy political power and influence. At the national level the policies advocated and practiced by Rockefeller have led to monopoly capitalism via government regulation, State capitalism, and a reduction of individual liberty. But, now let us look specifically at his record as Governor of New York.

The record is very clear. In his years as Governor the cost of State government in New York increased by 400 percent. According to the Citizens Public Expenditure Survey, Inc., taxpayers in New York State are today the most overburdened in the United States. In 15 years, the taxload of New Yorkers nearly quintupled. During the Rockefeller years the maximum rates on the State income tax more than doubled, from 7 to 15 percent; the State gasoline tax went up from 4 to 8 cents per gallon; the cigarette tax from 3 to 15 cents per pack; and a 4 percent State sales tax was imposed.

The bonded indebtedness of New York also increased 600 percent under Rockefeller. It is ironical that Rockefeller would have driven the State even deeper in debt were it not for the restraining influence of the State comptroller, Arthur Levitt, a Democrat. Levitt has said:

Rockefeller and his staff fashioned devices whereby debt was imposed on the people without their vote. This was done despite the fact that the state constitution forbids the assumption of debt or guarantee of debt without the vote of the people.

Thus the question naturally arises, will Rockefeller as Vice President or President be as cavalier with the laws and Constitution of the United States as he was with the constitution of New York?

As a direct result of these policies New York State lost 400,000 jobs during the years of Rockefeller's governorship. The State's share of the Nation's manufacturing declined from 11.2 to 9.2 percent. Many national companies moved to other parts of the country as the cost of doing business in New York became prohibitive. At the same time the welfare rolls have grown larger each year until, in New York City, 1 out of every 6 persons is on welfare.

President Ford has said that our No. 1 domestic problem is inflation, now running about 12 percent a year. It is reported that, if Rockefeller is confirmed, the President will assign him the task of presiding over the administration's war on inflation. In view of Rockefeller's almost incredible record as a champion of inflation, big spending, and big taxes, this could be likened to appointing the village arsonist fire chief.

Also, I think that we should take a look at Mr. Rockefeller's views on foreign policy. I am particularly concerned about his views on international federalism—or world government. In 1962, Rockefeller delivered a series of lectures at Harvard University which were compiled into a book entitled "The Future of Federalism." In this book Rockefeller argues that national sovereignty and the nation-state have become obsolete. He says that the problems facing our country and the world are simply outrunning the political mechanisms for handling them and proposes federalism between the free world nations as the solution. Rockefeller states:

The federal idea, which our Founding Fathers applied in their historic act of political creation in the eighteenth century, can be applied in this twentieth century in the larger context of the world of free nations—if we will but match our forefathers in courage and wisdom.

Now, I do not think that the American people want the United States integrated into some kind of world government. Americans love their independence and want to maintain it. And, make no mistake about it, there can be no involvement in a multinational federal union without loss of our national sovereignty. Rockefeller's proposal would mean a loss of our national sovereignty and it would make the United States subservient to the wishes of other nations. This proposal is contrary to the principles of liberty for it would further centralize power in the hands of a few. Government problem solving has been an utter failure on the national level; I shudder to think of what would result from a world government trying to solve all our problems.

Regardless of how well intentioned these proposals may be they would only result in the destruction of the individual in society. And let me make a quick comment here; we as a nation must get our own house in order before we can solve world problems. Furthermore, problem solving will occur only by returning to a free society—free men working through free markets—not by government, especially a world government. I urge my colleagues to consider this before they vote today.

There is another aspect of Rockefeller's foreign policy views that I would like to mention. He and his brother David, board chairman of the Chase Manhattan Bank, are strong proponents of subsidized loans to Communist countries guaranteed by American taxpayers. Of all the many questionable purposes for which our tax dollars are spent, surely one of the least excusable is to finance the shipping of U.S. technology and industrial plants to the Soviet Union—and this is a policy Rockefeller has favored for years.

I would like to remind my Republican colleagues that we are being asked to confirm a man who has been soundly rejected as a Presidential candidate by Republican conventions three times, and his support among grassroots Republicans is very low.

For some time now I have been concerned about the leftward movement of the Republican Party. I fear that we have now entered an era where there is no philosophical difference between the leadership of the two major parties. They are both moving in the direction of more and more government, more and more spending and taxation. The selection of Nelson Rockefeller, in my opinion, only confirms this trend. We need at least one political party in the United States to stand up for the principles of limited government and a free economy. It seems we have come a long way from when Abraham Lincoln formed the Republican Party in the name of sacred principle, not false promise, based on the basic premise that slavery was wrong whether through excessive taxation and regulation or overt human bondage.

I hope my voiced objections to the nomination of Rockefeller will be taken in the spirit intended, which is one of constructive criticism of his political philosophy and policies. It is not a personal criticism. It is simply that Nelson Rockefeller represents—in the mind's eye of most Americans—big government, big business, big labor, high taxes, the centralization of power and abrogation of liberty, which were all part of the great society, new deal, paternalistic government approach which was soundly rejected at the polls in 1968 and 1972.

I for one will not be a party to the abandonment of principles nor to the breaking of my sacred trust as a U.S. Congressman. Far too many of my colleagues followed that course of action when Richard Nixon began his voyage to the left after his 1968 election. Had enough people stood firm in their convictions 6 years ago, they may have changed the course of history and started America moving in the direction of more freedom rather than toward more government control. Consequently, I have no choice but to vote against confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DRINAN).

Mr. DRINAN. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with public officials who are charged with a conflict of interest. I myself have been called upon on many occasions to refute some of the alleged conflicts of interest imputed to me. As a result, I was very sympathetic with the nominee when the charge of conflict arose.

I have regularly revealed every opinion and every judgment of mine so that everyone could judge for themselves whether this was in conflict with the right or the best interest of the American people.

Article VI of the U.S. Constitution states that no religious test shall ever be applied for an office of public trust but, even so, every person aspiring to a public office must, in my judgment, justify the fact that he does not have any conflict. A potential conflict exists when a public official can be thought by reasonable people to be trying to serve two masters.

Three weeks ago President Ford signed a bill cleared by this Congress which totally eliminates even the appearance of conflict on the part of Federal judges. Now the law requires that no Federal judge may decide a case when he owns even one share of the stock of a corporation that is involved.

Divestiture and financial divorce were remedies employed by Charles Wilson and David Packard.

The conflict in Nelson Rockefeller does not come from mere possession of great wealth, but from his attitude towards the use of that wealth.

Does Rockefeller admit that the use of this wealth should be subjected to public scrutiny? Does he see the dangers of interlocking corporate directorships? Does he think that energy companies must be more closely supervised? The answer given by the nominee in the hearing to all of those questions is "no."

The burden is on him to demonstrate that in seeking public office he does not serve two masters. Mr. Rockefeller, in my judgment, has not persuaded me that he even sees the conflict created by his wealth.

Let me take three areas of conflict. The elimination of tax loopholes for the rich would cost Mr. Rockefeller a good deal of money. Has he said that he would make the tax laws equitable for all? No. The burden was on him to show that he wants the public interest over his own interest in the tax laws, and he failed.

A second point: Exxon and the oil companies with their fantastic profits are in conflict with the American consumer. Did Mr. Rockefeller state that he would aid the consumer and not the energy companies? The answer is no. He was ambiguous and equivocal about any change in the preferred status now enjoyed by the oil companies.

A third point: The antitrust laws were designed to promote competition and curb monopolies. Their inadequate enforcement right now is a scandal in this country. Did Mr. Rockefeller ever state that there is a serious problem in America because some 100 conglomerates dominate American business? The answer is no. That is the main reason why Senator Gaylord Nelson voted against the nomination of Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. Rockefeller has a conflict of interest, in my judgment, which he has not explained, excused, or eradicated. Consequently, I vote no because Mr. Rockefeller has not persuaded me that he would subordinate his own economic interests to the best interests of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BENNETT).

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, as one of the original authors of the 25th amendment, I think we should be grateful to the people of this country who ratified that amendment and gave to us this vehicle to handle this matter in an orderly and prompt fashion. As a coauthor of that amendment, I am very conscious of its language requiring "confirmation" by a majority vote of both houses of Congress. This is a specific, deliberate, and conscious change from earlier constitutional language providing for only "consent" being needed in the usual Presidential appointment. This difference is important to us here today when we are deciding whether we "confirm" the choice, as distinguished from merely assenting or "consenting" to it.

On this basis, despite the fine qualities of character and ability that Mr. Rockefeller possesses, I am opposed to his confirmation, primarily because I do not believe he represents the mainstream of thought of most Americans. Although he has done well in generosity to the needy and the poor and in successful, progressive, free-enterprise business, and although he has done many good and exemplary deeds in his busy life, he did, in his career as Governor of New York, manifest little or no concern for the onerous burdens placed on the backs of the majority of most middle-income and low-income taxpayers. Today these people, the majority portion of Americans, is now being doubly trounced by high taxes and inflation, the product of excessive government. There is nothing in the hearings that reassures me that Mr. Rockefeller is even conscious of this.

Finally, the hearings clearly show a great insensitivity on his part in the critical area of conflicts of interest. Although I do not believe that great wealth should preclude a person from the Presidency or the Vice Presidency, the hearings indicate to me that there must be great doubt that there is any credible or feasible way in which this man, as able and as dedicated as he may be, will ever be able to eliminate important conflicts of interest, as hard as he may try.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON).

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. PEYSER).

December 19, 1974

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEYSER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in wholehearted support of the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States.

I had the privilege of serving in the New York State Senate for 8 years, 1963-70, during the Rockefeller governorship. For approximately half that period, as chairman of the joint legislative committee on the problems of public health, I had the opportunity to work very closely with the Governor. During that period, and under Nelson Rockefeller's leadership, New York State initiated the Nation's largest health care program for the needy under Medicaid. We initiated multibillion dollar loan programs for the construction of much-needed nursing homes and hospitals. We pioneered in legislation to improve the quality of our State's waterways and enacted stiff, new requirements to improve air quality.

In the 15 years of Nelson Rockefeller's administration, New York State gained national preeminence in such areas as environmental conservation, aid to local government, transportation, social services, consumer protection, human rights, the arts and education. In particular, under Governor Rockefeller's leadership, the State developed the largest public university system in the world to make it possible for some 284,000 students per year to receive a public, higher education. Our State established a State department of environmental conservation, proposed by Nelson Rockefeller, to centralize the State's attack on all forms of pollution.

Before the Federal Government accepted the notion, we enacted a New York State revenue sharing plan, under which two-thirds of every tax dollar collected by the State is returned to the localities and school districts. In addition, Governor Rockefeller was one of the earliest and strongest proponents of Federal revenue sharing. The State, under the leadership of Governor Rockefeller, has undertaken an active program of hiring minorities and women for State jobs, and passed New York's first minimum wage law and no less than five minimum wage and workmen's compensation increases.

Mr. Chairman, the Nation is in serious need of strong and experienced leadership. In 15 years as Governor of one of the Nation's most populous States, Nelson Rockefeller demonstrated time and again the quality of leadership our Nation needs to guide us through these trying times.

There was great preliminary controversy surrounding the initial announcement of the Rockefeller nomination. Some people claimed that he had misused his wealth in the pursuit of political power. These charges did not stand up under scrutiny during the Senate and House confirmation hearings. Nelson Rockefeller was subjected to the most intense and thorough investigation of any individual under consideration for major political office in the history of this Nation. After a careful review of the evidence presented at these confirmation hearings, he even more than ever before has my complete confidence. The overwhelming vote of approval accorded him by the other body on December 10 demonstrates that he enjoys the Senate's confidence as well. I am hopeful that my colleagues in this House will give appropriate consideration to his long and distinguished record of human and social concern and overwhelmingly approve his nomination.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, I have had the opportunity of knowing Nelson Rockefeller for many years. As the Members know, he is a constituent of mine and also, as has been publicly brought out and has always been indicated by my records, Governor Rockefeller as a constituent of mine has contributed to political campaigns of mine.

Over the years I have been impressed with one characteristic in Nelson Rockefeller more than anything else, I have observed this long before I ran for Congress. That characteristic was one of dedication to work, the desire on the part of Nelson Rockefeller to work and to work for the people. This is not just to work for the rich people. This is to work for everybody. Anyone who has ever observed this man out in the streets or in meetings—and I am not talking about during political campaigns now but I am talking about programs he instituted in New York State—programs when he went out and found out what was troubling the people and what was needed to be done to help the people. They would never say they were talking to a man who was insensitive to the needs of the people, Democrats or Republicans, rich or poor, people in all walks of life.

This is a man, if he is confirmed by this body today, as I hope he will be, who will certainly not sit on his hands as the Vice President. He will not be someone who goes out and makes nice talks around the country or who will meet visiting dignitaries and will be just delighted with his great office of the Vice Presidency. As I know him and as others in the Chamber know him he is going to be truly on the job, working and trying his best, whether we agree or disagree with some of his philosophies, he will be doing what he believes is right for the people of this country working together with the President.

I respect the Judiciary Committee and the work they have done. There has been great detail and a tremendous amount of work involved in this effort. The year that these people have had on the Committee on the Judiciary should earn them the respect of all the people in this country. They have reached by a substantial majority the conclusion that Nelson Rockefeller should be confirmed.

That is certainly my hope, because he is a man of great dedication and honesty and concern.

I would also like to point out one other thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me that time.

Mr. Chairman, in all the time I have been in this Congress as his Congressman representing Mr. Rockefeller as one of my constituents, he has never called on me for any action, for any vote other than in a group meeting with other New York Representatives on items that were good for the State of New York. My own stance to eliminate oil depletion and to have windfall profit taxes on oil and other situations, he has never raised a question nor called me about nor said anything—nor would he to influence me because he is not that type of man.

I hope the Members will, as much as they can in their good conscience, support this man and give him an overwhelming victory in this House so this country can move ahead.

Ms. ABZUG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEYSER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Ms. ABZUG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEYSER. I will yield if I have the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from New York has time remaining.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. ABZUG. I was very interested in the last question of oil interests the gentleman raised. There has been a lot of talk about conflict of interest. Governor Rockefeller and his interest in oil companies. I find it interesting that in the 14 years he was Governor, no action was taken against flagrant violations of New York antitrust laws by the major oil companies. In September of this year, for the first time, seven oil companies were indicted by New York State for marketing practices designed to eliminate competition from independent gasoline stations, and for attempting to thwart open bidding for the supply of gasoline to State governmental agencies.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, I would take back the time and say that that type of question at this time has no bearing on the case, and the gentlewoman from New York knows it as well as I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES).

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. HOLTZMAN).

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, considering the fact I followed my colleague, the gentleman from the State of New York (Mr. PEYSER), I was interested in the gentleman's comments that Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President would be concerned with the interests of the people of this country. I cannot help but remember, since he seems to represent Mr. Rockefeller, that during the 15 years Mr. Rockefeller was Governor of the State, almost everybody's taxes went up and yet, curiously enough, the taxes on Mr. Rockefeller's estate at Pocantico, did not go up despite improvements. They went down.

I want to address myself first to the problem of conflict of interest, which disturbs me. It disturbs me because there is no way that this man nominated to become Vice President can avoid the conflicts of interest he will inevitably face—whether he deals with tax policy, banking policy, policy in the Middle East, or any other major issue. He will be confronted with an irreconcilable conflict between his own and the Nation's interest. I do not see that we in the Congress ought to put a position of enormous power in a man whose judgment cannot be disinterested.

I want to address as well, an issue that has not been addressed in this House—the question of integrity—because I think that the Committee on the Judiciary, the House of Representatives and the country as a whole have been brought to a new consciousness regarding the meaning of that term.

The question of double standard has been raised before in this debate and I want to raise it again. I remember not too long ago when all of us were confronted with payments of hush money and claims that had been made for compassionate reasons. Neither the country nor our committee believed those claims. And what were we on the Judiciary Committee confronted with on this nomination? We were confronted with the claim that $625,000 was given to Mr. Ronan in loans because of "pressing family responsibilities and problems," that $100,000 was given to Henry Diamond for "certain pressing family obligations," that $20,000 went to Joseph Murphy for "certain pressing family obligations," that $100,000 went to Mr. Morhouse for "very pressing family obligations."

And that $300,000 went to Alton Marshall for "exceptionally serious family obligations and problems."

Now, I for one cannot suspend all my critical faculties and accept this inherently improbable story. The improbability is heightened when we reflect on additional facts.

First of all, why was Mr. Rockefeller's compassion directed only to persons who served on his personal staff, Republican Party chairmen, and persons who headed State agencies controlling billions in construction?

Why, in the 15 years he was Governor, did he not feel compassionate toward the commissioner of education, the commissioner of health, the mental hygiene commissioner or any trustee of the State university? Did not these people have pressing family obligations as well? Second, the committee has never found any specific fact that proved the existence of any of these "obligations," no matter how "pressing" or "extraordinary."

Third, we were told that these loans were going to be repaid, that there was an expectation of repayment. But, the nominee admitted that he never asked for repayment, he never asked if repayment was possible. And we remember that only 1 out of the 10 public officials made any repayment on any loan, whereas 25 out of 26 private persons receiving loans from the nominee made repayments.

I ask this question in all seriousness: Can we apply different standards to the question of compassion that was raised in Watergate hush money payments and look uncritically at the story we were given under oath in our hearings about all these loans or gifts?

I also want to raise a question about testimony given by the nominee about a $100,000 cash contribution that Judson Morhouse brought to him, and that he allegedly told Judson Morhouse to return. In the Senate, the nominee testified twice about this incident describing the circumstances in vivid detail. He recalled that he was seated "behind the second tier on the dais," that the attorney general and Lieutenant Governor were with him, and that it was the first Republican fund-raising dinner he attended as Governor. He was very concerned to state that this $100,000 ought to be returned to the source because there was something wrong about it. Before our committee, he was confronted, with facts that contradicted his claim, showing that the money had been returned a month before the dinner he described. Faced with the conflict the nominee retreated, claiming he "had difficulty" in recalling the dinner occasion involved. He then placed the incident at a dinner in April—but here again his story runs into trouble. According to our committee's investigation, neither the attorney general nor the Lieutenant Governor were present at this new event.

In view of our recent bitter experience with a President who did not respect his oath of office, we must insist on the highest standards of integrity. We cannot in my judgment be content with the glibness, the sudden switches in testimony and the casual attitude toward telling the whole truth that we have seen from this nominee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES).

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. MEZVINSKY).

Mr. MEZVINSKY. Mr. Chairman, I come here today to exercise my right as a member of this committee under the 25th amendment the second time. For all those who supported Jerry Ford, I would like to direct my remarks, because I too supported Jerry Ford under the 25th amendment because I believe that under the 25th amendment a President has the right to appoint a person of his own party. He has the right to appoint a person he feels is loyal and who can agree with him.

When I began to look at Nelson Rockefeller, my immediate feeling was that, very well, I could support him, but then I began to look at the nomination and what it meant—what it meant to this country and also what it means to the interpretation of the 25th amendment, because I think it is very significant.

If the 25th amendment is simply a confirmation process, then I think the vote in support of Nelson Rockefeller will mean simply that we treat him as a Cabinet officer. We do not give it the kind of scrutiny it deserves, and we do not recognize the kind of unique problem we have with Nelson Rockefeller.

So, what happened? I began to look at and analyze my vote on Jerry Ford and to consider how I would vote and look at the problem of Nelson Rockefeller. Two problems came up; one has been discussed to a great extent, the conflict of interest—and I have expressed that in my dissenting views and the Members can read them in the report that is before them. I want to say this: The problem is not wealth alone. To label it such muddles the water. The question is, Can we insulate that wealth so that the public interest is protected, and can we remove the suspicion that exists?

I would submit that there is no way to insulate Nelson Rockefeller from his vast economic interests. It is agreed that divestiture could not work. Blind trust is cosmetic; so the customary means of insulating and protecting the public interests are denied.

I find the inevitable conflict of interest a situation we cannot tolerate.

The second point I want to elaborate on is the one that has been suggested about sensitivity. This House knows better than any House in recent times the whole impact of suspicion in this country. The people are cynical. They are suspicious; they question their public officials, whether it is a Vice Presidential designee or whether it is a Congressman or whether it is any other officer.

How does the conflict of interest fit in? It fits in because whenever the discretionary power of a Vice President or a President touches on that individual's proprietary interest, the public will always be suspicious. For instance, if this nominee is approved, each time an executive branch decision touched upon a Rockefeller family interest, the cautious and already cynical citizenry would be called upon to wonder whether their interests have been subjugated to the personal interests of Mr. Rockefeller.

There is no way to get around that. There is no way whatever. It is reinforced by what we have gone through with Watergate, by what we have gone through with the resignation of a Vice President and a President.

Now what do we see? We see that Mr. Rockefeller told our Judiciary Committee that before our hearings he was unaware of the depth of the people's concern about the conflict of interest problem. This is a sign of his insensitivity; and it is reinforced by his difficulty in recognizing the questionable ethics involved in the Goldberg book. I think this insensitivity to the concerns of the people was demonstrated further by the fact that it took congressional hearings to open his eyes to the implications and impropriety of lavish gifts to public employees and State and national party leaders. That is what the problem is. That is what bothered me as I began to look at this nomination, and that is what I would submit is a key factor in my decision to oppose confirmation.

If we are to restore the faith in Government, which is the purpose of this Congress, which is the purpose of why we are here, which is going to be the purpose of the next Congress, then I think we need leaders that have the courage and sensitivity to recognize these problems, not individuals in need of public pressure to educate them to the standards and principles applicable in our society—we need leaders that in fact, realize that the public is concerned, and who do not simply react for political expediency, but actually will attempt to lead the way and try to initiate that sensitivity which leads to higher demands on Government and society.

I believe a Vice Presidential nominee, under the 25th amendment, has to inspire others, has to be competent, has to be one who plays a leading role in the task of restoring credibility to Government, because that is the formidable task before us.

Unfortunately, Nelson Rockefeller's inherent and inescapable conflicts of interest, coupled with the insensitivity which I have described, requires that I vote against his confirmation.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, of the many reasons which impel me to vote enthusiastically for confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President, one towers over all the rest.

He is superbly equipped intellectually and politically to deal effectively with the most pressing necessity Western civilization has perhaps ever faced—the necessity for solidarity.

He knows how to achieve solidarity—through a fundamental political federation of the principal nations which prize and protect individual liberty.

Over the years he has spoken for this federalism with clarity and commitment.

We must all agree the need for solidarity is colossal.

It is widely accepted that the present rate of inflation is a serious threat to our institutions and, therefore, to our liberties—and that it cannot successfully be corrected by national policy alone.

It is widely accepted that the energy crisis poses a threat to our institutions and especially to our allies in Western Europe. Like inflation, the energy crisis cannot satisfactorily be met by national policy.

Solidarity is also required in financial policy. The international flow of oil money poses a serious threat to us all.

In short, the times require solidarity far beyond anything these nations have been able to achieve in the past—including wartime. Traditional diplomacy is not enough.

Foremost among nationally prominent political leaders in this country, Nelson Rockefeller has long demonstrated his awareness of this challenge and his conviction on how to meet it.

Ten years ago, speaking in Philadelphia, he cited with remarkable vision the gathering storm over the Atlantic Community nations. And he urged the United States to meet this storm by taking the lead in exploring federalism, Atlantic Union.

As Vice President he will, I am sure, have opportunities to take an even more active role in this exploration.

Who knows? Perhaps destiny beckons. Just as George Washington helped to inspire an effective union of liberty-loving people on this continent, perhaps Nelson Rockefeller will help to inspire an even broader, grander union—helping to bring together people on both sides of the Atlantic in this time of grave peril to our liberties.

Nelson Rockefeller, having displayed extraordinary competence and dignity through weeks of close examination, today will be confirmed as our 41st Vice President.

A better choice could not have been made. He has greatness of spirit, greatness of accomplishment, greatness of promise. Throughout his illustrious career Mr. Rockefeller has proven himself to be responsive to those who have chosen him for leadership. He has enthusiastically devoted almost his entire life to public service.

I am certain that he will approach the Vice-Presidency with the same diligence and sincerity that characterized his years as Governor of New York. His leadership, bonded to that of President Ford, can result in an immense good for our country and indeed the world.

Considering his long record of public service, the level of controversy over his nomination to the Vice Presidency was remarkably modest. Like any other public figure, he has made mistakes of judgment and, with the benefit of hindsight, would doubtless like to recast certain thoughts and actions. Who would not? But the hearings disclosed no abuse of his wealth or position, despite the enormous potential for such that necessarily exists. Instead, he and his family have a legacy of aiding causes and persons in need.

The Vice-Presidency demands a man of unusual perception and dedication. In my view, Nelson Rockefeller is that man.

My personal acquaintance with Mr. Rockefeller began in 1964 when I heard him speak in Philadelphia in behalf of federation as the goal of the alliance of Atlantic democracies. I had read his book on the same theme, "The Future of Federalism."

In his book, Mr. Rockefeller proved that he is a man of vision. He set forth in clear, convincing fashion the fundamental proposition that—

The federal idea, which our Founding Fathers applied in their historic act of political creation in the eighteenth century, can be applied in this twentieth century in the larger context of the world of free nations—if we will but match our forefathers in courage and vision.

More than a decade ago, he realized that—

The problems—of defense and commerce, of surplus and shortage—are simply outrunning the political mechanisms for handling them.

More than a decade ago, Mr. Rockefeller recognized the severe limitations of the United Nations, limitations which have in recent weeks become the publicly stated concern of Ambassador Scali. In Mr. Rockefeller's words:

The United Nations, repository of so much hope, has not been able—nor can it be able—to shape a new world order as events now so compellingly command. The structure of the UN is such that it can function effectively only when there is essential agreement on purpose and procedure, among the five permanent members of the Security Council. But the Communist bloc has dedicated itself to the manipulation of the UN's democratic processes, so astutely and determinedly, as largely to frustrate its intended power and role. As a result, the UN lacks the strength to master or control the forces that it confronts.

More than a decade ago, foreseeing the urgent need for closer cooperation among our allies to deal with these problems, Mr. Rockefeller stated:

The historic choice fast rushing upon us, then, is no less than this: either the free nations of the world will take the lead in adapting the federal concept to their relations, or, one by one, we may be driven into the retreat of the perilous isolationism—political, economic, and intellectual—so ardently sought by the Soviet policy of divide-and-conquer.

Recalling our own early history, he said:

All the problems we face have this in common: we cannot solve one of them in isolation. And in their basic nature these problems are strikingly similar to those faced by the original 13 American colonies—problems of security and of trade, of growth and of order, and above all, the human aspirations of the free individual.

To deal with the plethora of problems confronting the free world, Mr. Rockefeller put forward four specific recommendations:

First: that we develop an understanding at home of the nature and character of the problems that we and the other free nations face—and the significance of the federal idea as a practical framework within which they can be solved.

Second: That leaders throughout the free world work to develop a consensus of purpose and bring forth positive suggestions and recommendations for practical application of the federal idea to the problems before us all.

Third: That informal, intergovernmental consultations by the political leaders of free nations be undertaken to define agreed objectives and develop means to achieve them through application of the federal idea.

Fourth: That these consultations be supplemented by regional and functional conferences to attack specific problems and launch explicit programs.

Out of this, I would venture to prophesy that—sooner perhaps than we may realize and despite the enormity of the apparent difficulties—there will evolve the bases for a federal structure of the free world.

A call for a conference of the NATO allies to explore the possibilities of federation has long been the subject of legislation pending in Congress. In fact, this year, for the first time, the U.S. Senate passed a resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 21, calling for such a conference, and the House only narrowly decided not to bring the resolution up for consideration.

Endorsing an almost identical resolution, Mr. Rockefeller wrote me in 1966:

I am wholeheartedly in favor of the purposes set forth in these resolutions . . . a practical first step toward forging a Union of the Free . . . Enactment would be a historical milestone in the annals of human freedom and world peace.

My hope and prayer is that when he assumes the Vice-Presidency he will actually seek the occasion to foster the growth of the Atlantic Union principle through the advancement of the resolution.

It would be fitting indeed for our new Vice President to lead the U.S. delegation to a convention of the NATO nations once Congress passes a resolution authorizing U.S. participation. I am hopeful the 94th Congress will pass such a resolution. As chairman of the U.S. delegation, Mr. Rockefeller could become the George Washington of this century.

To be sure, there are those who lack the vision to see the enormous potential of federalism, who fear the one great institution which gave us all the freedom we enjoy today. There are those who scoff at the idea as being unrealistic, and doubtlessly would have scoffed at the original union of the 13 colonies. They would be well advised to reread the Federalist Papers and to heed James Madison's sage advice:

Hearken not to the voice which petulantly tells you that the form of government recommended for your adoption is a novelty in the political world; that it has never yet had a place in the theories of the wildest projectors; that it rashly attempts what it is impossible to accomplish. No, my countrymen, shut your ears against this unhallowed language.

Mr. Rockefeller, like all great leaders, is a man of vision, a man unafraid to confront the realities of the world around him. He now enters an administration which, in the field of foreign policy, has made remarkable progress toward world peace by confronting reality and dealing effectively with it. In fact, the State Department, under the leadership of Dr. Kissinger, for the first time endorsed the Atlantic Union resolution as "consonant with the goals and concepts which this administration is seeking to achieve in trans-Atlantic relationships."

Thus, because of the critical problems facing us today—skyrocketing oil prices, faltering world economies, hunger, and the unrelenting challenge of communism—I am encouraged by the accession to leadership of a man who I firmly believe has the ability to help our Nation cope with its problems.

A decade ago, in November of 1964, Nelson Rockefeller made a statement in Philadelphia which is every bit as timely today as when it was first uttered. It bears reprinting, not only because it has stood the test of time, not only because the speaker is now our Vice President, but also because its last sentence tells us something of the unique combination of realism and vision that has now been brought to the highest levels of our Government. I shall include the entirety of Mr. Rockefeller's statement, but I especially commend to you his closing comment:

The future belongs to those who embrace it in the present.

Today, with the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President, our future, and that of the free world, becomes a little brighter.

Text of Mr. Rockefeller's statement follows:

TEXT OF ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR ROCKEFELLER, DECEMBER 1964

We live in a fast-paced world which in a few recent weeks has seen the first atomic explosion in Red China, the fall of Khrushchev, a change of government in Great Britain and our own national election.

We live in a period when—despite the lessons of a half-century in which the West has consumed itself in two great civil wars—the Free World appears to be losing its unity, its common purpose, or a clear sense of direction.

We live in a time when no single nation, not even the largest or oldest, can achieve security or realize its human aspirations by itself and from within its own borders alone.

Almost three years ago, in the Godkin Lectures at Harvard University on "The Future of Federalism," I said that: "The federal idea, which our Founding Fathers applied in their historic act of political creation in the 18th century, can be applied in this 20th century in the larger context of the world of free nations—if we will but match our forefathers in courage and vision." I have held these convictions, and that is why I am so pleased to be here tonight.

It is an honor indeed to join you in celebrating the 25th anniversary of your organization, which has done so much to foster the concept of Atlantic Union—and to join you in tribute to a man of unique vision, selfless dedication and inspiring faith in the power of an idea, Clarence Streit.

I would like to discuss tonight the question of whether the time has not come for this generation of Americans to get seriously to the business of applying the example of our forefathers, in courage and political creativity, to the challenges and opportunities of today's Free World.

II

The problems of today's free nations are not really new. With their independence, the thirteen original colonies faced a similar situation. After ten years of experience under the Articles of Confederation, the States of this infant Nation recognized that they could not achieve security or realize their aspirations until a structure involving political union was achieved.

When the immediate goal of independence from Britain was achieved and the war was successfully concluded, disunity grew among the states. State rivalries flourished. There were monetary troubles, there were tariff wars, there were even dangers of military hostilities between the states.

In the face of this, it was agreed to hold a Constitutional Convention here in Philadelphia in 1787.

At that Convention, the best interests of the individual states lay so clearly in achieving a viable political structure that within 100 working days, the delegates not only agreed on a Federal Union as their goal but worked out the way—in the Federal Constitution—to monetary, economic, military and political union.

After two years of hard-fought debate, the Constitution was ratified and this Federal Union was launched upon a course that has surmounted all obstacles and calamities for 175 years—and has made this nation a leader of the Free World.

The American experience with a Federal Union has significant application to the problems confronting the Free World today.

Among the nation-states of this Free World, and especially in the Atlantic Alliance, there are problems like those of 1787. With the successful conclusion of World War II, the establishment of the North Atlantic Alliance and the economic rehabilitation of Europe, disunity has grown at a progressive and alarming rate. National rivalries are rampant. Monetary troubles are increasing, the threat of tariff wars is growing and even again, there is the danger of military action—as we have recently seen in the Mediterranean.

Today's problems, however, are even more urgent and fateful: the tremendous surge of population together with mankind's rising expectations for a better life; the revolutions in science; the social upheavals attending industrialization and rapid urbanization; the compression of time and space by electronic communications and the jet airplane; the overhanging threat of nuclear weapons; and the commitment of world communism to the destruction of freedom.

For far too long, we have been jerry-building the house of freedom. Our conceptions have been too limited, our goals too temporary, our methods too timid.

In its early days, the Atlantic Alliance was unified importantly by a common fear of Communist military aggression. Overt Communist hostility left little scope for purely national action.

In recent years, though the fundamental objectives of the Communist to "bury" the Free World have not changed, their present tactical emphasis on coexistence has blurred the true dangers. The Sino-Soviet split has further made the world-wide thrust of Communism more confusing, though no less dangerous.

At the same time, Europe's postwar recovery has completely altered the relationship between Europe and the United States, demanding that we be prepared to have our allies share more fully in decisions which affect our common future. This is particularly acute with respect to control of nuclear weapons. We, in effect, have tried to reserve the right to decide unilaterally on questions of nuclear war and peace.

National pride, national rivalries and especially the unfortunate split between France and the United States have greatly weakened the fabric of the Atlantic Alliance. The Alliance has fallen into disarray because the constituent nations are responding to problems on the basis of national expediency rather than on the basis of common interest. We are losing the great and positive vision for a free association of free peoples working together in their common interest.

Such an association must be capable of ultimately embracing all the free nations that wish to join it, but the nations bordering the North Atlantic can and must play the major pioneering role in its creation.

For the North Atlantic nations share common views about the nature of man and just political arrangements. They have achieved a high level of economic activity. They have the means to create a community based on respect for diversity and a shared belief in the dignity of man.

The United States, together with Western Europe, which originated the concept of the nation-state, must set an example in creating a new political structure—as respectful of diversity among nations as Western democracy is respectful of diversity among individuals—a structure capable of achieving a community consistent with national and individual dignity.

Our forefathers pioneered a political framework within which this nation conquered a continental wilderness. Our generation is called on for no less a pioneering act of political creativity and economic construction on an intercontinental scale.

III

In my opinion, this challenge could find its greatest expression in forging a Union of the Free. The practical first step would be to form a federal political structure for the North Atlantic area that would be open to other free nations to join.

The growth and institutions of federalism have differed according to the particular challenges faced in each country, as for example in Canada, in the United States, in Switzerland. But the federal form was chosen for the same reason in each case—the desire to respect the diverse interest and the separate identity of peoples, while giving to them all the strength and protection which come from unity.

This is why I believe that the federal idea can serve as a basis for the achievement of a political structure for free nations. Divided peoples invite disaster. Free peoples united in purpose and determination can make any dream a reality. We must have the honesty and courage to admit and to face the fundamental truth that mere national policies are no longer adequate to our needs. Not only must we face up to this fact, but we must work with our allies to create a structure which enables us all jointly to share in the process of decision-making, not as advisers in American decisions but as partners in the development of common purposes.

Within our federal structure, the United States has maintained freedom, preserved diversity, encouraged initiative, expanded her economy, steadily increased living standards, fostered education, marshalled the resources to protect global freedom in two world wars, and grown in every dimension to a position of world leadership. In Europe the Common Market alone is an inspiring demonstration of what combined efforts can achieve in a larger framework—for it has wrought a revitalization, an economic renaissance in which Europe has progressed from economic stagnation and high unemployment to booming prosperity and a labor shortage.

With this perspective, we begin to get some glimpse of what a Union of the Free, starting with a federal political structure for the North Atlantic and open to other free nations to join, would mean. In my opinion:

1. It would mean a surge of new strength for the forces of freedom and respect for human dignity.

2. It would open unparalleled opportunity to achieve the hopes and aspirations of free peoples.

3. It would provide a framework within which the increased international flow of goods, money, and ideas would make possible the solution of farm problems, the problems of manpower and unemployment, and the availability of equal opportunity for minority groups.

4. It would inspire other free peoples by demonstrating that democracy is the wave of the future, encouraging other free nations to join in the Federal Union of the Free as Alaska and Hawaii have in recent years joined the Federal Union of the United States.

5. It would inspire people behind the Iron Curtain, living in oppressive, stagnant, bureaucratic societies, to look increasingly to a truly creative and dynamic West. In fact, for the first time, whole nations behind the curtain which are seeking to break from Communism could find a haven within the Union.

6. It would provide a framework within which to solve the nuclear weapons disputes now dividing the free world, and thus insure a truly adequate shield for all free peoples.

7. It would marshal such overwhelming strength through unity as to greatly reduce temptations and opportunities for aggression, marking the ascendancy of freedom as Communist unity is declining and demonstrating for all that free men can indeed, in voluntary association, achieve their own full destiny.

IV

Before this vision can be turned into reality, certain decisions must be made: first, agreement on the goal; second, agreement on a time schedule, third, agreement on the means for achieving the goal.

The time has come for us and our Atlantic allies to take the leadership by appointing a preparatory convention of delegates to work out answers to these basic questions. Let us realize that, in so doing, we will be taking the first practical step toward the ultimate union of all the free.

Let's consider each of these steps: first, the goal:

For the Nations of the North Atlantic, there is much evidence that agreement could be reached as to the goal of political union within a federal system.

European doubts as to what the American people would accept seem to go back to this country's rejection of the League of Nations and the period of isolationism, thereafter. This, of course, is understandable, but unrealistic today.

Both major political party platforms this year had planks favoring greater Atlantic unity and partnership. This was reflected in the unanimous opinion of majority party leaders. The Republican plank was stronger and more specific than the Democratic.

In the House of Representatives, closely attuned to public opinion, the House Republican Task Force on NATO Unity is solely concerned with uniting the Atlantic community effectively. It is highly significant that every last one of the fourteen Republican House members who make up this Task Force survived the political landslide last month. In fact, they averaged 56 per cent of the vote as a group, even as President Johnson was sweeping most of their districts, which are scattered from coast to coast.

Congressman Paul Findley, vice chairman of the Task Force and its most outspoken advocate of Atlantic Union, who is with us here tonight, was reelected this year by a majority of 20,000, double the majority he received in 1962—and his district is composed of 14 rural counties in Illinois, some of which Abraham Lincoln represented when he was a Congressman.

On the Democratic side, the late President Kennedy, President Johnson, Vice President-elect Humphrey, the late Senator Kefauver and many others have spoken out for Atlantic unity. As Vice President, Mr. Johnson declared in a message delivered at SHAPE that "the United States is resolved to do everything in its power—and I emphasize the word everything—to enhance the strength and unity of the North Atlantic community."

The need for a viable political structure for the nations of the North Atlantic is no longer an issue that upsets or frightens the American people; on the contrary, its advocacy is taken by many as a measure of our ability to see beyond the immediate problems of international relations to a grand design for world peace and freedom.

As to the consensus elsewhere, I believe the very distinguished membership of the Honorary Council and Board of the International Movement for Atlantic Union is evidence in itself of the strong European and Canadian leadership available.

EUROPEANS WORKING TOWARD UNION

Then there is the Common Market and all the other cooperative arrangements that have sprung up in postwar Europe, which give every indication of the trend to eventual Union on a political as well as functional basis.

Once we as peoples accept through meaningful action the goal of Federal Union, the orientation of national leaders here and abroad will change to such an extent that we will make progress toward the goal much faster than people generally think possible.

As to the second question—the matter of a timetable—the objective should be immediate, the effort should be intense. Time is of the essence.

Third, as to the question of means, it is easy enough to identify the major procedural problems: whether to follow the functional, piecemeal, seriatim approach of the Europeans, or to tackle the political, military, economic and monetary elements as an inter-related whole as in the U.S. Federal Convention; and whether to solve the problems of balance between the U.S. and Europe by first federating Europe, or by going directly to federation of NATO and adoption of the Senate-House balance in representation which has worked so well in the U.S. federal government.

But do we really have to choose? If we know that Atlantic Union within a federal structure is the goal, why not proceed on the various courses simultaneously as each proves useful? In some fields, such as the economic one, union may be advanced through the prior unity of Europe. In other areas, such as defense and foreign policy, common policy may be achieved most effectively through political unity on a NATO-wide basis.

The Federal idea permits great flexibility; it can benefit from the richness and variety of all the institutional possibilities of a pluralistic society of nations. The time has come to look at Atlantic relationships as the start of a broader Union of the Free, which is our ultimate goal.

The design of this structure for the Atlantic Union must provide for effective working relationships with an ultimate participation by the British Commonwealth, the nations of the Organization of American States, Japan, the Philippines, India, and other Asian and African nations.

The triumph of the free is not automatic. Only as we seize our opportunities can we realize our destiny. To those who warn that the quest is futile—or the journey too long—or the destination too uncertain, we must reply that great things have not been done by the timid or the doubting.

America best fulfills herself when she is dedicated to great ideals and noble visions.

The future belongs to those who embrace it in the present.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support for the confirmation of the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States.

I had the honor to be the senior Republican member from New York on the Committee of the Judiciary and, therefore, introduced the resolution to recommend confirmation in the Committee on the Judiciary.

I think we found a lot of things in our searching investigation in the committee, but one of the things we found, beyond any doubt, is that this man has had tremendous experience in State and Federal Government.

I think we all recognize President Ford needs all of the help he can get, and I say to the Members that this country needs the experience and the knowledge in government that Nelson Rockefeller has acquired through 15 years in the State service and through many years in Federal service.

We found another thing out. We found that he was a man of great integrity, and I think this is the answer to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. MEZVINSKY).

We found that he was a dedicated man, a man dedicated to good government, a man dedicated to the traditions and the future of this country. He is an enthusiastic man. I would say, if we have someone who has integrity and experience and is as dedicated and as enthusiastic about public service as this man, then he is a national resource that this country cannot afford not to use.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. EVANS).

Mr. EVANS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me. It gives me a chance to ask a question of those who are on the Committee on the Judiciary about the troublesome gifts and loans that have been alluded to in the report and by many Members who have spoken before me.

December 19, 1974

I think these loans and gifts were most unfortunate, to say the least. We have not had any conversation about the consequences or any other facts or about what may have flowed following the loans and the gifts.

Therefore, I will address myself to any of those Members who are here and who are on the Committee on the Judiciary in order to ask about matters that have not been discussed before. I will address these questions to any Member who wishes to respond.

No. 1: As a consequence of making these loans and gifts, was there any evidence before the committee concerning resulting undue influence or resulting improper acts or resulting improper decisions or resulting unjust enrichments?

I noticed with interest that the gentleman from California (Mr. Rousset) mentioned that there had been a charter issued to a bank in China which the Rockefellers had an interest in, but I have had no other information in this regard.

So I wonder if any member of the Committee on the Judiciary could enlighten me concerning these matters.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Of course, the Governor and Dr. Ronan deny that there was any undue influence involved with the loans and the gifts. So we have received their denials.

Dr. Ronan was, of course, in the position of making enormously important decisions, including the decision leading to the renegotiation of the Triborough Authority bonds at a higher interest rate for the bondholders in order to permit authority funds to be used for mass transit purposes. That negotiation apparently took place at a meeting involving Governor Rockefeller, David Rockefeller, and Dr. Ronan. There is a public interest justification given for that decision. That decision has been attacked and criticized, as well.

All I can say to the gentleman is that this is where we are; that is where we are left. But we do have the undisputed fact as to the parties who were involved, and we know now what has been revealed from the loans and gifts as to the nature of the relationship between the Governor and Dr. Ronan.

Mr. EVANS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, this is the question I wish to ask:

Was there any information that came to the committee's attention showing that as a result of these gifts and loans, any enrichment flowed back to the nominee or to his family?

Mr. McCLOREY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McCLOREY. Mr. Chairman, I asked that specific question of both Nelson Rockefeller and Mr. Dilworth, as well as others, and we understood there was no single instance where the use of the Rockefeller political influence was employed to enrich in any way either Nelson Rockefeller or any member of the family. In addition, there is no evidence that Nelson Rockefeller or his family was enriched in any way by any loans or gifts made by Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. EVANS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I have conversed briefly with the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee on this question prior to this, so I will address the same questions to him that I have to the other members.

Has any evidence come before the committee as to enrichment which flowed to the nominee or to his family, or have there been any improper acts flowing from these gifts or loans which were alluded to?

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, throughout the extensive investigation, and during the course of the interrogation, there has been no such indication and there has been no such evidence.

As a matter of fact, I might state that I specifically inquired of Dr. Ronan regarding some of these items. I did so because of my interest in the State of New Jersey regarding matters that Dr. Ronan might be involved in as chairman of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey. As a consequence of my interrogation, I was satisfied that Dr. Ronan was not enriched, nor was the nominee enriched as a result, in any way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON).

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHBROOK).

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President, or for that matter, for anything. I cannot help but recall the Broadway critic who once wrote, after viewing opening night on the Great White Way, "A creeping paralysis set in which turned out to be the plot." In my view, there has been nothing short of paralysis in the Congress and in the news media in the Rockefeller matter. It amounts to a crass double standard in which most legislators and reporters have fallen over themselves in heaping hosannas on the nominee. It can be argued that time spent on the Rockefeller hearings constitute adequate study. Time should not be confused with depth.

Because of this paralysis, the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller has not received the type of minute attention that the cases of former President Nixon and former Vice President Agnew received. I should think that this body would have learned something from these past several years. Unfortunately, this does not seem to be the case.

I ask all of my colleagues: Have the necessary questions been asked and satisfactorily answered by this nominee? Has this body had an opportunity to conscientiously and unhurriedly study the record of the hearings on this nomination?

Further, has the standard applied by the press and the Congress to Nixon, Agnew, Harnsworth, and Carswell been applied to Mr. Rockefeller? No, because of this paralysis of will, the former Governor of New York has been subjected to a totally different standard.

As a part of this paralysis, an easy out, a wealth herring has been created. Many proponents make it sound like those who oppose Mr. Rockefeller apply a wealth test. This is not so. His wealth has clearly raised questions over misuse of that wealth and power which has come from that wealth but I do not, nor do many opponents I have heard, apply a wealth test to the nominee.

I think it important to maintain the same standard for Nelson Rockefeller as maintained for others. That standard is not being maintained because of a strange paralysis of will.

In closing, I wish to ask my fellow Republican colleagues, do you plan to vote for a man who as Governor was an advocate of those same liberal policies—big government spending, bigger welfare schemes, and other liberal nostrums—that have led this country to its present economic mess? The Republican Party has repeatedly rejected Rockefeller. Public support for his nomination is lacking. I particularly reject the Republican attitude of quote—"If President Ford wants him, we should support him"—unquote. This set of blinders on my Republican friends led our party to near disaster in the sordid Watergate affair and should not be repeated here as a test of loyalty.

At a time the American people are weary of politics, politicians, and past failures of both parties, we should be holding out some bright new hope in this rare opportunity afforded by the 25th amendment. There is no hope for change in a Nelson Rockefeller. He represents the type of spending and taxing politician we should have had enough of. A legislative paralysis has precluded a real study of the nominee. It is one of the reasons for the decline in respect for this great body. I urge a "No" vote.

Many issues have never really been studied. One issue is the military draft. Nelson Rockefeller was No. 10 on his local draft board but was appointed by Franklin D. Roosevelt to a newly created Government post. Was the draft just one more thing that applied to average Americans but not to Nelson Rockefeller?

Another issue that has received little attention is Rockefeller and Chase Manhattan Bank involvement in the World Trade Center in New York City. The New York State government is paying $16 million a year in rent for space in that building while other previously built State buildings are sitting partially or totally empty. Is there a conflict of interest in this matter? I do not know but the possibility has not been investigated.

A third area where numerous questions remain is the case of L. Judson Morhouse. Senator HELMS has pointed out a number of inconsistencies and discrepancies in this whole case and in how Nelson Rockefeller related it. Has Nelson Rockefeller candidly related the Morhouse story? Has this issue been dealt with fully and accurately?

Another area deals with American sovereignty and vital American interests. His views on American participation in

UMI

December 19, 1974

Atlantic Union and his one world stance imperil basic sovereign interests. At a time we should reassert basic American self interests and put our own survival first, he would lead in the opposite direction.

I do not have time to discuss all the possible conflicts of interest nor to ask all the necessary questions. The time limit on debate today has insured that. The spinoff of Rockefeller money into foundations in itself should be studied. But in addition to the questions above there are numerous others such as: Is Nelson Rockefeller in violation of the law by making loans and giving gifts to various officials?

What about the lesser gifts? He has showered smaller—smaller by his standards, anyway—gifts in the $1,000 to $2,000 range like Morton salt, Steuben glassware, mementos, weekend trips in the Poconos—do we have information on these? No.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller. Many in our Nation have come to regard the Vice Presidency as a secondary office, primarily concerned with fulfilling ceremonial functions without too much affect on American domestic and foreign policy.

But those of us who know Nelson Rockefeller know full well that he will never accept such a limited view of the office of the Vice Presidency. For it has always been Mr. Rockefeller's nature, whatever his office, to give more than 100 percent of himself, to spare no effort on behalf of the people. That was the manner in which he conducted 15 outstanding administrative years as Governor of the State of New York. We can anticipate that he will bring this same dedication, concern, and zeal to the duties of the Vice Presidency.

We must not delude ourselves into thinking America can any longer afford merely a ceremonial Vice President. Events of recent years underscore the folly of such reasoning. Our Nation needs, in its second highest office, a man of immense talent, competence, and leadership, capable of exerting a significant influence upon policymaking. The old adage has never been more true; the man who occupies the Vice President's chair stands a heartbeat away from the Presidency of the mightiest Nation on Earth.

Since America plays such a key role in world affairs, the Vice President of the United States must be a man capable of assuming the burdens, duties, and task of such worldwide leadership.

Those were the qualities and criteria President Ford was considering in selecting Mr. Rockefeller as his nominee for Vice President. He has filled the bill admirably.

Mr. Rockefeller's gubernatorial years in New York were a time of tremendous change and progress in New York. The Governor built our State university system from humble beginnings into one of the largest and best public educational systems in the world. The vast network of State-built highways that criss-cross our State are monuments to the transportation achievements of the Rockefeller era.

Mr. Rockefeller's imprint has been left on virtually every facet of New York State: In agriculture, in business and industry, in education, social services, housing, and community development through the State.

Nelson Rockefeller's nomination has been subjected to the most intensive investigation and exhaustive examination in our Nation's history. He has emerged from the House and Senate hearings with his capability and qualifications unquestioned and his integrity unchallenged.

Yes, some of us disagree with some of his positions and yes, there have been errors of judgment in his career, but which of us can claim a flawless record spanning more than two decades in public life? Mr. Rockefeller's errors of judgment do not detract from the overwhelming qualifications he brings to this position.

Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, it is with great pride that I urge my colleagues to support the nomination of my fellow New Yorker, Nelson A. Rockefeller, as the next Vice President of the United States.

Mr. VEYSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VEYSEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, after considering the hearings and the report compiled by the Judiciary Committee and after considering the debate which has taken place on the floor of the House, I will cast my vote in favor of the confirmation of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller to be the 41st Vice President of the United States.

Twice in the past 12 months we have employed the 25th amendment as the Congress has considered a nominee to become the Vice President. House and Senate Committees have probed the nominee's finances and background thoroughly. The investigations have been more exhaustive for these Vice Presidential nominees than for any other aspirants to political office in the nearly 200 years of our existence as a Nation.

I must say that the scrutiny has been unusually severe and painstakingly slow. For example, consider the three-cornered debate provided by the rule under which the confirmation of Governor Rockefeller is being discussed. One can hardly say that the opponents of this nomination are not being given a full opportunity to present their point of view—even though most have been aired numerous times and considered by the respective committees of the House and Senate.

Reviewing the confirmation procedure leads one to conclude that there is a flaw in the application of the 25th amendment. This nomination was presented to the Congress on August 20—only 1 day short of 4 months ago. While the committees delayed over questions of Governor Rockefeller's wealth or possible conflict of interest concerning his gifts and charitable donations, the office of Vice President has remained vacant. Ironically, the exhaustive investigative procedure notwithstanding, if a tragic accident had deprived us of the services of the incumbent President, the Speaker of the House—whose qualifications have never been considered in such a forum—would have automatically succeeded to the Presidency. Surely, matters of such grave importance deserve a higher priority in the future.

Mall from some constituents in California suggest that this is a controversial nomination. Personally, I recommended to the President that he select Gov. Ronald Reagan of California as the nominee. Governor Reagan's experience and undisputed ability as a spokesman for the administration, in my opinion, are ideally suited for the problems to be faced by the executive branch during the next 2 years.

While some oppose the selection of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President, none can question the dedication and perseverance which he exhibited during the ordeal of public hearings following his nomination. The agonizing process of committee hearings, coupled with the innuendo and aspersions cast by those opposing Rockefeller's confirmation in an apparent effort to impugn his character and qualifications, certainly challenged his tenacity. Anyone with the record of accomplishments and achievements compiled by the Governor, but who was endowed with less determination, would surely have bypassed the opportunity to become Vice President to avoid the glaring spotlight of a public investigation into his private life. After all, historically, the Vice Presidency is not well recognized as a steppingstone for aspiring politicians.

Sometimes in the heat of debate, rhetoric receives more attention than facts uncovered by an investigation. The important thing to remember in this instance is Governor Rockefeller's record of public service rather than the sometimes reckless charges hurled by his detractors. Through all the harangue, the Governor's dignity, patience, and humility were noteworthy. In the eyes of most fairminded people, he rose in stature above the ordeal and controversy.

There seemed to be an effort by some to find fault with the Governor because of the immense personal and family wealth, while others would indict him because his gifts and charitable contributions were overly generous. Certainly, this double standard falls far short of the American ideal of fairplay. How one equates wealth with quality of character is unclear. Surely, neither poverty nor wealth should qualify or exclude any person from public service. Likewise, neither poverty nor wealth should be equated with a conflict of interest. In the final analysis, every public servant must be judged on the record of his accomplishments. This is a standard which none can avoid, and no one can justifiably require a higher standard.

Throughout his years of public service, Governor Rockefeller has displayed a sense of dignity and responsibility that is befitting the office of Vice President, and I join my colleagues in confirming his nomination. I extend my best wishes for his success and well-being during the years of his further public service.

Mr. RUPPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RUPPE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, for the second time in little over a year, the Congress is being called upon under the provisions of the 25th amendment to confirm a nominee for the office of Vice President of the United States. It is a tremendous responsibility, and one which the Congress cannot take lightly. For the first time in our history, the country will be led by two individuals who have not been elected to their high offices by a vote of the people. I believe the Congress has admirably discharged its responsibilities in carefully considering both nominations. And I believe that President Ford has made a wise choice in the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be our 41st Vice President. He is a man I have long admired, and who, in my opinion, was destined to be a national leader.

In these days of change and unrest, more than anything this country needs leaders who have broad experience, and Mr. Rockefeller has 40 years of distinguished service to this country. He has experience on both the Federal and State levels. As Governor of the State of New York for 15 years, Mr. Rockefeller managed one of the largest State budgets in the country. He gained valuable experience with our hemispheric neighbors as Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs. During the Eisenhower administration, he served as Under Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and as Chairman of the President's Committee on Government Reorganization. His wide-ranging skills covering four decades have given him excellent credentials for a man who is next in line to succeed the President.

In Governor Rockefeller's testimony before the House Judiciary Committee, he made an interesting observation regarding his motivation, which I believe is worth recalling. He describes himself as "a man who delights in tackling tough problems." The past few years have brought more than their share of complicated problems and questions, and this will undoubtedly hold true in the future. We can ask no more than to have a second in command who has proven experience and who is ready to give his utmost for the betterment of this country and the world. Nelson Rockefeller's public record reflects admirably his motives and experience, and I am honored to have the opportunity to cast my vote in favor of confirmation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. LONG).

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, when Mr. Rockefeller's nomination was first announced, my public reaction was distinctly favorable. But much has transpired in the months since then to change my mind.

George Bernard Shaw once said that when a poor man steals a loaf of bread, he goes to jail; when a rich man steals a railroad, he goes to Parliament.

Stealing, of course, is much too strong and unfair a word to use in connection with Mr. Rockefeller. Nevertheless, if we approve of his nomination, this House will be applying a dual standard to the conduct of public officials: one for persons of ordinary means and position, and another for Nelson Rockefeller.

Granted that Nelson Rockefeller has intelligence, experience, and polish. This man has, nevertheless, violated every standard of morality which the average public official is being held up to in this atmosphere of post-Watergate morality—in his use of wealth to obtain and retain public office; in his dispensing of gifts to exert influence, a use bordering on criminality; in his laundering of expenditures to undermine political opponents; in his hostility toward the enforcement of antitrust laws over areas in which he has an undeniable conflict of interest; in his insensitivity toward the use of covert U.S. influence in other countries; in his failure to have learned anything from our disastrous military ventures in other countries, especially in Vietnam.

I submit that no ordinary Member of this body could survive politically if he had this record and this expression of views.

I regret that I must vote against Nelson Rockefeller.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY).

Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GIAIMO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, congressional scrutiny of Nelson Rockefeller's fitness for the Vice Presidency has revealed enough evidence to suggest that he may have used literally millions of dollars to buy political influence in the State of New York. Moreover, Mr. Rockefeller and the Rockefeller family have billions invested and concentrated in industries and companies whose profits frequently turn on Government decisions. He demonstrates a clear conflict of interest between his great personal wealth and business interests on the one hand, and the making of public policy on the other.

The compatibility of that record with high political office is a question that the American people would normally resolve in a general election. If they wish to overlook it, they can. Under the 25th amendment, however, we confirm—we do not elect—the President's nominee. We have no authority to overlook the nominee's serious conflict of interests. Only the electorate should have that privilege.

On the basis of this record, I intend to vote against the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, it has been said this afternoon that the 25th amendment is a substitute for the process of election, and that this is one of the reasons that we must exercise the greatest care in the consideration of this nominee. We are not only approving him for confirmation to the second highest office of the country, but in the event of an unfortunate possibility we are approving him as a successor to the Presidency itself.

But it troubles me that the process by which we attempt to substitute for election, involving as it does a searching examination of the background of the individual leaves that individual in an enormously difficult situation of running against the standard of perfection.

An eminent political scientist once said that in many American elections for the Presidency, the public examines the two major candidates, rejects one, and on January 20 the other is inaugurated as President of the United States.

Whether that is true or not, the process dictated by the 25th amendment is, I think, much more difficult for the nominee than the election process. We go back over the career of a man who has been in and out of public life for over 30 years, subject it to a full investigation by the FBI and to complete Internal Revenue audits, and then ask anyone who wishes to come forward with pejorative information and testify against him. Few Americans would willingly want to undergo such scrutiny.

Probably few Presidents in our history, if they were somehow brought back to stand again for confirmation could survive this sort of examination of all their official and private actions without incurring bitter criticism and searching questions as to their judgment and fitness for high office.

Think for a moment of those Presidents we have honored in our hearts and whether we would wish to subject them to the severe and often corrosive criticism that this nominee has endured.

I think the examination of Nelson Rockefeller can leave us with an extraordinary sense of confidence that a man so active, and investigated so carefully, should have so few serious questions raised about his conduct and qualifications.

In fact many of his most serious opponents admit that he is highly qualified and experienced that he has had a singular record of public concern, and he has attracted associates of extraordinary talent. But they question, for example, this or that specific decision made while he was for 12 years Governor of the second most populous State in the Union. He has made mistakes of judgment and he has publicly admitted to that. Could anyone so active in public life not have made mistakes of judgment? Could any of us go back over our careers and not wish we had made different decisions at one time or another?

If total absence of fault is to be the standard, the only easily acceptable nominee is a man of no experience, no decisions, no prior responsibilities because only such a person is invulnerable to critical judgment.

He is also questioned because of his wealth and the wealth of his family. Yet it is widely conceded that wealth alone is not an issue, but whether that wealth has been used to abuse public office and the public trust. Some allege that the wealth of the Rockefeller family is so extraordinary that it somehow changes the character of this problem and creates a permanent conflict of interest.

Will this nominee not be subject to the most careful scrutiny which could raise a question of conflict of interest for any public decision he makes? Of course, he will. We can assume the most resolute watchfulness. Beyond that consider the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that despite this great wealth and this long career of high public office was any public act of Mr. Rockefeller proved to have been taken to advance his or his family's financial interest?

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct a question to the gentleman and to the point the gentleman made previously. Of course the nominee will be under great scrutiny. And I might agree with the gentleman, but we have never fully achieved that result when there has been no investigation into the extent of the economic power of his family. We do not know for example whether stocks administered by the trust department of the Chase Manhattan are voted together with their other stocks. How can we be sure?

Mr. FOLEY. I suppose the answer is there can be no assurance if one wishes to assume a corrupt purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FOLEY. If one wishes to assume a nominee is likely to become corrupt it makes little difference whether he is rich or poor. The opportunities for corruption in high office are enormous. We all know that. This is a man, however, who has served in high public office, who has made great and difficult and controversial decisions time and time again, a man of great wealth; yet there is not one documented case in all that record that establishes that he ever acted with a corrupt motive and not one of his opponents comes forward and says that has been established.

Even his most serious opponents will, while claiming a specific action, say there was a public interest for the decision, as well as one that raises a question for the nominee.

Mr. WALDIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WALDIE. Would the gentleman describe the Goldberg book as not a corrupt action of great wealth to enhance public political power?

Mr. FOLEY. I have not read the book. Mr. WALDIE. I am not talking about the book as such, but the attempt to cover up the financing of it.

Mr. FOLEY. The financing of the book, I think, raised a reasonable question. I think the book was erroneous, no question about that.

CXX—2615—Part 31

Mr. WALDIE. Was it corrupt?

Mr. FOLEY. I do not think it was corrupt.

Mr. WALDIE. Was it a violation of the law?

Mr. FOLEY. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. WALDIE. If it was a violation of law, would it not be a corrupt action?

Mr. FOLEY. I am speaking of corruption in the light of those unfounded concerns that the nominees' great wealth was or will be used to advance his financial interest. I do not yield any further.

Mr. McCLODY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McCLODY. It is not corruption to publish a book. Books were not covered in the New York State law at that time. There was nothing dishonorable or corrupt about it. It was a mistake and he apologized for it and that was the extent of it.

Mr. FOLEY. Exactly.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me extraordinary that with this sort of searching inquiry of the life and long career of this nominee, so few specific questions have been raised. I suggest to my colleagues on both sides who opposed the nomination that the record fairly judged leads on to the conclusion that this man is eminently qualified to hold the office for which he has been nominated. He has made mistakes; he has erred in judgment; as have all who serve in public life. I believe he has been faithful to the tradition of public service and the obligations of public trust.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, in supporting this nomination I am painfully aware of the strong disagreement of many respected colleagues. Among those are some with whom I have worked closely in this House and for whom I feel a special administration and regard. I am sorry that I disagree with them.

But I would hope that every Member would cast a vote tonight, yea or nay, on this nomination as he or she best judges the issues and facts at this moment, the time for decision has come. We should not attempt to reserve our judgment to qualify our answer to the Nation. Some perhaps are inclined to cast a cautious vote of no, a careful vote of no, that will, if events later prove the nominee's conduct to be disappointing, give the satisfaction of retroactive wisdom. That is, I believe a tempting course for many tonight; but I hope it will be resisted. I hope that those who vote no are only those who are convinced that the nominee is not suited for the office. Our Nation faces great difficulties at home and abroad and the nominee if confirmed will be expected to play an active role in the search for this resolution. Because of this the question of his nomination deserves a vote recorded not on the basis of personal caution, informed assumption, or speculation but on the basis of our best judgment and conviction.

The country deserves no less.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON).

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. DEVINE).

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Chairman, I have no prepared remarks. I have spent 2½ to 3 hours on the floor today listening to the debate.

We have been without a Vice President for just a little over 4 months. I think it is time for us to remedy that situation.

In addition to being a historic day today, I think that if this does nothing else, it proves that our system works.

We can remember that on October 10 a year ago we had a Vice President that resigned and our then minority leader underwent what was probably the most intensive investigation ever conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He survived that investigation. He was appointed Vice President and he was confirmed. This was accomplished without rancor, resolution, demonstration, or bloodshed.

We have had other events occurring in the history of this country which have been monumental. We had a President resign last August 9, which caused our action to be precipitated to the top level, and we have a President selected rather than elected. We are now in the process of again proving that our system works by virtue of the 25th amendment of the Constitution of the United States—a peaceful, orderly, tranquil transition of the top level of government.

I am not a Rockefeller fan. I was against him in 1960 at the convention; I was against him in 1964 at the convention; I was against him in 1968 at the convention, and again in 1972. Governor Rockefeller was not on the list of names I submitted to the President for consideration for this appointment.

But, what has happened in the meantime? We have been without a vice president for 4 months. The Senate of the United States undertook and had in-depth hearings. They had an investigation and they approved him with less than 10 votes in dissent. Our Judiciary Committee held a series of in-depth hearings. The FBI has conducted another intensive investigation, this time covering 2,800 pages, and they found wanting anything that would disqualify this man from serving as vice president of the United States.

I say I am not a Rockefeller fan. I do not find myself in a position where I can offer an alternative in the event this House should see fit to reject this man. I have no idea who President Ford might recommend in his place, and I am not sure the House would approve whomever that might be; I am not sure that I would.

But, in looking at just two arguments used by the opposition, one has to do with his wealth. One can choose one's friends, but one cannot choose one's relatives. By accident of birth, he is a man who has inherited a great amount of wealth, and of course through his own intelligence he has increased that amount, apparently.

But the other argument, I think, is ironic, and almost laughable. Those Members particularly who have pointed out his record for having run the State of New York on the basis of spending more than he has taken in are the ones I am addressing. I stand second to no one in this House in being a conservative or voting against deficit spending, but the very persons who point this out—some of them from New York—say that he ran as a candidate who would not spend any more than he took in, are the same ones here that have a miserable track record as far as blowing the budget out of sight and in deficit spending and spending beyond income.

So, I think it ill behooves those Members who point out that as a disqualification. It would disqualify many—I would say a majority—of the Members of this House if that were the test.

I find myself in a position where I think there is only one choice, and that is to vote for the confirmation of Governor Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. WYDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEVINE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WYDLER. Mr. Chairman, just to touch on something else in respect to the gentleman's remarks, I think it is only fair to point out that the comparisons that have been made on the floor when we are told that when Mr. Rockefeller became Governor, taxes were so much more, those comparisons are really unfair unless they are put into perspective of the fact that he was Governor for 15 years, and those were 15 years in the life of our country when the budgets of every State in the union went up tremendously, and taxes in every State of the Union went up tremendously.

I think if we look at the track record over a 15-year period in most States of the Union, we will see that the record he achieved as Governor was not so far out of line. I think that should be put in the record and put into perspective.

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DELLUMS).

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee, I rise in opposition to the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller. I have some prepared remarks here, but I would like to deviate from those remarks and point out to this group that, as has once been stated by a great human being, "The price of freedom is eternal vigilance."

You and I must be extremely vigilant at this moment. We face an unprecedented, unparalleled moment in the history of this Nation, a Nation that is ostensibly democratic.

We are now about the business of confirming the second highest officer in this land, totaling two people, not duly elected and directly elected by the people of this Nation.

If it were within my power, I would reject the ability of the 93d lame duck Congress. Many of those who sit in this room are defeated candidates who faced the American people and were rejected for their policies and their stances and their positions. I would say we should let the 94th Congress, who have been the most recent people to stand before the American people to be exonerated or defeated, in terms of their stances and policies, make this decision. But I am not vested with that power, and we must now face this moment.

I would like to make a few comments at this moment upon statements made by several of my colleagues who spoke so eloquently of Nelson Rockefeller. Many have taken this well and said it is not wealth we are talking about. I agree with that, but let me advance this position. It is my belief that if there is anything at all we should have learned over the last 2 years in a series of hearings is that Government and Government officials with awesome power run wild, unchecked by the democratic process, breeds extraordinary corruption.

I would further advance that an individual with power unchecked by the democratic process has the awesome potential for corruption. Extreme wealth in the hands of an individual or a few individuals breeds awesome power, power that perhaps even Nelson Rockefeller does not understand. He understands the power of a million dollars, but does he understand the awesome power to corrupt Government officials, the power to corrupt Government, the power to corrupt or affect universities, making decisions on what research shall be conducted for what purpose and by whom, to corrupt or affect public policy and even social agencies?

It is my belief that awesome wealth that breeds that kind of power concentrated in the hands of a few people or one individual is antithetical to the democratic process, and that is the basic question you and I must come to grips with—the issue we must consider.

When we couple that awesome, extraordinary power with the ability to corrupt, with the awesome power of occupying 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, we have a potential for extreme danger, for that kind of awesome economic power permeates throughout our entire political system. You and I have not checked it. What bill have we passed, what decision have we made that checks those millions and millions of dollars of a Nelson Rockefeller? We have not assumed that ability, and we stand in this well fraudulently assuming that we have and will. We do not want to even pass tax loophole laws that create more Nelson Rockefellers. The price of freedom is eternal vigilance, and you and I have the responsibility to protect the American people.

Nelson Rockefeller could not be elected to anything nationally in this country, and we both know it. Why do we stand here, talking about all of the wonderful things about Nelson Rockefeller when it has been clearly pointed out that he has affected agencies, he has affected people, he has affected Government.

Nelson Rockefeller potentially is one of the most dangerous human beings to rise to political office of this country.

Oppose Nelson Rockefeller and speak to the will of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, for the second time in 15 months we are forced to rely on the 25th amendment to choose a new Vice President, a procedure forced upon us by an administration so scandal ridden that a Vice President and a President were both forced to resign in disgrace.

The procedure of congressional selection set up by the 25th amendment does not allow the people a direct vote in the selection. Since this provision is at best a poor substitute for a direct vote on the Vice President, each Representative should seriously consider the needs and interests of his district and of the Nation in his vote. Unless we take these responsibilities seriously, the people will have no role at all in this election.

Therefore, I consider it a privilege to represent the millions of Americans who oppose the election of Nelson Rockefeller, by casting my vote against his confirmation. When the holders of the Nation's two highest offices are not elected by the people—an unparalleled situation in the history of the Republic—it calls for some extraordinary thoughts and extraordinary measures. If instead of playing 1976 Presidential politics we are seriously committed to trying to bring this Nation together, then we ought to aim for unity. The best way President Ford could have demonstrated that was to have moved into a bipartisan Government to take care of the Nation until the American people make their own decision in 1976. The President has obviously rejected that course. In fact, he has chosen a man whose past record creates severe doubts about his personal ability to contribute to national unity. Once again, an historical opportunity has been misjudged and mishandled.

By confirming the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller, Congress is agreeing to an unprecedented concentration of economic and political power in the hands of a man who has shown that he does not easily distinguish the two, just as he sometimes forgets the distinction between public and private power. This concentration and consolidation occurs at a time when the United States should be reducing and dispensing power, not the reverse. Mr. Rockefeller and President Ford may not understand this, since they supported the Watergate Nixon down to the final moment, but the rest of us should remember and act on what we learned. We do not have to look closely to see that air of untouchability and invulnerability that led Nixon to abuse his office so seriously. Let us not make the same mistake twice.

Mr. Chairman, a number of matters recently have been brought to public attention which call into question Rockefeller's judgment: His involvement in the publication of a derogatory book on Judge Goldberg, his lack of candor and leadership in the Attica prison riot, and his lack of sensitivity to the serious legal and ethical questions involved in his substantial gifts and loans to public officials while Governor of New York.

stantial gifts and loans to public officials while Governor of New York.

The majority of the American people disapprove such poor judgment on the part of Mr. Rockefeller. Confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller would not restore public confidence and trust in government officials. Last year we elected a President, even though we were deceived about such important matters as the possibility of a pardon. But it is with this kind of seriousness that we should vote today.

Everyone knows that Nelson Rockefeller could not possibly win a popular election to the Presidency. I believe that any confirmation would be much more legitimate if it were done by the Members of the 94th Congress rather than the 93d Congress, since they represent the most direct, recent expression of the will of the American people. This is especially true since the rush to have Rockefeller confirmed by this lame-duck Congress has led to serious procedural irregularities.

The House of Representatives has therefore, a great responsibility to the American people today: Let us not let them down.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN).

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Chairman, the confirmation of a Vice President of the United States under the provisions of the 25th amendment is obviously a critical and serious responsibility for each of us. Just over a year ago we found ourselves in such a situation, and I joined with nearly all of my colleagues to confirm the nomination of Gerald Ford to hold that high office.

Today we are confronted once again with the responsibility of the selection of a man to serve in the Nation's second highest office and potentially, in our highest office. But this time, in nearly every detail, the circumstances are entirely different.

A year ago, the nomination for a successor to the Vice Presidency was presented to us by a President who had been twice elected to his post by the citizens of the United States, the second time in 1972 with an overwhelming mandate. Today, we are considering a nomination submitted by a President who has never received the electoral endorsement of any voters outside of the single congressional district in Michigan which he represented for many years.

A year ago, the nominee was a man of modest means who enjoyed a reputation for honesty and sincerity throughout his political career. Today, the nominee is a man of such considerable means that even he was hard-pressed to detail the full extent of his wealth. Moreover, facts unearthed in the course of committee investigations reveal that this nominee has made substantial portions of his wealth available to a multitude of political associates in the form of loans or of gifts. And in at least several instances, it has been shown that he was, to put it mildly, not entirely candid about his background and conduct under committee questioning.

I might add that the fact of Mr. Rockefeller's wealth does not trouble me as it does some of my liberal brethren in this House. His specific use of his wealth in given instances is another matter.

A year ago the nominee was a well-known fiscal conservative who had been a part of the mainstream of his party throughout his career, and possessed a clear commitment to sound financial management of government affairs and fiscal responsibility. Today, the nominee is a man who has spent his entire political career outside of the mainstream of his party and who has been rejected formally in three separate bids for the Presidency by his party. He now seeks to attain by appointment what he could not obtain by election.

In addition, his record as Governor of the State of New York shows him to be a man with little regard for responsible fiscal policy who repeatedly has increased the size of the State budget and who found ways to balloon the State's long-term indebtedness without any regard for a constitutional provision requiring that such increases be approved by the voters in referendum.

A year ago we were called upon to consider the nomination of a man who was demonstrably in tune with the essentially conservative electoral mandates expressed in the past two national Presidential elections in 1968 and 1972. Today, we are pondering the nomination of a man whose record of liberalism and devotion to the increased power of big government is nearly unparalleled in either party, and who is closer philosophically to the defeated candidates in the Presidential elections of 1968 and 1972. And this nomination comes at a time when public opinion polls show more than half—59 percent, in fact—of the American people consider themselves basically conservative in political philosophy.

At least one other thing is different today than it was last year. Today, I shall have to cast my vote on confirmation in the negative; I shall vote "no" on the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to become Vice President.

THE 25TH AMENDMENT

When the 25th amendment to the U.S. Constitution took effect on February 10, 1967, few ever dreamed that only a few years hence the Nation would be governed by two appointed individuals who had never been subject to the popular vote of the people. Never before in our history have we lost both the President and the Vice President during a single term of office. The seriousness of this situation must give us special pause as we consider the nomination before us.

In any case, I do not believe that the language of the 25th amendment in any way requires us to give our automatic blessing to the nomination to fill the Vice Presidency, giving consideration only to that nominee's fitness to hold office. Nor do I believe that the legislative history of the amendment suggests that we ought to "rubber stamp" the President's choice unless we can identify serious and grave transgressions which show him to be unfit.

Rather, I think that it is up to the Congress, presently the sole source of legitimacy under the doctrine of popular selection of the Nation's chief executives, to attempt to insure that the individual who assumes the Vice Presidency is one who will carry out the electoral mandate expressed by the voters in the most recent Presidential election. Today we are asked to speak in the people's stead. I believe that it is abundantly clear that Mr. Rockefeller does not meet the test.

Moreover, the evidence is substantial that he could not win the support of a majority of Americans today. I have no doubt that he could never win a majority of votes in the district which I have the honor to represent. In New York, where voters know him best and where he served as Governor for 17 years, a recent Yankelovich survey found that Mr. Rockefeller "was the least popular public figure" in the State among those voters surveyed. The most recent available Harris poll, based on interviews conducted during the first week in November, showed that 43 percent of those surveyed nationally were opposed to his confirmation, and only 39 percent were in favor.

I am not suggesting that we should approve or reject a nominee for the office of Vice President simply on the basis of the latest public opinion polls. But I do intend to argue that we ought to pay more than passing attention to the weight of public opinion in this case. This is especially important when we consider that we are acting in lieu of a more direct expression of the public's wishes in the selection of one who, as we learned so painfully over the past year, could easily become the most powerful man in the country with little or no warning.

PUBLIC DOUBTS JUSTIFIED

There are several reasons for grave public doubt about the ability of Mr. Rockefeller to operate the Federal Government in the best interests of all of us, as citizens and taxpayers.

First, it is apparent that the taxpayers of New York did not fare well under the many terms of the Rockefeller administration. Between the time when he took office as Governor in 1959 and the end of the last fiscal year, the amount of money spent annually by the State government there went from $1.9 billion to nearly $9 billion.

Under Mr. Rockefeller, taxes were raised in the State at least every other year, and the maximum rates on personal income tax more than doubled from 7 to 15 percent. During his tenure, the State gasoline tax went from 4 to 8 cents a gallon, cigarette taxes climbed from 3 cents to 15 cents a pack, and a 4-percent sales tax went on the books. When it is all added up, the tax load in New York went up by almost five times while he was in office.

Through the efforts of Mr. Rockefeller and his inventive staff, ways were devised to obligate State funds far into the future without the inconvenient and sometimes perilous need to put such a claim against future revenues before the people in the form of a constitutionally required referendum.

Thus, although the people of New York have approved only $3.4 billion in bonded indebtedness through referendum, they owe another $7.7 billion in long-term obligations which were never submitted to the electorate for approval. As a result, the State had to pay more than half a billion dollars in debt service last year, which represents double the figure of just 5 years earlier.

The future of the people of New York is thus heavily mortgaged for many years to come, and I cannot help but wonder how any Members of this House could entrust the future of the entire Nation to the man who had handled the affairs of one of our largest States in so cavalier a fashion.

Where has all of the taxpayers' money gone? As one Empire State cynic put it, "Nelson spends the taxpayers' money as if it was his own." From enormously expanded social welfare programs to the incredible monument to what has been called his "edifice complex," the multi-billion dollar Albany Mall, he has indeed spent public moneys freely. The rate at which he and his associates found new places to spend that money is unmatched even by Uncle Sam. In an era when there is a growing recognition that such governmental spending policies have been the major impetus behind today's rampant inflation and faltering economy, it seems incredible to me that we should be on the verge of installing as Vice President, and possibly President, a man who can only be described as the dean of the Nation's big spenders.

The examination of the miserable fiscal record of Mr. Rockefeller gives us no comfort when we consider the "informal sources" at the White House who envision this man in the role of the chief domestic policy assistant to the President. Given Mr. Rockefeller's personal temperament and his past record on policy matters, the prospect of his control over our domestic affairs is chilling and, indeed, dangerous. It is also totally at odds with the President's own profession of fiscal conservatism.

In all fairness, it must be admitted that Mr. Rockefeller has been at least as free with his own personal financial resources. But as we have seen in the revelations of recent weeks, Mr. Rockefeller's generosity provides more reason for doubt than for enthusiasm.

The examples of questionable practices in this regard have been well developed in hearings held by the House and Senate, and I do not intend to reiterate the details here. But in my opinion, there were altogether too many instances of subordinates in State government who had received large gifts from the Governor or who owed him outstanding debts.

The problems which this sort of activity might generate if Mr. Rockefeller were to become Vice President, or even President, are obvious. Suppose he were involved in making a decision regarding an investment in the Soviet Union to be financed by the Chase Manhattan Bank, owned by his brother, and the Export-Import Bank? Would he make the decision himself, or turn it over to Secretary of State Kissinger, to whom he has given a gift of $50,000?

THE ABORTION ISSUE

Mr. Chairman, perhaps some of the gravest reservations I have about Mr. Rockefeller apply to his professed and even arrogant disregard for the right to human life. His personal support of liberalized abortion laws in his native State has turned New York into the abortion capital of the Nation where hundreds of thousands of innocent children have been deprived of life. He personally blocked the popular expression of the people and the New York legislature by vetoing a bill which would have preserved the right to life. I know that many of my colleagues would rather ignore the issue of abortion and Mr. Rockefeller's view of this matter, but on an issue of such fundamental importance we should not be tiptoeing, but rather standing firm for the right to life. I note in passing that Mr. Rockefeller's pro-abortion stand is at serious variance with that of the President who nominated him for the post we are considering today, yet another curious contradiction.

THE TWO PARTY SYSTEM

While political considerations in the sense of partisanship should have no place in our deliberations today, I would like to say a word or two to my Republican brethren. I have spoken with many of you privately and based on my observation, I would suspect that if the vote today on this nomination were by secret ballot, a strong majority of those on this side of the center aisle would vote against Mr. Rockefeller. That would be appropriate because, as I have detailed, his record is not consistent with the majority philosophy of our party, or, as I understand it, with the express wishes of the American electorate. But my Republican colleagues, consider what you do by your acquiescence in this nomination. If you vote to approve this man, you raise the specter of the further dissolution of our party. I do not suggest a third party is inevitable, only that millions of Americans would like to see a second party which presents a conservative philosophy; and this comes at a time when less than a quarter of the registered voters are willing to be identified as members of our party. This nomination makes the future success of our party highly unlikely in the foreseeable future, as I see it.

Mr. Chairman, these are the principal reasons for my decision to vote against confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President. Although my philosophical differences with him go much deeper, I have not made my decision on that basis alone. Instead, I am voting in a fashion which I believe is in the best interests of the people of my district, of all Americans, and which is consistent with my own conscience, and my oath of office. I could not do otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. RANDALL).

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman from Wisconsin's yielding me some time.

I realize that I shall not be as articulate or as eloquent as those who have preceded me. Therefore, the question may be asked: "Why don't you just revise and extend your remarks?"

The answer is that I believe this is a matter important enough that I do not want to go home without being able to say to my people that I actually spoke out on the floor—and that I participated in the debate to represent them in this confirmation vote.

As one of the preceding speakers has put it, I intend to cast a cautious and a careful "no" vote on this confirmation.

I will try now to recite some of the reasons.

None of my reasons are partisan. I have never been bitterly partisan.

I was one of the few—about a half dozen as I recall it—who took the floor on this side of the aisle to speak in behalf of Jerry Ford. But I knew Jerry Ford. We all knew Jerry Ford. We could take that man on faith.

We cannot do the same in this case. We cannot take Mr. Rockefeller on faith. I do not know him, and most of us do not know him.

This brings me down to some specific reasons why I have doubts on this confirmation. During the Rockefeller investigation in the other body, someone asked me "What do you think of the investigation—Is it thorough enough?" I answered "They have not scratched the surface."

That view is my present view—we have no more than scratched the surface in the investigation of the vast Rockefeller financial interests.

I have no criticism for our committee. They were pressured by time. I think they felt we should act on this confirmation before the arrival of a new Congress. But the facts are we do not know nearly enough about the almost unbelievable wealth of Mr. Rockefeller or his family who by their own statement work together as a unit.

What we are doing here today is most important for the reason that we may in fact be confirming not just a Vice President but President, because every Vice President is but a heartbeat away from the Presidency.

What is the unusual significance of our procedure tonight? Well, for one thing we are not simply proceeding like the Senate in a matter of advise and consent. We are doing a whole lot more than advise and consent. We are doing something positive, not just suffering something to be done. We are approving a nominee for Vice President.

If you please, we are approving an unelected Vice President named by an unelected President. In all of the history of this country this situation is indeed unique.

In my judgment what we are doing is very different from legislating. This is not a legislative matter. Each Member of this House represents about 500,000 constituents. Today we are not voting as Members of the Congress, as we would vote on legislation, because I repeat this is not a legislative matter. Some have said we are acting as surrogates. I have never liked the word "surrogate." Rather, I would say we are acting as delegates or agents. Better to say, we are filling the role of office exactly as our name implies—we are acting as representatives of the people. If we are going to represent the people, then I believe we must reflect their views and attitudes toward Mr. Rockefeller.

What then is the attitude of the people? The nationwide polls as reported by Gallup show about 45 percent against confirmation and 35 percent in favor of confirmation.

A while ago, one of my colleagues mentioned the Father of our Country, President Washington. I too wish to refer to a quotation that the Father of our Country made to the Continental Congress when he said "If we only please the people, and what we do we disapprove ourselves, then how can we defend our work?"

In this instance, I have no problem to please most of my people and at one and the same time approve, myself, what I am doing. This would satisfy the dilemma President Washington mentioned. I feel sure I represent the majority of my people when I cast a negative vote today against this confirmation. During the campaign this confirmation became somewhat of an issue.

As far as our mail was concerned, the count was about 30 to 1 against confirmation. I do not know the experience of other Members, but in our office we received exactly two letters urging a vote for confirmation.

Tonight, I reflect the views of my people, but more than that I personally believe that this confirmation is not in the best interest of our country at this time. The one overriding and most important reason to be against confirmation is the conflict-of-interest issue.

I understand that today the rule was enforced that a Member cannot quote from or refer to notes. Yet, I am going to do this, briefly, as I read a quotation from a recent newspaper story which stated that if Mr. Rockefeller were to later become President, and if he were to disqualify himself in all of those areas in which the Presidential discretionary power crossed the path of his family's economic interests, he would be just hopelessly hamstrung, and he could not act at all. He would be, in other words, unable to act on almost any decision if he wished to be free of conflict of interest. The extent of his conflicts is inconceivable and unprecedented.

Well, time is running on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, someone has said earlier that if a matter involving energy or oil would require a decision by Mr. Rockefeller at 8 a.m., he could not act if he were to remain free of a potential conflict of interest. Another decision might come on chemicals at 9 o'clock. Then a decision on banking at 10 o'clock, and a decision on transportation, either air or rail or water 11 o'clock. If he respected the existence of a possible conflict of interest—he could not make the decision. He would be literally hamstrung.

Well Mr. Chairman, it all comes back to the fact that all of these hearings were punctuated with questions about this vast wealth. It is not a question of his personal wealth alone. It is a question of the Rockefeller empire that involves his brothers. Such an accumulation of wealth has seldom, if ever, been seen before in this country. It is not found elsewhere in our country except within this family.

Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the gentleman from Wisconsin for yielding me the additional minute. I conclude by saying that because of the background of Mr. Rockefeller, and because of the enormous wealth, which seems almost limitless, and because of the constant potential that exists here for a conflict of interest he should not be confirmed. We should not confirm the merger if you please, of this great wealth and such great political power. For this paramount reason I shall vote "No" on the confirmation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. McCLOSKEY).

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. PRITCHARD).

Mr. HANSEN of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. HANSEN of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, as I approach the conclusion of my 6 years service in the Congress, I am grateful for the opportunity to cast an affirmative vote for the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be the 41st Vice President of the United States. This is one of the most important votes of the thousands I have cast in those 6 years. During this time I have seldom cast a vote with such complete confidence that it will best serve the interests of our country. There has never been a greater need for the combination of experience, ability, and exceptional leadership qualities that Governor Rockefeller will bring to the office of the Vice-Presidency.

Because the quality of national leadership is of such fundamental importance to the lives of our people and the preservation of our Republic, the decision of who shall govern is of paramount concern.

Following the prescribed constitutional procedures under provisions of the 25th amendment, Governor Rockefeller has been subjected to one of the most thorough and careful investigations of any Vice Presidential nominee in our history. Coming at a time of deep national concern over the conduct of Government, congressional scrutiny has been aggressive and uncompromising.

The outcome from these congressional hearings conducted during a 4-month period has provided an unprecedented amount of information upon which to base a decision of confirmation.

A careful consideration of the substance of these hearings has strengthened and reaffirmed my long-held conviction that Governor Rockefeller possesses the dedication, ability, and integrity that will make him a great Vice President. My vote of conscience for his confirmation is a vote which I believe will strengthen and maintain the ideals that have made this country great. It is also a vote that will help give a man of outstanding qualifications and past achievements the chance to serve this country at a time of uncommon challenge and opportunity.

Mr. MARTIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MARTIN of North Carolina. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, today I will cast my vote for confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Rockefeller was not my first choice for the Vice Presidency, but in the final analysis the selection of a Vice President under the 25th amendment is up to the President, just as the choice of a candidate for Vice President at a nominating convention is pretty much up to the candidate for President. Under the 25th amendment, the Congress is called upon to confirm or reject the nominee on the basis of his fitness for office. I believe that in such a situation the nominee should be confirmed unless the investigations lead to a conclusion of unfitness.

My political philosophy is not the same as that of our new Vice President. His political judgment on some questions has been different from mine. But I would have to say the same about President Ford, former President Nixon, Senator GOLDWATER, the late President Johnson, and anyone else in public life. Being "for" someone does not mean—it cannot mean—always agreeing.

Many of the objections raised against the Rockefeller nomination center on his having run a very tough campaign for reelection as Governor in 1970 against a very tough, aggressive liberal. I have been in tough campaigns and, while I would have done things differently from the way then-Governor Rockefeller did them, I do not consider what he did to be disqualifying. Other objections center on the toughness with which he crushed the prison revolt at Attica. Under the crisis circumstances at Attica, and in spite of the tragic loss of life, I believe he was right to break the revolt, and do so quickly.

Some have objected to the wealth of the Rockefeller family and of Nelson Rockefeller's personal wealth. He is by no means the richest of Americans. J. Paul Getty and the late H. L. Hunt account for individual fortunes probably as large as the whole Rockefeller family fortune. Then there are DuPonts, Mellons, Harrimans, Kennedys, and others. Wealth itself—or the lack of it—must never be a bar to public service. Nelson

Rockefeller's wealth is an accident of birth, and has been maintained by good management. And much of it has been given away and more is to be donated to charity and the Nation according to his testimony. He has regretted some donations, a fact that is not surprising considering how many there have been. Some people with fortunes choose to simply wallow in it. I am impressed by the philosophy of the Rockefellers: "Great wealth imposes great responsibilities." Universities, churches, hospitals, and museums stand as evidence of the exercise of their responsibility.

In listening to the arguments against the Rockefeller nomination coming from colleagues in my own party, I am reminded of a story describing judicial reasoning. It seems a young lady was being propositioned by the boy next door. She recoiled and objected, saying, "I'll give you three good reasons why not: First, you'd lose all your respect for me; second, I'd lose all my respect for you; and, third, it always gives me a headache." Sometimes you have to wait a while to get to the real reason why you get a negative answer.

In the Rockefeller case the real reason is that in 1964, Governor Rockefeller ran for President against someone I admire greatly and whom I supported in 1964. We cannot leave the fellow in the dog house forever just because he ran and lost. That attitude would require that, were Senator GOLDWATER the nominee instead of Governor Rockefeller, every Democrat in the House would be voting "nay."

As Governor of New York, our new Vice President was tough on crime and drugs, to his credit, albeit to the consternation of the so-called liberal establishment. When he ordered a hard-nosed policing of the State's welfare rolls, editorial hearts bled as expected. Instead of running up State operating expenses, he engineered a system of self-liquidating revenue bonds to finance projects from college dormitories to parking lots. He was a dynamic Governor. He stepped on a few toes. He ruffled a lot of feathers.

One cannot expect to agree with an office-holder all the time and I expect to have my own toes stepped on sometimes, and my feathers sometimes ruffled. But, not only does America need a Vice President, but America needs public officials who have the guts to disagree, to step on a toe or two, and ruffle feathers when that is called for.

I wish Nelson Rockefeller well and call on all Americans to unite behind the new team.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Chairman, coming from Washington State, which is a long way from our Capital and New York, I feel I can talk about Nelson Rockefeller's national reputation, and the qualities which he will bring to National Government. But others can do that, too, and with more eloquence, so let me just stick to basics. I think that Nelson Rockefeller is not only our best choice for Vice President; he is our obvious choice. Let us be frank. If we were going to sit down and choose a Vice President on our own, we would agree that, first, of course, he would have to be a Republican. If we wanted to give balance to our national leadership, would we be wise to choose a Vice President who, like the President, came from the legislative branch? It is pretty clear that the answer is no; that the Vice President should come from the executive branch, or be someone with maximum executive experience. Now we cannot really have someone from the previous administration, so is it not logical to look to State government for a tested leader? Right away, we are pointed to the great State of New York and its former Governor, in office for over 15 years, with a track record as a proven and able executive who has faced head-on the major issues of our time. If you follow this line of reasoning, and add as a bonus Nelson Rockefeller's years of experience at the Federal level before he became Governor, and add as another bonus his understanding of international affairs and their interrelationship with our problems here at home, why, Mr. Chairman, I think Nelson Rockefeller would clearly be our logical choice. For these reasons, I am pleased that the President has sent his name up, and I am delighted to vote for him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. McCLODY).

Mr. McCLODY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. BELL).

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of House Resolution 1511 to confirm Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. There is no man in this Nation more qualified for the job of Vice President than the one being considered here today. His success as Governor of New York has become legendary. He is probably one of the best, if not the best, the Empire State has ever had.

For those concerned about conflict of interest, Rockefeller was born into a family of tremendous wealth. I suggest that his goal in life might, therefore, not be to gain more wealth. How rich can you be? Judging by his interest and activities, including all the tasks that he has performed under the Cabinets of various Presidents, it seems obvious that his own personal interests are best fulfilled working for the Government and, if you will, for the good of mankind. With this background I suggest his efforts are not dedicated to enlarging the Rockefeller family fortune, but to achieving some governmental solutions to problems. So where's the conflict of interest?

If Nelson Rockefeller is not approved, who would be the next choice? Someone of similar ability? If so, could he withstand a similar scrutiny? Probably not, as there are not many people of such accomplishments in America who could stand up satisfactorily under such investigations.

Unfortunately, those of little accomplishment who make the least number of enemies, stand up best under such an examination.

Rockefeller has undergone a rigorous and thorough examination by both the Senate and the House. I think we in this Nation are fortunate to have a man of such proven ability to serve as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I hope his nomination will be overwhelmingly approved.

Mr. McCLODY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. SNYDER).

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, Nelson A. Rockefeller's wide experience in public service does not denote wisdom and discernment. The record shows that his standard pattern of operations reflects a lack of those two qualities. Both are vital to the Presidency, and the office he is up for is the backup slot for the Presidency more than anything else. By an unfortunate incapacitation or unexpected resignation of the incumbent President, he could be catapulted into the Oval Office like Harry Truman, Lyndon Johnson, and Gerald Ford.

The hearings before the Senate Rules Committee and the House Judiciary Committee focused attention on decisions and actions by the nominee which have rendered him suspect in the minds of the majority of our America citizens. Public opinion polls can be in error, but they are usually quite accurate when questions are clearcut and precise, leaving no room for ambiguity.

In November, the Harris poll results indicated that 43 percent of the people actually opposed the Rockefeller nomination while only 39 percent approved it. The nominee's record was such that another 18 percent could not make up their minds. It is hard to misunderstand a simple question, "Do you approve of Nelson Rockefeller?"

As to the people's opinion on the likelihood of conflict of interest because of the nominee's wealth and investments, 47 percent held it would be a factor, while 34 percent felt it would not; 19 percent were undecided.

My own thinking about Mr. Rockefeller is shared by more, rather than less, of my fellow citizens.

It is true that those citizens are not directly selecting and electing the man who may be the next President of the United States by succession rather than election if, God forbid, something should happen to Gerald Ford—or if he should for some reason resign before completing his term. We who are participating in the confirmation process on behalf of the electorate cannot ignore the people's thinking.

It is doubtful that when the 25th amendment to the Constitution was enacted by Congress, any of us appreciated the possibility that two or more successive Presidents might be elevated to office under its provisions instead of by the American people through the normal election process.

Since events have brought home this possibility, many have urged further perfection of the emergency selection process. In the meantime, however, we are faced with the immediate need to name a Vice President. The nominee should have the trust of a majority of the people, if only because they did not elect him. That is vital for the good of the Nation. The President's nominee does not command that trust.

UMI

December 19, 1974

I fear that the distrust of Mr. Rockefeller engendered by public airing of these facts would continue to attend upon every decision and act he would be called upon to make should he succeed to the Presidency. Let me sum up the chief factors which disqualify him.

First, Gerald Ford, as the opposite number of the Speaker of the House, would have been in direct line for the Presidency had the Republicans gained control of the House prior to the 25th amendment. He was a logical successor to the Vice Presidency. Mr. Rockefeller lacks any such stature. He was, in fact, repudiated by his own party more than once when he sought the nomination for the Presidency.

Second, The hearings showed that as Governor of New York, he gave large sums of money to certain persons who held public office. He admitted to giving some $2 million to 18 public officials. In those offices, the beneficiaries of his largesse were in a position to advance both the political and personal interests of Mr. Rockefeller. These gifts and loans are highly questionable under New York law. The Harris poll found 54 percent of the people disapproved of this use of the nominee's wealth.

Third, The Rockefeller financial interests were shown to be so widespread as to penetrate vast areas of American industry and commerce, controlling enormous enterprises and wielding the largest single blocks of power in many giant corporations. Some 8 to 10 million shares of Exxon, the largest oil company in America, are owned or controlled by Rockefeller interests. Eastern Airlines' preferred stock is entirely owned by them. They hold 700,000 or more shares of the Chase Manhattan Bank, a powerful international concern. That bank, in turn, holds the largest blocks of stock in Atlantic-Richfield Oil, in United Airlines, and in Northwest Airlines. It owns substantial amounts of stock in A.T. & T., IBM, Sperry Rand, ITT, Motorola, and other giants.

Wealth in itself is not bad. Control of giant segments of industry and commerce in itself is no evil.

Power in public office in itself is not wrong.

Yet there is no way to erase from his mind and the public's mind the knowledge of these vast holdings—and his every decision—should he become President—would be subject to public and media scrutiny in light of these holdings. Resultant public controversy would not be good for our country.

Fourth, In my opinion, the congressional committees failed to thoroughly investigate and examine the nominee minutely in areas where great conflict of interest is indicated. It has been charged that the purchase by the State of New York of the Long Island Railroad while he was Governor, bailed out the parent Penn Central Railroad which was headed by a director of the Rockefeller Chase Manhattan Bank that had investments in Penn Central securities, and was heavily in debt to the First National City Bank—headed by another Rockefeller, Dr. William Roman—who received some half a million dollars in gifts and forgiven loans from the nominee—negotiated the $65 million purchase of the Long Island Railroad when $76 million in debt to Penn Central, which purchase directly aided the interests of the two Rockefeller headed banks.

Still more conflict of interest needs total airing, in the matter of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which the same Dr. Roman headed, and which borrowed heavily from the Rockefeller Chase Bank. New York State agreed under Rockefeller to rent at high rates 60 floors of the World Trade Center controlled by the authority while, it is claimed, space in rent-free buildings was available.

A number of other suspicious areas remain obscure.

For example, it is charged that at least 44 individuals received financial gifts or loans from the nominee. The Senate Rules Committee called only five of these to testify or give prepared statements. The House Judiciary Committee called only one recipient, Dr. Roman. That is no way to probe a total pattern of the nominee's operational procedure of giving his personal funds to officials in key positions where they clearly could advance his own ends.

Fifth, Mr. Rockefeller did not follow sound fiscal policies as Governor of New York, where he increased the cost of government by some 400 percent. After his terms in office, New Yorkers were the most heavily taxed citizens in the land. I cannot praise the administration of a Governor who increases the indebtedness of his State some 600 percent, as Mr. Rockefeller did, driving business out of State at a loss of 400,000 jobs. The Nation's taxpayers need less, not more, of such administration.

Sixth, Governor Rockefeller on occasion has professed some concern about the Communist threat to our freedoms. But his actions and certain Rockefeller family interests seem to indicate otherwise.

I have heard no objection on his part to the Rockefeller Chase Manhattan Bank being the principal American financial agent for the Chinese Communist regime. That bloody regime, committed to the ideas and goals of Marx and Lenin, has slaughtered hundreds of thousands of Chinese, murdered hundreds of American and other missionaries, and intervened on the side of the North Korean Communists to kill tens of thousands of our servicemen fighting to repel the invasion of South Korea.

The nominee favors increased trade with Communist countries. Yet such trade, other than widespread espionage, has been the Communists' chief means of obtaining our advanced science and technology. Our lead in this vital area is the only factor enabling us to hold any superiority in the strategic balance of power. And that fast-diminishing superiority alone has enabled us to defend the freedom of Western Europe and our own country from Soviet attack. The Communists vigorously seek to obtain our advanced computer technology, to cite only one example of their deficiencies.

Governor Rockefeller's position simply confirms Lenin's classic definition of a capitalist as a man who would sell a rope to his enemy for a profit, even if he knew the buyer would use the rope to hang him.

Seventh, The nominee long has favored the concept of international federalism. The book, "The Future of Federalism," based on a series of lectures Mr. Rockefeller gave in 1962, sets forth his thinking. He argues that the concept of the Nation-State as we know it is obsolete. I cannot support a man for the second highest office in the land whose patriotism is such that he would subordinate the sovereignty of our people to a polyglot international parliament espousing principles other than those great ones embodied in our own Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

The United Nations should be sufficient proof of the dangers involved. Even its staunchest supporters must privately admit the U.N. is nothing more than a sounding board for the self-interest of would-be world figures, some of whom head or represent so-called nations whose populations are smaller than the city of Louisville. While lip service is paid to liberty, justice, and the like, nothing but power counts there anymore—on the one hand, the power of the mighty Soviet Union which vetoes whatever it sees as a threat to its potential world domination, and on the other hand, the voting power of blocks of small countries practically impotent individually or collectively outside the debating halls.

As a private citizen, Mr. Rockefeller's views are merely impractical. As Vice President, they might have influence on our national policy. As President, his views could prove disastrous to the United States of America as a free nation.

Mr. McCLODY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. PARRIS).

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, several months ago I polled my district on the question of the confirmation of this nominee, and I would remind those who may have forgotten that my district is a Washington suburb that has been recently characterized in a national magazine as a microcosm of the Nation.

We enjoyed a substantial rate of return, well over 30,000, and almost 60 percent responded in favor of the confirmation of this nomination. My review of the record of the evidence and testimony before the various committees has not established any facts sufficient to dissuade me from casting my vote consistent with that result. I sincerely hope and believe that view represents the majority opinion of my constituents.

I would point out I have often disagreed politically and philosophically with the nominee but I will support his confirmation.

I have listened to almost all of the debate today with the exception of a very few moments and I have noticed with interest that many of my colleagues who oppose this confirmation are those who are most vocal in opposing any civil and political discrimination against minorities, or any abridgement of a civil or constitutional right. And that is a laudable purpose, but those same people would by indirection or implication amend article II, section 1 of the Constitution which basically sets forth the qualifications for the highest offices of this Nation. They would reduce the constitutional rights of this nominee and the right of all Americans to aspire to public office because of his admittedly massive inherited wealth. That premise, Mr. Chairman, in my review is preposterous. Of course, it would be equally preposterous if we disqualified those people who were without wealth at all or without material assets.

So I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that the Members of this body would cast their vote and base their decision solely on this judgment as to the personal qualifications and competency of this nominee to carry out the serious obligations of his office.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CARNEY).

Mr. CARNEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Around October 1 of this year, I sent questionnaires to the citizens of my congressional district, the 19th District of Ohio. Approximately 15,000 questionnaires were completed and returned to my office.

One of the questions I asked was: "Should Congress confirm Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States?" More than 74 percent, or almost three-fourths of all the people who answered the questionnaire, said: "No." Congress should not confirm him.

In addition, I have received over 300 letters and telegrams from my constituents regarding the Rockefeller nomination. Less than a dozen of these letters and telegrams expressed support for Mr. Rockefeller. The overwhelming majority urged me to vote against the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President.

Mr. Chairman, the people of my congressional district have spoken loudly and clearly on this issue. They are deeply troubled by the concentration of economic and political power in one man, which would result if Mr. Rockefeller becomes Vice President or President.

My constituents have expressed other concerns and other reservations about the Rockefeller nomination, but, primarily, they are concerned that Mr. Rockefeller is insensitive to the needs and problems of the average citizen—the working men and women of this country.

Mr. Chairman, I share many of the concerns expressed by my constituents. While I fervently and sincerely hope Mr. Rockefeller proves that my constituents and I are wrong about him, I must vote against his confirmation as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Ms. ABZUG).

Ms. ABZUG. Mr. Chairman, this has been a very difficult day for most of us.

There has been a great deal of concern expressed that we are talking in generalities. I have heard a great deal about the 15 years when the nominee was Governor of the State of New York and how wonderful have been his programs and how there has been no evidence of any conflict of interest.

Let me just state the following to the Members. I have watched Governor Rockefeller during his 15-year career as Governor of the State of New York, and I think it is a career which was kicked off and financed and consolidated by the Rockefeller family funds.

There is no question about the fact that Nelson Rockefeller is a very intelligent and forceful leader. Certainly as Governor for 15 years he has a record that includes some worthy accomplishments—and it would be incredible if in all that time he had not done some good and praiseworthy things.

But Mr. Rockefeller as Governor, viewed in his totality, achieved these programs by authoritarian and arrogant and questionable methods which did not serve the people well.

That record includes: Quintupling the tax load on residents of New York State.

Developing gigantic, quasi-public authorities that are involved in every aspect of New York life and that have burdened taxpayers with a huge so-called phantom debt over which they have no control for programs they have never approved.

His largely successful efforts to give private utilities, in which he and his family had investments, monopoly control of conventional and nuclear power in New York State.

His sponsorship of the vacancy rent decontrol program, a disaster for tenants, and his approval of the lapsing of commercial rent controls, which was an equal disaster for small businesses.

His irresponsible behavior in the Attica prison massacre that took the lives of 43 prison guards and prisoners.

His imposition, for political reasons, of the most repressive and most ridiculed drug abuse law in the Nation.

His lavish and, in my view, illegal gifts of almost $2 million to public officials.

His domination of a State legislature notable for its rubberstamp actions and lack of democratic procedures.

A host of other actions that at the very least suggest a conflict of interest between his private role and the public welfare.

The New York State Legislature passed with Rockefeller support the statewide banking bill, which will allow such large New York City banks as Chase Manhattan to acquire branches all over the State. Given the obvious extent of Mr. Rockefeller's ties with Chase Manhattan, and the profit Chase Manhattan serves to gain by such legislation, inquiry could be made into the role Rockefeller played in the passage of this legislation.

Another example of Rockefeller exercising his leadership as Governor to benefit private interests with questionable results for the public involved the merger of the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority into the Metropolitan Transportation Authority. This controversial merger was another instance in which Nelson Rockefeller as Governor worked in concert with David Rockefeller as the head of the Chase Manhattan Bank.

Evidence presented to the committee has indicated that the Rockefeller family holdings include extensive control in major insurance companies. In view of this interest in the well-being of insurance companies, the failure of the New York State Legislature to accomplish any significant reform in its antiquated workmen's compensation laws during Mr. Rockefeller's four terms as Governor merits inquiry.

Additionally, while Governor, Mr. Rockefeller was instrumental in securing passage by the legislature of a "no fault" automobile insurance law which drastically eliminated some 90 percent of personal injury claims at a time when there existed a direct conflict of interest because of the Rockefellers' ownership of seven insurance carriers. This ownership was revealed in a statement filed with the secretary of state of New York in 1953, and in one filed in 1972, following a disclosure of Rockefeller's noncompliance in the news media.

Another area which merits scrutiny is the extent to which Rockefeller's extensive oil interests may have influenced his leadership as Governor. It has been pointed out that it was not until some time after Rockefeller resigned as Governor that any action was taken against the flagrant violations of New York State antitrust laws by the major oil companies. In September of this year seven major oil companies were indicted by New York State for marketing practices designed to eliminate competition from independent gasoline stations, and for attempting to thwart open bidding for the supply of gasoline to State governmental agencies.

Mr. Rockefeller reportedly personally intervened in behalf of H. Ross Perot in obtaining a $125,000 feasibility study contract as the basis for a $30,000,000 contract to computerize the welfare system.

Mr. Rockefeller is particularly astute in consolidating his power by programs and hiring policies, as well as the use of his personal wealth, to bind to him the loyalty of certain constituents and individuals.

There will be Members who will talk about the enormous contribution that he has made to minorities in New York State, and I do not deny that that is so. This family, their foundation, has used their money well, has used their money to consolidate support and prevent and suppress any kind of opposition.

The pork barrel Albany Mall in the State capital, and the World Trade Center twin towers in New York City, which provided jobs, construction that would have better been used to build housing, stand as monuments to Mr. Rockefeller's expenditure of billions of dollars for dubious purposes.

December 19, 1974

The World Trade Center was constructed when New York City had experienced a boom in office building construction and had a great surplus of business space. This unnecessary architectural horror, now standing at least half empty, was erected by the Port Authority of New York, which plunged some $600 million of its surplus into the center at a time when Mr. Rockefeller's close associate and beneficiary, Dr. William J. Ronan, held a key position on the board. People who work in these huge 110-story buildings, the highest in New York and possibly the world, complain that the physical environment is alienating and makes them ill. Private businesses reportedly cannot wait for their leases to expire so they can move out. In an apparent attempt to cover up the magnitude of this fiasco in planning and construction, the State has rented 60 floors at the center—2 million square feet at an annual cost of $20.5 million—at a time when existing State office space is going unused in the city. There is also an estimated 10 million square feet of vacant, privately-owned office space in the lower Manhattan area in which the center is located.

The New York Post reported on December 13, 1974 that the State of New York is paying hundreds of thousands of dollars a year in rent for offices left vacant by agencies that were ordered by Mr. Rockefeller to move into the World Trade Center. One building alone, 50 Park Place, costs the State almost a half million dollars a year in rental fees for unused space, although the State liquor authority and other State agencies that formerly occupied the building are no longer there. The SLA lease, which cost $5,981 a month, expires this month, although the SLA has been in the World Trade Center for almost 4 years.

Not only is the State paying double rents to sustain this white elephant, but the city of New York is losing out on real estate taxes. The World Trade Center was financed by tax-free bonds, floated by the Rockefeller Chase Manhattan Bank, and pays only a fraction of the taxes to which a private building would be liable.

I have discussed this particular project in some detail because it illuminates the highhanded and extravagant Rockefeller mode of operation in New York State. If transplanted to a Federal level, this kind of operation could be incredibly costly for taxpayers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York an additional 4 minutes.

Ms. ABZUG. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

The most cynical thing that has taken place today is that we are moving to put into office not a Vice President, but as President, that affected the oil, banking, insurance, transportation, utilities, or communications industries, not to mention a number of industrial giants like IBM.

Of course, it is utter nonsense to suppose there is any difference. The fact is that Nelson Rockefeller would be unable to act in countless areas of public policy—the energy shortage and Middle East politics, Government regulation of airlines and broadcasters, the role of big banks in monetary policy, American involvement in Latin America, to name just a few—without stepping on one part or another of his own private empire.

I can tell the Members one other thing. As a lawyer who has practiced in New York State for many years and who knows something about New York State law, the six professors who testified to the fact that the State laws were violated by these gifts are correct.

There is strong evidence to indicate that Nelson Rockefeller during his tenure in office as Governor and following his resignation violated two sections of the New York State Penal Code and the New York State Public Officers Law by giving gifts and interest-free loans totaling almost $2 million to various public officials.

I have already inserted into the record excerpts from a memorandum of law which I have presented to the incoming district attorney of New York County outlining a prima facie case that Mr. Rockefeller did violate these laws, under which violations are deemed misdemeanors.

Until the district attorney of New York County makes a thorough investigation of the facts and the law and until it is determined whether Mr. Rockefeller is innocent or guilty of breaking the law, I believe it would be unwise for the House to vote on confirmation.

If it does proceed to a vote, Congress may place itself in the unseemly position of having elevated to the Vice Presidency a man who may be subject to a grand jury investigation and trial. The Nation would then find itself again involved in a degrading and all too familiar discussion of whether a Vice President is immune from prosecution.

Or if Mr. Rockefeller is confirmed, no investigation will be held, and many Americans will feel more than ever that equal justice has once again been subverted and that the rich and powerful are above the law.

The investigation of the Judiciary Committee has really not been completed. The report of the Judiciary Committee is a statement of what was stated by witnesses. It is a statement of what documents were presented. It reaches no conclusions for decision. It provides no guidance.

Is this to be the legacy of Watergate? Have we gone through all the trauma of exposing and ejecting from power a servant of big business only to install in his place a master of big business and enormous wealth?

Thomas Jefferson once said: We must crush in its infancy the aristocracy of the monied corporations.

We failed to heed this advice, and we have paid for it dearly—from the time when the monopolies built by men like Nelson Rockefeller's grandfather tried to pose there is any difference. The fact is that Nelson Rockefeller would be unable to act in countless areas of public policy—the energy shortage and Middle East politics, Government regulation of airlines and broadcasters, the role of big banks in monetary policy, American involvement in Latin America, to name just a few—without stepping on one part or another of his own private empire.

Thomas Jefferson once said: We must crush in its infancy the aristocracy of the monied corporations.

We failed to heed this advice, and we have paid for it dearly—from the time when the monopolies built by men like Nelson Rockefeller's grandfather tried to buy whole legislatures to the time when ITT, big dairy combines, and a blue chip list of corporations bought themselves a piece of the Presidency.

We cannot be so unmindful of our responsibilities to raise to the Vice Presidency of the United States one of the most powerful leaders of that corporate aristocracy. I believe that the private Rockefeller power in combination with great public power would be simply too much for a democracy to risk.

That is the issue before us. We are not simply choosing a functionless Vice President. We are choosing a defacto President, now and for 1976. I ask you to consider whether the American people have given any indication that they want Nelson Rockefeller to be President of the United States. Have they given any indication that they support his policies and views, which include total silence on Watergate corruption, total support of the Vietnam war, total support of the nuclear military-industrial complex, and a fervent belief that the monopolies that now rule America should be put in charge of such vital Government programs as energy development.

I believe there is no significant popular support for Mr. Rockefeller. There is only an apathetic feeling that what the people want doesn't count. I urge you to reject this nomination and to begin to restore public confidence in Government.

I insert at this point in the Record my testimony at the House Committee on the Judiciary hearings on the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President, November 27, 1974:

I welcome this opportunity to appear before the Committee in behalf of many of my constituents who have asked me to express their opposition to the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President, a viewpoint that I share.

Once again a great responsibility rests with this Committee, which acted so correctly in serving the public interest in its hearings and votes on the impeachment of Richard M. Nixon. The issue now before you is a direct consequence of the Watergate events and should be seen as part of a continuing process in which the interests of the American people must be protected.

We are all aware of the unprecedented character of the Rockefeller nomination. A self-impeached President, Richard Nixon, names as his successor Gerald Ford, the first non-elected President in the history of our nation. President Ford, who by pardoning Mr. Nixon showed greater consideration for the former President than for the wishes of the American people, now proposes a Vice President who would be elevated to the second highest office in the land without benefit of a popular vote.

Under these most unusual circumstances the Committee has a moral obligation to act as surrogate of the American public to seek to determine as carefully as it can whether there is any reason why Mr. Rockefeller should become a non-elected President-in-waiting of the United States.

I can see no such reason.

Traditionally, the President has been allowed to choose a compatible Vice President, presumably because the electorate requires assurance that the policies it voted for in the person of the President will be continued by his successor. But there is no popular mandate for either Mr. Ford or Mr. Rockefeller, or for their policies. On the contrary, public polls show that a majority of those surveyed are opposed to the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President.

The closest we have come to a determination of a public mandate is in the recent national elections, which certainly were an overwhelming repudiation of Watergate and Mr. Ford's policy. I think the Committee should take careful note of Mr. Rockefeller's position on the two major issues that have confronted and involved the American people in recent years: Watergate and the war in Indochina.

Mr. Rockefeller remained resolutely silent on the Watergate affair and Mr. Nixon's culpability from the beginning right through the resignation. How are we to interpret his silence on this momentous event, which involved massive corruption and lying in the White House under Mr. Nixon's direction and the illegal use of millions of dollars in corporate funds to influence the 1972 national election.

It should be noted that Mr. Rockefeller is an expert on the use of big money to influence elections. A study by the Citizens Research Foundation in 1972 showed that in 1970 he and his family spent $4.5 million on his gubernatorial campaign. In his four campaigns for Governor, the same group found he spent $27 million, and more than half of that came from his own family.

On the Vietnam war, Mr. Rockefeller actively supported American intervention in Indochina and was known as a war hawk. American involvement in Indochina continues, and it would be illuminating to get Mr. Rockefeller's views on whether he favors continued military support of the Thieu government in South Vietnam as well as the use of American planes for bomb "spotting" missions in Cambodia.

Mr. Rockefeller's acceptability as Vice President and perhaps, ultimately, as President of our nation also should be evaluated in terms of his record as governor of New York for almost 16 years. Other witnesses before this Committee will or already have discussed his gubernatorial record, which includes his shocking behavior in the Attica massacre that took 43 lives; his sponsorship of the vacancy rent decontrol program, a disaster for tenants; his pork barrel Albany Mail and World Trade Center buildings, involving the needless expenditure of billions of dollars in taxpayers' money; his imposition for political reasons of the most repressive drug abuse law in the nation; his quintupling of the tax load on residents of New York State; and his lavish gifts to public officials.

It is Mr. Rockefeller's riches and the total wealth and influence of the entire Rockefeller family that overshadow these hearings, this wealth that shapes and influences our entire economy.

Mr. Rockefeller has told the Congress that he intends to place his holdings in a blind trust, which is surely the most ingenious proposal ever made to this Committee. The nominee can no more divest himself of his heritage, his interests, his interconnection with the dominant corporations that control our economy and much of the world than he can divest himself of his skin. The power of the Rockefeller interests extends far beyond even what has been admitted before this Committee or the Senate committee.

I understand that the FBI's report to you on Mr. Rockefeller was compiled by 350 agents who conducted 1300 interviews. It is 2300 pages long.

The agents were thorough. But if the chairman of the Exxon Corporation was interviewed, did he admit anywhere in those 2300 pages that the Rockefeller family controls his company?

Did the chairman of Metropolitan Life concede that his giant financial corporation is dominated by another giant financial corporation—the Chase Manhattan Bank—which is in turn run by the Rockefellers?

Did the chairman of the Eastern Airlines admit that his ailing firm is in hock to the same Rockefeller-run bank?

Did the chairman of CBS testify that he was ever influenced by the fact that Chase Manhattan Bank holds 14% of this vital part of our communications industry?

Did the chairman of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, Dr. William F. Ronan, ever agree that receiving $625,000 in so-called "gifts" from Nelson Rockefeller had any effect on his official conduct?

Of course not. We will never get a straight answer to such a question from Dr. Ronan—much less from the heads of huge private corporations that are in the grip of Rockefeller power.

Rockefeller power is enormous and deeply entrenched. It has sometimes been ugly and often benevolent, as memorials from Rockefeller University in New York to Grand Teton National Park in Wyoming testify, even though this benevolence was induced by the tax laws.

Most importantly, Rockefeller power is entirely unique—one of a kind—as a huge, interlocking complex of economic and other interests both here and abroad.

It is our Constitutional duty to examine Rockefeller power thoroughly in judging Nelson Rockefeller's ability to serve as Vice President of the United States. In doing so, we must weigh any and all real or potential conflicts of interest, and insist on the highest standard of behavior by a possible holder of this great office; all the more so because we are acting on behalf of the whole people in assessing the nomination of a man who may become President.

When you have finished such an examination, I believe it will be evident that the private Rockefeller power in combination with great public power would be simply too much for a democracy to risk.

Only a man as completely accustomed to enormous wealth and power as is Nelson Rockefeller would have had the audacity to present his staggering financial statement to the Senate Rules Committee and say the "myth" of his family's influence had been "dissipated."

He revealed that his and his immediate family holdings were currently valued at $218 million. He evidently hoped that Congress, the press and the public would be satisfied that, as a small-potatoes multi-millionaire with long government experience, he was well-suited to be Vice President and would be confirmed routinely.

Even this initial disclosure, however, showed that he was guilty of serious conflicts of interest as Governor of New York. His holdings in two trusts that encompass the bulk of his personal wealth included 7,550,000 shares of tax-exempt bonds of New York State agencies, all of which were affected by decisions he made as Governor. According to a slightly earlier accounting of the same holdings obtained and published by New York magazine, Mr. Rockefeller benefits to the tune of $433,000 a year from these securities—tax free.

Mr. Rockefeller had fifteen years as Governor to eliminate any blemishes on his public image. Now he says he will put his direct holdings into a blind trust and instruct the managers of his existing trusts to treat them as "blind" while he is a federal official. But throughout his tenure as governor of the nation's second largest state, his trusts and those of his immediate family remained under the none-too-near-sighted control of the Rockefeller-run Chase Manhattan Bank. And even the Chase portfolio managers were not allowed to make significant changes without the approval of Rockefeller Family & Associates, an operation headed by J. Richardson Dilworth that oversees the Rockefellers' far-flung interests.

December 19, 1974

Luckily, Mr. Rockefeller's incredible statement to the Senate Committee led to a barrage of questions and a commitment by Congress to scrutinize every aspect of his affairs.

So far, we have learned that he paid no federal income taxes in 1970 on an income of nearly $2.5 million; that he owed the better part of a million dollars in taxes; that he gave $50,000 to the Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger, for past services rendered; that he not only gave $86,000 to L. Judson Morhouse, the one-time Republican State chairman who played a key role in Rockefeller's gubernatorial campaigns, but also pardoned Morhouse after he was convicted of bribery and sentenced to serve a jail term; that Morhouse profited handsomely from a $49,000 loan from Mr. Rockefeller's brother, Lawrence; that he gave an unbelievable $625,000 to Dr. Ronan; and gave or loaned large sums to many other present and former public officials and associates; and that he and his brother were involved in a deceptive, money-laundering operation that resulted in the publication of a derogatory biography of former Supreme Court Justice Arthur Goldberg, his 1970 rival for governor.

We have long known that Nelson Rockefeller has always been prepared to use his vast wealth to get himself elected. What has not been explored, and I would hope this committee would do so, is the widespread suspicion in Albany that Rockefeller wealth and financial and banking connections were used to keep under his control some members of the state legislature, many of whom are attorneys with practices that involve real estate and insurance cases. The belief that this kind of influence was used is so prevalent among those familiar with the New York state legislature that it warrants further investigation by the Congress.

The hearings to date have shown that Mr. Rockefeller has not been above using his wealth behind the scenes for dubiously ethical purposes. This is truly "dissipating" a myth—the myth that so rich a politician does not need to resort to lowly means to achieve his ambitions. In fact, Mr. Rockefeller's riches have simply made it all the easier for him to get his way by spreading around gifts and loans.

His gift to Dr. Ronan violates a New York state law (Sec. 73 Public Officers Law, effective January 1, 1976) against giving anything worth more than $25 to a public official if it can "reasonably be inferred" that the gift would influence the official's duties. Mr. Rockefeller's largesse breaks the law to the extent of $624,975. Lesser men have resigned in disgrace or gone to jail for transgressions that make them pliers by comparison. Yet, incredibly, Mr. Rockefeller is still being considered for the second-highest office in the land.

The Ronan and Morhouse gifts and the Goldberg biography, among the facts we have learned about Nelson Rockefeller's conduct in office, are by themselves enough to disqualify him from such consideration.

If the lesson of Watergate means anything, it is that we must apply the most scrupulous standards of honesty and propriety to all public officials. Even the appearance of improper behavior or conflict of interest must be weighed heavily against any aspirant for office.

Mr. Rockefeller's nomination must be rejected for another, even more important reason: A person who is a principal in the unique Rockefeller empire of corporate and financial interests cannot function as Vice President—let alone President—without constantly criss-crossing those interests.

The guesses at what and how much the Rockefellers own or control vary so much that I am going to stick to those that are well-documented or seem to be fair estimates.

First, the Rockefellers control the Chase Manhattan Bank. They have fed the public a great deal of nonsense to the effect that this is not true. They get away with this because only David Rockefeller, as chairman of the board of Chase, is required to disclose how much of the bank he owns—about 1% at last count.

There are other sizeable chunks here and there that have come to light, and I suggest that if the Committee wants to clean up the whole matter once and for all it can invite David Rockefeller to appear publicly before it with all the undisclosed numbers. In any case, this particular argument is academic because David Rockefeller is indisputably Chase's chief executive officer. He therefore runs the world's third largest bank with more than $40 billion in assets and vast lending capabilities. It is through the bank's enormous economic leverage that the family can control or influence a long list of America's largest corporations.

Last winter, subcommittee headed by Senators Muskie and Metcalf released a report showing that Chase, through its trust department and investment subsidiary, was the single largest stockholder in 20 companies; that it was among the top ten shareholders in 42 utility companies; that it held 8.3% of United Airlines, 9% of American Airlines, 6.9% of Northwest, 7.3% of Western and 2.7% of Pan American, as well as 6.7% of the Burlington-Northern railroad; and that it held 14.1% of CBS, 6.7% of ABC, and 4.5% of RCA, NBC's parent company.

The bank's capabilities are perhaps even more important than its stockholdings in assessing the family's economic power. For example, according to the Muskie-Metcalf report, 14 airlines owed $274 million to Chase, including some in which Chase holds a significant interest. Chase has millions of dollars in loans outstanding to financially troubled Eastern Airlines, a company which Lawrence Rockefeller helped start and in which he and Chase are major shareholders. This is double-barreled control. While trying to dissipate the "myth" of family power, even Mr. Rockefeller was willing to admit at the initial Senate hearing that his family had great influence, if the word "potential" were added.

Through Chase, the family has "potential influence" over Metropolitan Life, the bank's largest customer. The family has substantial interests in Equitable Life, whose chief executive sits on Chase's board, and over which the family must have "potential influence."

In addition to the obvious "potential influence" over the transportation industry, the communications industry, and the utilities industry, it seems that the family has "potential influence" through the bank over AT&T, IBM, Sperry Rand, International Paper, Motorola, ITT and Atlantic Richfield Oil.

The family also has "potential influence" through its ownership of Rockefeller Center, a sizable piece of midtown Manhattan and 21 buildings worth an estimated $1 billion.

And consider what must be the "potential influence" of the total of all the private, personal holdings of family members—which many educated guesses place at more than $1 billion held in various trusts for the children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren of John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

More importantly, where is the bulk of this "potential influence?" Nelson's portfolio gives us some good ideas. He holds a good-sized chunk of the family's International Basic Economy Cooperation which owns, among other things, 48 supermarkets in Venezuela. This raises another question that should be more fully examined by this Committee—the extent of Rockefeller power in Latin America.

On the whole, Nelson Rockefeller's holdings show a tenacious desire to keep most of his fortune in a few of the bluest blue chips. Any portfolio manager would have told him long ago to diversify. But plummeting market prices notwithstanding, 79% of his holdings are in just five common stocks. Rockefeller Center, Inc. accounts for 25%. Another 25% is in just two oil stocks, Exxon and Standard Oil of California. Another 17% is in IBM and 12% in Eastman Kodak.

Interestingly enough, David Rockefeller's trust holdings, obtained and published by New York magazine, show a striking parallel to his brother's. Both men are life beneficiaries of trusts established by their father, so the similarity is not surprising. Their father created some 70 separate trusts for his descendants, which have now probably multiplied with the births of new Rockefeller. Do all these trusts show the same favoritism for the same companies, including Exxon, the direct descendant of John D. Rockefeller Senior's oil combine? If so, the "potential influence" of a billion dollars so concentrated must be enormous.

Finally, it is surely no accident that Chase and other Rockefeller-run institutions favor the same stocks. Among the top 20 on Chase's hit parade are IBM, Exxon, Mobil Oil, Kodak and Standard Oil of California. The Rockefellers' interest in and "potential influence" over the oil industry have no doubt been diluted over the years, but the holdings are still gigantic.

Everyone in the Rockefeller orbit and the oil industry denies that the family has anything like control over the oil companies. But the Rockefeller Foundation's assets of $936 million in 1972, included a whopping $362 million in oil stocks. And the Rockefeller Brothers Fund had $67 million of its $268 million in oils in the same year.

The bulk of these investments were in Exxon and Mobil. If you add Chase's Exxon holdings, you find that these three Rockefeller institutions have nearly 4% of the world's largest oil company. We are free to guess what the total would be if we throw in family holdings by those scores of trusts. I for one am willing to bet it's quite a lot of "potential influence."

And for what it's worth—potentially—Chase Manhattan describes itself as the "leading bank for energy industries."

I think this Committee should ask Nelson Rockefeller just what on earth the difference between "influence" and "potential influence" would be if he had to make a decision as Vice President, or as President, that affected the oil, banking, insurance, transportation, utilities, or communications industries, not to mention a number of industrial giants like IBM.

Of course, it is utter nonsense to suppose there is any difference. The fact is that Nelson Rockefeller would be unable to act in countless areas of public policy—the energy shortage and Middle East politics, government regulation of airlines and broadcasters, the role of big banks in monetary policy, American involvement in Latin America, to name just a few without stepping on one part or another of his own private empire.

What of Mr. Rockefeller's assurance that he would place public above private interests in the face of conflicts? He may be sincere in saying he would like to, but the question is, can he?

business in Egypt. It is a major financial force on every continent. David Rockefeller, according to a biographical sketch by E. J. Kahn distributed by the bank, "rarely visits any country without paying at least a courtesy call—more often than not a business call—on its head of state. Such a gesture is expected of him, much as if he were a head of state himself." How long would it take for Vice President Rockefeller, or President Rockefeller, to find American foreign policy in conflict with brother David's foreign policy? How would anyone know the difference? Perhaps we could ask Secretary of State Kissinger to interpret for us.

Nelson Rockefeller cannot disassociate himself from Rockefeller power; he cannot abdicate it.

Throughout his advantaged life, Nelson Rockefeller has been a beneficiary of Rockefeller wealth and power. There is a price he should pay at this moment for this enviable distinction: He should not be allowed to become an appointed Vice President. He has, of course, a right to run for the Presidency, but he could not achieve that post without the sovereign act of the American people electing him.

We are told that Mr. Rockefeller should not be penalized for his wealth. Our concern should be not to penalize the American people without their consent. We in Congress have no right to jeopardize the independence and integrity of the Executive by placing in direct succession to the White House a man who is a partner in the greatest agglomeration of private power in the history of the nation.

Thomas Jefferson once said, "We must crush in its infancy the aristocracy of the moneyed corporations."

We failed to heed this advice, and we have paid for it dearly—from the time when the monopolies built by men like Nelson Rockefeller's grandfather tried to buy whole legislatures to the time when ITT and big dairy combines tried to buy themselves a piece of the Presidency.

We cannot be so unmindful of our responsibilities as to raise to the Vice Presidency of the United States one of the most powerful sons of that corporate aristocracy.

I therefore, urge the members of this Committee to vote to reject this nomination. At the very least, I believe you should hold this matter over until the new Congress convenes. The men and women who will be seated in January, winners in the first national election held since the Watergate exposure, are the closest we can come to a direct expression of the people's will. If there is to be a vote on this nomination, it should be theirs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, the first time I was called upon to cast a vote under the dictates of the 25th amendment, I faced many considerations. But overriding them all was the simple fact that the impeachment of Richard Nixon would not proceed until a Republican was safely installed in the Vice Presidency. Insuring that an accident of history would not overturn the electoral verdict of the American people. My choice was, I thought, simple and so I voted for Gerald Ford.

When President Ford nominated Nelson Rockefeller to succeed him as Vice President I thought my task would again be easy. Mr. Rockefeller was a man of obvious ability. I believed him to be honest. He knew government, and in contrast with the ineptitude we have seen in some quarters in the last few years, his competence was a refreshing change. I thought I would vote for him.

But gradually I became troubled by a number of other considerations. For example:

First. What role should public opinion play in determining my own vote on Mr. Rockefeller?

In most cases when voting on legislation, I believe like Edmund Burke that in the end after weighing informed opinion from my own district and from elsewhere, I owe to my constituents above all else, the commitment to use my own best judgment based upon evidence and information I possess at the time. But in this case, I believe we all have a higher than usual duty to take into account the views of the people we represent because we are, in a sense, standing in for them in a peculiar sort of election.

Second. What standards should be applied in determining the "qualification" of the nominee?

It has been implied by some that approval of a nominee in this instance should amount to nothing more than a certification of good character. I do not think so—especially when the approval of a nominee will place in office in the two highest positions this land has to offer, two nonelected men.

I do believe that in this special case we are doing more than simply determining whether the nominee is agreeable to the President and is not a scoundrel. I do believe we have an obligation to look at the needs of the times—as best we perceive them—and ask whether this nominee is the right man for these times.

And based upon those considerations, I intend to vote no on Mr. Rockefeller—because I sense a great malaise on the part of the people I represent about Mr. Rockefeller's confirmation and because I personally doubt that he is the right man for these times.

I do not expect a nominee's views to be a mirror's image of my own, or my constituents, so I can, for instance, accept—even though I do not agree with—some of Mr. Rockefeller's judgments about our own use of arms aid to Latin America.

What bothers me most is Mr. Rockefeller's apparently easy acceptance of the fundamental changes in this Nation's economic structure since the end of World War II. Indeed, Mr. Rockefeller does not just accept those changes, he virtually epitomizes them.

I do not mean to imply that Mr. Rockefeller, because he is rich, may not serve. That is clearly not so. I do not even really fear that Mr. Rockefeller would consciously and intentionally use the political power of the Vice-Presidency or the Presidency as a lever to magnify his economic power or vice versa.

What bothers me about Mr. Rockefeller in short is not his character but his perspective. I do not believe Mr. Rockefeller really feels there is anything wrong about 500 of the 200,000 manufacturing firms in America—one-fourth of 1 percent—controlling 71 percent of the country's manufacturing assets. I do not believe Mr. Rockefeller really believes that there is anything fundamentally wrong with the inexorable concentration of economic power that has slowly moved more and more economic decisions affecting all areas of the country—large and small, urban and rural—into fewer and fewer plushly paneled and carpeted boardrooms of the economic titans in Chicago, New York, San Francisco and the other giant metropolises of America—gradually reducing any real opportunity for all but the biggest to compete.

I see no visible concern on Mr. Rockefeller's part that bigger might not necessarily be better.

I deeply believe that one of the essential elements of American success has been the ability of anyone with grit, initiative, imagination, good judgment and luck to make a place for himself. But today the overwhelming concentration of economic power in the economic sector is slowly squeezing the vitality out of free enterprise as we have known it—and squeezing with it the real opportunity for competition to thrive. We are losing the kind of genuine competition that we used to associate with the capitalist system. And we are losing it not to any outside threat from communism or socialism, but rather to the economic titans within our own borders, who in the name of competition are in fact inexorably eliminating the competition that has always been the principle strength of our capitalistic system.

Today inflation is imposing a special burden on our economic system and on our people. We can, and should do all the things that "experts" tell us are necessary to ease that inflation: reduce our energy consumption, increase our food producing capacity, develop alternative energy sources, eliminate supply bottlenecks. But with all that, I do not believe any economic policy can satisfactorily attack the inevitability of inflation without action to bring under some control the growth of economic giants so strong and so powerful they surpass even the ability of government to influence them. And I honestly do not believe we would get that action from Mr. Rockefeller, were he to become President.

I believe it is necessary to convey to the American people a sense of urgency about this central economic problem and the acceptance of Mr. Rockefeller would do just the opposite. That is something we simply cannot afford to do if we are to rebuild the confidence of millions of Americans and the responsiveness and sensitivity of our political institutions.

I regret having to vote against Mr. Rockefeller. He is talented and vigorous. I think he is decent, but as I said earlier, what concerns me about Mr. Rockefeller is not his character but his perspective which I believe—for this time—is simply wrong.

December 19, 1974

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ).

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, when historians render an account of these times, they will undoubtedly say that this year, 1974, was one of the most perilous times in the history of our Republic. It will be recorded as a time of decision.

There have not been many such times; 1861, perhaps, or 1932 might be remembered as equally fateful.

This year we have seen the country fall into the grips of political scandal so pervasive that it forced the vacating of both the highest offices in the land. We do not yet have a government that has restored a sense of national pride or purpose; nor have we found the key to renewed confidence.

And even as our Government's powers of leadership and decision have sunk to grievous depths, our country finds itself endangered at home and abroad. At home we confront an economic situation of the most desperate nature; our entire economy is under attack from forces that wish to destroy it. We have found no effective response to oil blackmail, or to its consequences, inflation and mounting economic breakdown. Abroad we see a world endangered, from the possibility of renewed conflict in the Middle East, where our diplomatic efforts have been singularly ineffective. And we stand prepared today, for the second time in less than a year, to fill a vacant Office of Vice President.

We know that the nominee might become President. Yet we hesitate to assess the real importance of our decision.

The matter of the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller is one that presents an opportunity for the first branch of Government, the Congress, to redeem its proper role as the surrogate of the people. Congress did not live up to this opportunity last year, in the matter of Gerald Ford. We did not demand excellence and high capacity for leadership, as was our duty; we merely acceded to the wishes of a President who was himself a desperate failure, and whose judgment none of us really trusted.

And the truth of the matter is that Congress has not thus far lived up to its responsibility in the matter of Nelson Rockefeller.

Yet here we have an astounding opportunity, as if taken from the dark and convoluted recesses of ancient Roman intrigue, or the poisonous intrigue of the Medici; or perhaps even more aptly, from the tangled web of ambitiousness, greed and pettiness of the 1940's government of France—all stained and darkened pages of history that we all pray will never be a part of American democratic history.

Here is a critical time—a turning point in our history. How historians write their judgments may well depend on what we do with our opportunity. Was the Republic regenerated today; or was it doomed? Did Congress do its duty? Sober minds one day will judge this day. We must understand the grave nature of this last decision of the 93d Congress.

Here we have the same situation: we are in no position to demand that the nominee be a person who can command respect; we are in no position to closely examine the nominee's ideas and attitudes on questions of national importance; and we are even helpless to evaluate the full implications of the nominee's unparalleled personal wealth—though we know that he has used his wealth in ways that at the very least call his judgment into question.

And so we are given hearings and a report that do not speak to the real issue. We are treated to a sideshow display, designed to satiate our curiosity about the structure of one of the world's greatest family fortunes. We do not know what kind of President Mr. Rockefeller would make.

Would the voters make Mr. Rockefeller President? The only evidence is that he has failed twice to win the nomination of his party. In preparing to overrule that twice-given decision of his own party, we ought to have persuasive evidence that in Mr. Rockefeller is a man who might, in fact, become an effective national leader, should he be called upon to do so.

All we have is his assurance that he will be careful about using his money to provide special benefices to his friends and proteges; he will be careful with what he thinks of as charity, but which more skeptical minds see as misuse of personal wealth; misuse that moreover would create great scandal for a person of less renown or less power—or one to whom the normal scale of political values is applied, which certainly is not the case with a nominee for a vacancy in the Office of Vice President. A lesser man, like Mr. Gibson, lately of the Federal Energy Agency, can be bounced from office merely for having an income from an energy-related company, an income that is described as severance pay only.

But the scale of values is different in the case of Mr. Rockefeller; his actions might have been actual violations of law, but few would dare make such a judgment of a man of stupendous wealth, one who is being considered for Vice President. For to rescind his nomination would be a humiliation beyond measure for the President, something he will not inflict upon himself, and which we are unwilling to do ourselves. The circumstances, once again, render ineffective and valueless the confirmation process itself. So the hard questions fade away in the soft assurance that this very experienced politician was merely naïve.

And we perforce accept Mr. Rockefeller's explanations at face value: he just made some mistakes in judgment, and would not do it again. He is willing to accept the penalty of being portrayed as an honest man, a little bumbling about the uses of money, because he has so much of it. The question will not leave my mind: how naïve can a many-time Governor of New York be? Mr. Rockefeller is one of the most widely experienced politicians of our time.

He is not a naïve person. If he had been, he would never have lasted as Governor of New York. If you consider his background in politics, you have to say that it is very unlikely that Mr. Rockefeller did not know what he was doing in making large gifts to numerous people who served him and his political interests. But also, the peculiar nature of these proceedings throws normal judgments, normal scales of value, completely out of the picture, and most retreat from making a judgment.

I would not say that Mr. Rockefeller is dishonest; he has no need to be. But I cannot accept his explanations that he was merely naïve and unwise in passing out his special kind of charity.

For the sake of national unity, most of us have skirted around the very real implications of Mr. Rockefeller's immense fortune, and how it would affect his decisions, should he become President. There is hardly any aspect of American commerce and industry that does not in some way involve Mr. Rockefeller's family interests. There is no way that he can be unaware of those interests. Presidential decisions inevitably affect American business and commerce in various ways. As President, Mr. Rockefeller might try to forget this, but he could never be entirely unaware that, one way or another, almost any decision he might make would affect his personal fortunes.

Suppose that a crisis were to take place in Venezuela, and Mr. Rockefeller were President. The United States has vital interests in Venezuela. For Mr. Rockefeller to act on those American interests, he would in some corner of his mind always remember that his decision would beyond any doubt affect his family interests, for good or bad. And from the Venezuelan point of view, aggressive action by a President named Rockefeller would be aimed not at protecting the legitimate interests of our country; it would be seen as preserving or enhancing his own fortune.

The same might well be said of other countries, where Rockefeller fortunes are involved in ventures and investments of all kinds. How would those countries differentiate between the personal interests of Mr. Rockefeller, however conscientious he might be, as against the interests of this country?

It is unfortunate that this is so. Yet to deny the truth of it is to ignore our responsibility; to assess how good a President this man would be. And the truth of it is that wealth, in his case, could in fact be a handicap. There is no escaping it: the implications of the man's fortune are involved, whether we like it or not, whether we will it or not, and whether it is fair or not. "Life is unfair," President Kennedy once observed, and he was right. It might be unfair to say that Mr. Rockefeller's wealth has to be considered as a possible handicap to his possibilities to be an effective President, should he become President, but there is no blinking the fact that his wealth is so great that it cannot help but affect his performance. Great wealth might not have mattered so much in a Governor of New York; it might not matter so much in a Vice President; but it could matter a great deal in a President.

As in the case of Mr. Ford's nomination, we have little idea of what Mr. Rockefeller's conception of national problems is, or how we ought to deal with the very critical problems of our time. Yet how can we assess him as a potential President without knowing his ideas?

It might be argued that we need not ask his views, because a Vice President has the duty of following the President's lead in all matters, and that is true. But we do not have here a Vice President; we have a nominee who might become Vice President, and maybe President. It is not possible to become such a nominee, in the normal course of events, without having been in politics on a national level long enough to have developed some kind of track record, or displayed some ideas. Mr. Rockefeller was in the process, at the time of his nomination, of setting forth on a great effort to establish his ideas on leadership. But that project has been dropped, so we do not know what kind of President he might be.

Mr. Rockefeller has had a couple of runs on the national political stage, but that was years ago, in a very different kind of world than we see today. We have no way of knowing what his notions are today, and no way of reacting to them.

Now it is almost time for us to vote. The question is, what kind of President would this man make, should the Presidency become vacant? On the basis of the record, we do not know.

We are told that it would be catastrophic to let the Office of Vice President remain vacant. But there have been vacancies in that office before, and the Nation has survived. Beyond that, what assurance is there that the presiding officer of the Senate would necessarily make a better President than the presiding officer of the House? There is none; bestowing the title of Vice President carries with it no special gift of leadership.

We are told, finally, that the President has the right to choose a person in whom he has confidence, to fill any vacancy in the Office of Vice President. If that is so, then there is no reason for this confirmation process, and we have no real decision to make. This argument by those who favor the nomination is evidence that there is no independent decision desired from Congress on this matter.

Would the nominee be elected, if there were an election? On the basis of the record, and what I can discern about the feelings of my constituents, the answer is that his election would be unlikely. Why then, do we dare, acting as proxy for the people, elect one for whom there seems to be no general public support?

I have no ill feelings for the nominee. Yet I cannot bring myself to believe that this is a process that allows us to give a true measure, a true test, to the nominee. I reluctantly conclude that I will vote "no."

My vote is a judgment that we do not have a record sufficient to show what kind of President the nominee would make.

My vote reflects my firm belief that the 25th amendment provides a process which is fatally defective, in that it does not allow Congress to make the kind of judgment that its authors said would be made, and so Congress ought to abolish or radically change that process. The people are entitled to a mature and informed judgment of persons who become President and Vice President, and the 25th amendment effectively destroys any such judgment.

I doubt that many will hear my arguments in the rush to judgment and adjournment; the distractions of the hour are too raucous; and there are few who want to stop long enough, in these crowded hours, to reflect on what we are doing, and why, or what our real function and duty are. Yet I have a duty to be true to myself, and to do that I must raise these questions, and say that this is a proceeding about which I have profound reservations, and that I cannot in good conscience cast any but a vote of "no" on the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER). Does the gentleman have additional requests?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, but I will reserve 1 minute for myself, that 1 minute to be utilized immediately prior to the presentation by the chairman of the committee.

I will then yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. McCLODY).

Mr. McCLODY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mrs. HECKLER).

Mrs. HECKLER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman and Members of this House, I would say that this has been a most interesting debate, and I do not seek to prolong it at this late hour. Nonetheless, it strikes me as significant that we have somehow confused the issue of the confirmation of a Vice President with the possible revision of the Constitution itself.

There are those who seek to redraft the Constitution by opposing and rejecting the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

I think it is important that we realize the real issue here. Many extraneous points have been raised as to questions of policy and questions of selection by the President.

President Ford took office on August 11. Should this President have proposed a Vice Presidential nominee of a different political stripe, and then further, from a political dimension totally different? Is this a potential nominee who will go on to be a President of the United States, and is that what we seek, or is that what we fear?

There are many, many interesting cross currents in this whole debate.

I would like to say that I would be in sympathy with those who would open the issue of a revision of the Constitution and seek to redraft another 25th amendment. Certainly, after the tumultuous events of August and throughout this year, we have come to enjoy and cherish the wisdom of the Founding Fathers, and perhaps should have left the document intact without the recent revision of the 25th amendment itself. However, we are not about to redraft that particular provision right now. What we are talking about is the confirmation of the Vice President.

If I may inject a totally extraneous issue, I would like to make it clear to the Members of this House that the constituents in my district, who are facing a very cold, a very gloomy, and unprosperous winter, are very anxious for this country to get going on the real issues, the issues of the economy and the issues of energy, and they will not understand our endless delay of a progressive thrust into problem solving by the President and his chosen Vice President.

The dimensions of the people's problems, in my judgment, are so great as to make pale the postponement of executive leadership by a President and Vice President for reasons of policy differences with the Vice Presidential nominee.

I have strongly disagreed with Governor Rockefeller on a number of questions. I have agreed with him on others. The perfect Vice-Presidential nominee probably does not exist.

The Goldberg book, for example, is a deplorable episode in Governor Rockefeller's past. It is also a mistake for which he has publicly apologized.

I do not support his expensive gifts. I question them and I question their wisdom, but I am confident that they were made in good faith.

The Rockefeller wealth is too vast for most of us to comprehend. But I can find no evidence that in all his years in public service Nelson Rockefeller ever used his position to enhance his economic status.

What this House is really doing is searching the soul of a public man.

I think we are extracting a standard that far exceeds the one which is exhibited in the private lives of many Members of this body.

I feel that we too, of course, must live up to the highest standards. The Committee on the Judiciary has done so. It has found no conflict of interest. I have respect for the eminent men and women on that committee. I respect their judgment.

During this debate we have heard the most extraordinary rationalizations for a particular judgment.

In fact, I can cite one position which was submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary as a reason for objecting to the Rockefeller nomination.

10. The U.S. Census Bureau confirms that, largely through exodus, New York State has been losing population during the past two years—the first shrinkage in history and under Rockefeller's stewardship (over 102,000 persons in the last 12 months alone).

So, some would have us believe that the Rockefeller empire's influence extends even to changing the population patterns of New York, to the outward movement of people from New York, and if we are to believe such ridiculous extensions of fantasy then we do not warrant our positions in this House.

December 19, 1974

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this has been an honorable and distinguished public servant. I think we have searched his soul, although we are not theologians here, and he has been found more than adequate by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Nelson Rockefeller's record of strong, able, imaginative, compassionate leadership is clear—his service to five Presidents, Democratic and Republican, in domestic and foreign policy matters, and his 15 years as Governor of New York.

Mr. Chairman, I urge his confirmation as Vice President of the United States.

PRESIDENT FORD SIGNS S. 4016, TO PROTECT AND PRESERVE TAPE RECORDINGS OF CONVERSATIONS OF RICHARD M. NIXON

(By unanimous consent, Mr. McCLODY was allowed to proceed out of order.)

Mr. McCLODY. Mr. Chairman, I have just learned that President Ford has signed the bill S. 4016, a bill to protect and preserve the tape recordings of conversations of former President Richard M. Nixon.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. GOLDWATER).

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be little doubt that Governor Rockefeller will be confirmed. The arguments in his behalf by his supporters and a large segment of the media are indeed convincing, and I am very impressed by them. Few men bring such a wealth of experience to the job of Vice President as does Mr. Rockefeller.

But, I submit, Mr. Chairman, there are other considerations in this nomination which have been conveniently relegated to a remote corner by the proponents of Mr. Rockefeller. In my judgment these considerations, which I want to discuss briefly, compel me to oppose his nomination.

Let me say at the outset that I am well aware of the arguments advanced by some political observers to the effect that I would naturally oppose Mr. Rockefeller's nomination in retaliation for his lack of support of my father's Presidential candidacy in 1964.

Well, Mr. Rockefeller was not the only person in this country to oppose the Goldwater candidacy in 1964. He was joined by a sizable majority of the American people as I recall. In retrospect I seriously doubt if Mr. Rockefeller, or any other prominent politician, for that matter, would have been able to stop the landslide for President Johnson. It would be easy to blame Mr. Rockefeller for the 1964 election defeat, but such an argument flies in the face of history and good sense.

No, Mr. Chairman, I oppose this nomination because I am totally convinced that in this critical phase of our Nation's history, Governor Rockefeller is the wrong man for the job.

I do not question his honesty or integrity. Furthermore, as I mentioned previously, he has great experience and administrative ability. But, what he does not have and I am convinced beyond a shadow of a doubt—is the support of the majority of the American people.

I know the argument to refute such an observation. Simply stated, the argument is that the President has a right to make his own choice as to who will be Vice President. I cannot buy that.

For instance, I have received a large volume of mail from my constituency on this nomination. It is running approximately 30 to 1 against. Furthermore, recent national polls show mounting opposition to the nomination. A recent Harris poll indicated only 39 percent of those polled favored his confirmation as Vice President.

Now, these are troubled times, and I would be the first to admit that we cannot govern by opinion polls and especially, popularity polls.

But, I do intend to suggest that we ought to pay more than passing attention to public opinion in this case. This is especially important when we consider that we are acting in lieu of a direct expression of the public's wishes in the selection of one who, we so painfully learned over the past year, can become in an instance the most powerful man in the country.

We are not debating the confirmation of a cabinet officer. A cabinet official can easily be removed from office. On the contrary, for the second time in a year, we are discussing the critical matter of a Vice-Presidential confirmation. Once confirmed, the people for all intents and purposes, are removed from the decision-making process, because a Vice President can only be removed through the process of impeachment.

When the nomination was first announced, it appeared to have significant support among the electorate, but much has come to light in the past few months to indicate a dramatic turnaround.

While I do not presume to read the mind of the President, I cannot help but feel that if he had been totally aware of the manipulation of the Rockefeller fortune in some questionable areas, he would have had second thoughts about the nomination. At any rate, I sense that more and more people are having second thoughts about it. For that reason I sincerely feel that we should turn down this nomination and give the President an opportunity to select a nominee who enjoys greater support.

We have a special obligation to do this in light of recent political scandals which have rocked the Nation.

I do not oppose Mr. Rockefeller because of his wealth as much as I do because of the ethical questions raised by its use; not only in the gifts, but in the conflict of interest, the influence it may have on him in the day to day decision-making process as Vice President. His family fortune of $2.5 billion is invested heavily in national and international business not to mention seven major oil companies.

I see nothing legally wrong with the so-called "Rockefeller gifts", but I do question the judgment and propriety of such gifts when the recipients played a major role in political decisionmaking, including influence upon national and international affairs.

There is another critical area of national concern, where, in my judgment, Mr. Rockefeller falls short. Not everyone in this Chamber agrees with me that the greatest contributor to inflation is top-heavy Federal spending, which has resulted in too much money chasing too few goods.

But, if you do accept such a premise, then the economic philosophy of Mr. Rockefeller is appalling. The record demonstrates conclusively that as Governor of the State of New York, Mr. Rockefeller helped spend the State into financial chaos.

I know of no other man in America who should appreciate the value of the dollar more than Mr. Rockefeller, but apparently he lacks some degree of sensitivity to the taxpayer's dollar as Governor of New York during the period 1959 through fiscal 1974, the cost of State government soared from just under $2 billion a year to around $9 billion a year.

Under Mr. Rockefeller the taxpaying citizens of New York saw incredible increases in their tax burden. During his tenure, the maximum rate on the personal income tax went from 7 percent to 15 percent. In just 15 years, taking into account all forms of tax levies, the people of New York were hit with a tax bite that almost quintupled.

During his tenure, the State gasoline tax went from 4 to 8 cents a gallon. Cigarette tax has climbed from 3 cents to 15 cents a pack, and a 4 percent sales tax went on the books.

Through the efforts of Mr. Rockefeller ways were devised to obligate State funds far into the future without permission from the people in the form of a constitutionally required referendum; thus, although the people of New York have approved only $3.4 billion in bonded indebtedness, they owe another $7.7 billion in long-term obligations, which were never submitted to the electorate for approval. As a result the State had to pay more than half a billion dollars in debt service last year, which represented double the figure of just 5 years earlier. The future of the people of New York is thus heavily mortgaged for many years to come. I cannot help but wonder how members of this House could entrust the future of the entire Nation to a man who has handled the affairs of one of our largest States with such disregard for the taxpayers and their limited earnings.

Very few economists would argue against the point that the taxpayers of New York State are the most overburdened in the Nation.

Make no mistake about it, as Vice President, Mr. Rockefeller will have incredible say in the Nation's economic affairs. And, if he applies the same economic rationale to the country as he applied to New York State, then God help us, because we'll be going to the poor house in short order.

December 19, 1974

During the confirmation hearings, Mr. Rockefeller has displayed no economic changes of heart. On the contrary, his public utterances convince me that he will be a strong proponent of the spend, spend, spend, theory.

Well, this is an outmoded solution to the Nation's economic woes, and I think the American people deserve a Vice President who has some fresh ideas about cutting inflation instead of the shopworn Keynesian approach, which Mr. Rockefeller apparently advocates.

Mr. Chairman, I am truly sorry to vote against the President's selection of a Vice President, but in good conscience I cannot do otherwise. I have been acquainted with Mr. Rockefeller and his wife, Happy. They are indeed fine people from a family that has given much to making America a better place to live. He is a courageous, hard-working man.

I would like nothing better than to support the nomination; but, I reiterate that in my judgment it does not meet with majority approval on the part of the American people. Also, the revelations concerning the monetary gifts do little to restore public confidence. His wealth presents a potential conflict of interest in the decisions he must make, and lastly, we need a Vice President who believes in cutting Government spending and restoring the economic decisionmaking power back to the taxpayer. I urge that the nomination, therefore, be rejected.

Mr. McCLODY. Mr. Chairman, I do not have any further requests for time. I want to say on my own behalf that in my opinion the Committee on the Judiciary of the House have fully discharged their responsibilities, and a reading of the hearings, the committee report, and the debates in my opinion fully support this confirmation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, the hour has come for the ending of the debate. I think this has been a temperate debate. It has been conducted on a high level, and I wish to compliment all those who have participated in this historic proceeding.

I hope and trust that a case has been made for objection to the nomination notwithstanding the fact that the other body has acted in the affirmative, and at this very moment arrangements are being made there for investiture proceedings, and where the networks are ready to televise the swearing in of the nominee, should he be so sworn in. However, I hope and trust that this House will not supinely accept what appears to be its allotted fate, and will instead vote, and vote with courage, "no" on this nomination.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. REID).

Mr. REID. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President.

Mr. Chairman, I have known Nelson Rockefeller for a number of years and in several incarnations.

His nomination for Vice President, with the possibility that at some point in time he could become President, is a question—and a vote—on which I have given considerable thought.

Although I have frequently differed with Nelson Rockefeller in matters of public policy, I support his nomination as Vice President. The primary, indeed critical, need of the Nation, at a time of incipient depression, is for firm, creative, and experienced leadership. Nelson Rockefeller has demonstrated those qualities. He has also shown remarkable ability to attract to government some of the best talent available. I may differ with him on specific questions of priorities, human needs, and indeed at times on judgment, but I cannot doubt his commitment to public service and his unique personal qualifications, nor his ebullience and faith in America.

I am hopeful that Nelson Rockefeller in concert with President Ford can help energize an administration and help restore confidence in our land, that tough decisions can be made, that sacrifices are called for, and that our country can act with compassion and decisiveness at home and with wisdom and forethought abroad.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, Vice President-designate Nelson Rockefeller is an unusual man whose consideration for appointment comes before us at an unusual time and under unusual circumstances. He is also a controversial man called to serve at a time of great controversy. He is a complicated man, who is being considered for a previously simple job at a time when simplicity seems to be greatly admired, but when the problems are very complicated. And, he is a rich man in a time when wealth has become a political embarrassment—even though it is a common goal.

Some members of my party believe that Mr. Rockefeller brings more political problems to the office of Vice President than can be tolerated by the administration which he will serve. And some others tout him as the solution to our Nation's problems.

But in fact, neither of those things may be true. Like the rest of us, he puts his pants on one leg at a time. He has many strengths and his share of human frailties. He will neither be our Nation's salvation or its downfall. But if past performance is any way to judge, he will do his best to contribute generously—even generously for one who has a great deal to give.

Nelson Rockefeller will join the executive branch of our Government at a time when our new President, Mr. Ford, is working manfully to assert his own leadership as our first nonelected Vice President to succeed to the Presidency. As the second nonelected Vice President is called upon to assist President Ford in the task of administrative leadership, his real or imagined weaknesses are not so significant as his strengths. I have not agreed with everything President Ford has ever done or said. So I do not agree with all of Nelson Rockefeller's views or actions during his career. But they have each been given more thorough public scrutiny than most other men who have occupied their positions. And each has stood the test as an honorable man.

Nelson Rockefeller need not have devoted a life to public service or responded to the calls of national leaders of both parties to exercise his talents in a wide variety of governmental fields. His family need not have used its talents to further expand its talents. And there is no requirement that persons of wealth use that wealth toward social good. Many people with much less of the world's wealth have chosen to use their wealth merely in pursuit of self-gratification. But not the Rockefeller's. They have been good, hard working and generous citizens of the Nation which gave their family an opportunity to do or be whatever it had the capacity to do or be.

My predecessor once said of Nelson Rockefeller—

Can you think of anyone who owes more to the American system of opportunity and who has more at stake in trying to conserve that system?

I will place my bet on Nelson Rockefeller's efforts and his prospect for success. He is a proven administrator and a natural leader who has the capacity and the good sense to gather men of talent and integrity about him. We need those qualities very badly at a time when public service is in question. I will cast my vote for him.

And I will offer him my best wishes and my prayers that he will receive and accept God's guidance as he begins his difficult undertaking. Even those who oppose him here today must wish him only success.

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Chairman, my decision to vote for Mr. Rockefeller is based largely upon his civil rights record which I understand to be supportive of these rights for all Americans. A person's record in this area I believe to be the most significant indicator of all as to the kind of person he or she is. I find other considerations in Mr. Rockefeller's record and background mixed. Moreover it is difficult to know what standards should be applied in judging this record. I am uneasy about the marriage of wealth and political power about which Joseph Rauh, vice chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, spoke so forcefully in his testimony before the Judiciary Committee. Nevertheless, since the 25th amendment requires me to make a decision, I shall vote aye.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, this is an historic moment in our history. I had the privilege of voting for the 25th amendment to the constitution and tonight I will have the privilege of voting to confirm the nomination of a candidate for Vice President under that amendment. In fact, Mr. Chairman this is the second time this year that we have seen democracy work by voting to confirm President Ford and now Mr. Rockefeller for the second highest office in the land. Mr. Chairman, I have been requested by several persons to vote against the nominee because he has too much wealth or because he is too liberal for the Republican administration or for other reasons; however, I sincerely believe President Ford has the right to choose his own Vice President and in the absence of any wrongdoing by the nominee as adjudicated by a court of law, I feel obligated by my conscience and for the good of the country to vote tonight for the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller as the next Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, we are living in critical and uncertain times. The call for strong leadership is crying out. Government is like a chain, it is no stronger than the weakest link. We need a strong President and Vice President. When one office is vacant, that becomes an impossibility. On behalf of southern Illinois, we want to offer the new Vice President that will surely be confirmed tonight, the prayers and best wishes for successful service to our country.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to cast my vote in opposition to the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. I would like to take this opportunity to discuss this difficult decision.

Allegations have been made that Mr. Rockefeller should not be confirmed by virtue of his wealth alone. Mr. Rockefeller certainly is a wealthy man. However, wealth alone should not disqualify Mr. Rockefeller from serving his country. Nowhere in the Constitution is a citizen forbidden from seeking public office by virtue of either his wealth or lack of it.

Our decision today is not whether Mr. Rockefeller should be considered as a candidate for Vice President, but whether in our judgment Mr. Rockefeller is qualified morally and professionally to serve in the highest office of the land with the right to succeed to the Presidency.

Mr. Rockefeller's professional qualifications are impressive by any standard. However, the conduct of his personal financial affairs raises serious moral questions concerning the way in which Mr. Rockefeller perceives his obligations and responsibilities as a private citizen to his government. Over the past 15 years Governor Rockefeller has made approximately $3 million in gifts and loans to associates both inside and outside government. Legal questions have been raised regarding Mr. Rockefeller's gifts and loans to public officials. These issues regard a possible violation of New York State law, which unfortunately, remain unresolved.

Issues of law aside, however, Mr. Rockefeller's gifts reveal a callous insensitivity to any standard of propriety. What is worse, while Mr. Rockefeller has demonstrated an eager willingness to assist his friends and associates in financial trouble, he demonstrates no similar sense of responsibility in supporting his Government. In 1970, after an IRS audit, Mr. Rockefeller paid a tax liability of $104,180 on a total income of $2,257,241. Before the audit, Mr. Rockefeller reported no income tax liability for that year. How can we measure Mr. Rockefeller's tax patriotism? At his income level, a taxpayer can decide through his estate planning whether he will pay any Federal tax. How are we to interpret his initial decision to pay no tax? Is there no obligation to the Government which provides shelter and protection of his fortune. Is there no obligation to support a Government which has permitted his fortune to grow?

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize that Mr. Rockefeller used every loophole in the book to minimize his tax liabilities. What these facts demonstrate, however, is that Mr. Rockefeller is virtually unaware of the responsibilities his wealth entails for him as a citizen of the United States. For a man who makes millions of dollars each year, the least the American people can properly expect is a small contribution in support of our Federal Government.

Finally, in these days of oil crisis, can we be certain of Mr. Rockefeller's objectivity if a decision must be made to deal with the oil producing nations on a government-by-government basis, instead of dealing through American corporations and banks in which his family has great holdings and historic control? Can Mr. Rockefeller insure a sufficient degree of objectivity if it might become necessary to drastically reduce or eliminate oil imports? Does Mr. Rockefeller possess that degree of objectivity necessary to pass judgment on the elimination of the foreign tax credit, proposals to deny U.S. support for petroleum search abroad or high import taxes on oil? Can Mr. Rockefeller objectively support tax programs which would subject equity sales of American-held oil assets in foreign countries to taxation as domestic capital gains?

In my considered judgment, there are grave risks in the degree of impartiality that can be expected from a person with Mr. Rockefeller's extensive involvement.

The integrity of the office of Vice President, or President, would constantly be challenged by the appearance or the fear of potential conflict of interest.

While I admire the many achievements of Nelson Rockefeller as Governor of New York and as a Federal official, I cannot approve his appointment as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Chairman, for the second time in a year we are voting on the confirmation of a Vice President. In 1967 the Nation ratified the 25th amendment which provides for the interim appointment and confirmation of a Vice Presidential nominee submitted by a President. I believe that the Congress is limited in the criteria it can use in determining whether to confirm or reject a nominee under the 25th amendment. We are not being asked to endorse the nominee's political philosophy. We are being asked to confirm that he or she is capable of fulfilling the oath of office, namely to "faithfully execute the Office of the President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

When we voted on December 6, 1973 on the confirmation of Gerald Ford as Vice President, I set forth the criteria of the 25th amendment as I saw them, which I believed compelled my voting for him. I said then that I believed Gerald Ford "is an honest man. I believe he is intellectually able. I believe that his philosophy, though different from mine, is within the mainstream of the Republican party."

I think that the same is true of Nelson Rockefeller. I have read the Judiciary Committee's report, including the dissenting opinions, and I have listened to the debate. I have been concerned about some of the financial questions raised. I know that the nominee is not without blemish. But, I also know that he has had a long history of public service, he has been a hard and demanding leader, and in the passage of this much time there have been some instances in which he has made some wrong judgments and decisions. I have been offended by the loans and gifts that Nelson Rockefeller has made to public office holders and I am introducing legislation tomorrow to require full public disclosure of future gift giving by public office holders. I will reintroduce this bill on the first day of the 94th Congress. After the many weeks of long and intensive investigation, I had to conclude, as did the majority on the House Judiciary Committee including one of its most probing members, BARBARA JORDAN, that no evidence had been brought forward establishing corruption or dishonesty on the part of Mr. Rockefeller.

I also am concerned about the enormous wealth of the Rockefeller family and the power and the potential abuse of power that accrues from that magnitude of wealth. I am aware of the fact that the Rockefeller family has financial interests all over the world. But, I also know that Nelson Rockefeller has devoted his life to unstinting and capable public service. Since coming to Congress I have worked with him on several matters in support of New York's interests. The care that Nelson Rockefeller has demonstrated in past years for the poor, the handicapped, and the education of our children, leads me to believe that he will not abuse his office and that he will strive to uphold and protect the Constitution and remember that this is a government of, for, and by the people—and that indeed he is a public servant. Just as I do not believe that any person should be denied office because of a lack of personal finances, I also do not believe that an individual should be denied office because of wealth.

Aside from the financial matters that have been thoroughly explored in the committee, I also have been concerned about his position on Israel. During the House Judiciary Committee hearings Mr. Rockefeller had an unfortunate exchange with our colleague from Pennsylvania (Mr. EILBERG) on the subject of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Nelson Rockefeller has assured me subsequently by letter that he understands Israel's refusal to deal with the Palestine

Liberation Organization and that he is supportive of Israel and believes that "the preservation of Israel is not only in the U.S. national interest, but it is also a moral imperative."

In saying the foregoing, I want to note that while voting to confirm Nelson Rockefeller's nomination in extraordinary circumstances under the 25th amendment, this does not mean that I am endorsing his future political candidacy. As I indicated earlier, I do not believe that in voting to confirm an individual nominated by the President for the Vice Presidency, a Member of Congress can demand the same political and philosophical agreement that one does in endorsing a candidate in a general election. I expect that I will disagree with some of the administrative and political decisions of the Ford-Rockefeller administration. And I have no doubt that the Democrats will nominate a Presidential candidate who will represent my political philosophy as opposed to Nelson Rockefeller who represents the Republican Party's philosophy. I will not hesitate to support the Democrat's candidacy against Mr. Rockefeller if he is the Republican Presidential nominee. Furthermore, I would hope that the Democrat's financial disclosure will not have the blemishes of the Rockefeller disclosures—and so I would expect to refer in the campaign to the negative material disclosed concerning Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. Chairman, I have thought long and hard on this matter. On balance I believe that Nelson Rockefeller should be confirmed.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote to confirm Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

It is a reluctant vote. I cannot be enthusiastic about the ambitions of a man who is now achieving by appointment, a status he failed to reach through normal political processes on three occasions. His own political party rejected his Presidential aspirations three times, and now we are asked to approve his nomination as the potential successor to the Presidency.

However, Mr. Chairman, the 25th amendment to the U.S. Constitution imposes upon us the duty of considering his fitness and qualifications, not our political differences with him. Although he is not my choice for the Vice Presidency, he is the choice of President Ford. We must give great weight to the need of a President to have a Vice President in whom he has trust and confidence. The Presidential team will survive or fail on their record of performance.

Indeed, I believe we are duty bound to confirm this nomination unless we find extremely compelling reasons to do otherwise. My great political differences with Nelson Rockefeller are not sufficient reason to vote against confirmation.

There is evidence that the Rockefeller family has recognized the public responsibilities associated with immense wealth, and that Nelson Rockefeller has a strong commitment to public service.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that he serves our Nation well.

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of House Resolution 1511 to confirm the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States. My vote on this most important issue will be cast with the knowledge that a most unique constitutional crisis has been passed by the American people with the strength necessary to prove and sustain our democratic system of government.

The 25th amendment to our Constitution may not be perfect—in fact I believe we should reexamine the provisions of that recently passed amendment during the next session of Congress—but it has provided us with the vehicle to continue on in our search for answers to very difficult problems at home and abroad.

The nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to assume the duties of the Vice Presidency has been examined by appropriate congressional committees with a careful eye. The results of the investigations have been published for all to read.

There are certain issues which have been raised during these investigations that disturb me—issues involving the vast wealth of the Rockefeller family, gifts made to public officials, and charges of political dirty tricks. There have also been many differences between the former Governor of my State of New York and myself over important substantive matters and of course the Attica prison incident. Notwithstanding these concerns and differences, the results of the investigation also indicate that Nelson Rockefeller is a man with a long record of public service, with no traces of corruption in his personal activities, and with the kind of broad experience in foreign and domestic matters which we need in the individual who will occupy the second highest position in Government.

In addition to his personal qualifications, Nelson Rockefeller has been elected and reelected to the governorship of the populous State of New York four times in the past, a sign of voter confidence which is important when we consider that this is the first time in our Nation's history when both the Presidency and Vice Presidency shall be filled by appointment rather than direct election. While I have reservations about this unusual procedure allowed by the 25th amendment, I am pleased that the nomination pending before us has in its favor a record of previous voter support. In 2 years the voters will have the opportunity to directly elect their highest officeholders so essential to our system.

I cannot allow partisanship to stand in the way of the urgent needs of our Nation for an active Vice President who is qualified to participate in policymaking decisions at the highest level of Government. I believe Nelson Rockefeller has the qualifications to serve in that capacity. He has undergone one of the most thorough personal examinations ever witnessed in our nominating process and I believe the plus outweighed the minus findings.

For these reasons I will vote in favor of the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, these remarks are in support of the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President. It seems difficult to believe, however, that we are for the second time in little more than a year proceeding to confirm a Vice President under the 25th amendment.

In my remarks on that earlier occasion when the House voted to confirm Jerry Ford as Vice President, I expressed the belief that as long as we have a party that can attract to its ranks and develop as leaders people like Jerry Ford, we still have a future, and a great one, for service to our Nation.

This belief has been reinforced, Mr. Chairman, by President Ford's selection of former Gov. Nelson Rockefeller whose record of public service has convinced me of his capabilities to serve well as a strong and effective Vice President.

Mr. Rockefeller was one of the three choices I submitted upon request from the White House to recommend nominees for the office of Vice President.

A number of people in my district have expressed strong opposition to Mr. Rockefeller. During the hearings I have kept an open mind; but none of the information brought out in either the House or Senate investigation is, in my view, of sufficient weight to change my initial opinion.

I have previously noted that President Ford wisely gave great weight to a proven record of experience in government in nominating his Vice President; and, in the case of Nelson Rockefeller, the record is an outstanding one.

I was fortunate to have been able to personally observe Mr. Rockefeller's qualifications when he testified before my House Public Works Committee during water pollution hearings on July 28, 1971. At that presentation I was deeply impressed with his breadth of knowledge in this complicated area. He was not only well informed; he was frank and realistic. He was without doubt one of the best witnesses we had; and, if the committee had paid better attention to his testimony, we would have written a better law than we did.

Mr. Chairman, it will not be my purpose to summarize the arguments for and against this nomination. Members of the committee have done this in their report which I commend. Suffice it to say I think we are fortunate in this country to have the number of people we do who participate in public service and sacrifice for it. I hope the day never comes when we will invoke unwelcome restraints against unlimited participation in public service by reason of race, creed, or color, or for other reasons such as wealth or lack of it.

This Congress has just proudly passed a campaign reform act with a modified public financing of Presidential campaigns. This is in recognition, among other considerations, of the fact that we do not want a qualified candidate of modest means to be denied the chance to run for the Presidency or Vice Presidency—or conversely to give a candidate of great wealth unfair advantage. With this in mind, it seems rather unfair to invoke the specter of wealth as a bar to public service.

Mr. Rockefeller has run the gamut of the elective process in a large "city-State" on four occasions. He has been carefully scrutinized by voters, the Congress, and the press. The results of that scrutiny and his record in New York State in perspective persuade me that his nomination should be approved.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I have made it clear in what I have said previously that I do not plan to vote to confirm this nomination. I would just like to add a few thoughts to what I have said. It is quite possible to do one's best to achieve one's highest potential in achievement and in character, for both himself and for mankind, and still find particular responsibilities and particular opportunities closed to him. Not every athlete can be a poet. Not every businessman can be an orator. When a person's financial holdings are such that serious conflicts of interest are inevitable if that person were to hold public office, then that person, however noble and however able, should not be placed in that public office. That is the case before us today.

Mr. TALCOTT. Mr. Chairman, our decision today on the confirmation of the President's nominee for Vice President is as critical and momentous as any decision we have made during this Congress.

Most of the questions have been thoroughly and extensively debated and discussed—in the Congress and out. There is no need for further repetition.

Our Nation has been without a Vice President for 4 months. Granted the circumstances are unique, the hiatus has been delayed too long. Effective representative government should be able to act more expeditiously.

I have certain philosophical differences with Governor Rockefeller and he was not the person I recommended to the President for nomination as Vice President. I admittedly cannot fully appreciate the magnitude or the impact of his personal and family wealth.

But, the committees of the Congress, the news and commentary media, and the Rockefeller adversaries have thoroughly investigated and exposed every aspect of Mr. Rockefeller's personal, political, public, business, and family life. They have pried far beyond the bounds of civility and necessity, except in the area of the political impact or influence of the Rockefeller Foundations, which, to my amazement, was largely neglected.

Frankly, Mr. Rockefeller's personal stature and his qualifications and capabilities to serve as Vice President were enhanced by the hearings in the House and Senate.

He bested his detractors and condemners in almost every instance.

He demonstrated a sincere commitment for public service far beyond any large personal ambition or self-aggrandizement.

His background and experience in State, local, and international affairs are sorely needed in the administration.

He is the President's choice for many good reasons. We in the Congress have a constitutional obligation to pass upon the President's nomination. We have a moral and political obligation to try and make our system work.

In spite of my reservations concerning Governor Rockefeller, I must consider the alternatives. No other name has been suggested that could be confirmed expeditiously by this Congress or the next.

For these and other reasons I shall vote to confirm Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. I wish him great success, personal satisfaction, and Godspeed. I trust and believe that his every deed will be in the best interests of the United States.

Mrs. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, when Gerald R. Ford was nominated by former President Nixon under the 25th amendment for the vacancy in the Office of Vice President, most of the Members of the House were transported with joy. The Republican Members were overjoyed that their minority leader in the House had been singled out for such recognition. The Democrats, while holding the minority leader in great esteem, and regarding him as a friend, had somewhat different feelings about his nomination for the Vice Presidency.

We had a growing conviction in those days that whoever was named Vice President to succeed the disgraced Spiro Agnew would shortly be President of the United States, probably as a result of impeachment of Mr. Nixon by the House and conviction in the Senate. Mr. Ford would not have been our choice for President among all Americans eligible for the Office. But as between Mr. Nixon and Mr. Ford, or as between Mr. Ford and any other Republican Mr. Nixon might choose as his Vice-Presidential nominee, we regarded Gerald R. Ford as a man who could handle the Presidency with honor and integrity, virtues desperately needed in that Office at the time.

If we had refused to confirm Mr. Ford or any other Republican, and had proceeded to impeach Mr. Nixon and thereby cause his eventual removal from office, the elevation of a Democrat Speaker of the House to the Presidency would have lent credence to the charge some were making that the impeachment proceedings were politically motivated, representing an effort by the Democrats to reverse the results of the 1972 election. Most of the Democrats in the House were, I believe, sensitive to that charge and anxious to demonstrate its falseness.

Mr. Ford's elevation to the Vice Presidency proved our sincerity in pursuing impeachment proceedings.

But the situation is much different now from what it was when Mr. Ford was nominated for Vice President under the 25th amendment. There is not the remotest possibility of Mr. Ford being made the subject of impeachment proceedings. President Ford has requested confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller in order, he has told us, to have Mr. Rockefeller help him run the country. Aside from the fact that no Vice President in our history ever really ran anything while in that office, President Ford has many high positions available in his administration to which he could appoint Nelson Rockefeller with full confidence that the Senate would confirm him—perhaps not as energy czar but in almost any other field.

The point is that we do not really need a Vice President at this time. President Harry Truman felt that when the Vice Presidency was vacant, as it was during the 3 years and 9 months of his first term, that the Speaker of the House was the proper official to stand next in line to the President, because the Speaker was an elected official, elected not only by his congressional district constituents but by the Representatives of all of the people in all of the congressional districts in the country. And this idea was written into law at Mr. Truman's urging.

The argument of a year ago that a Republican had to be appointed Vice President because otherwise impeachment and removal of Mr. Nixon from office would result in overturning the 1972 election results, by placing a Democrat in the Presidency, holds no water now. President Ford was not elected by the people. The last time the people of this Nation spoke in an election, it was to vote resoundingly for the Democratic party.

The only reason, then, to name a Republican Vice President at this point is to provide for a continuation of a Republican Presidency in case anything should happen to the nonelected Republican President now in office. But I think the 1972 election results are no longer binding on anyone. I do not see any reason to confirm any Republican as Vice President at this time. The majority who voted for Nixon and Agnew in 1972 would not do the same thing today, knowing what they know now. There are no residual obligations upon us to anoint a new Vice President and possible President from the other party.

I have come to the conclusion that I will vote against Mr. Rockefeller's nomination, not only because filling the Office at this time holds no urgency from an administrative or political standpoint, but also, and more importantly, because Mr. Rockefeller is not in my opinion the person to be President of the United States in case a vacancy should occur between now and January 20, 1977.

He is a personable, knowledgeable, and extremely able politician. But he was rejected by his own party at least three times for the Republican nomination for President of the United States. And he was certainly never the choice of the Democrats for that office. He can make many fine contributions to the Ford administration in a variety of possible positions other than Vice President.

If his role as Vice President is to be chiefly a political one, then there is no reason for the Democrats in Congress to provide him with this possible stepping stone to the Presidency.

December 19, 1974

I will vote no on the nomination.

Mr. CAREY of New York. Mr. Chairman, this House has moved and expressed its support for Nelson Rockefeller of New York to be the 41st Vice President of the United States. I support that and wish to join with the countless others this day who wish him well as he undertakes his high office and duties.

We in New York have a long tradition, carried on in this case, of offering fine men for national leadership. The respective committees of the House and Senate have attested to the worthiness of Nelson Rockefeller. Their investigations were both thorough and complete—this man was tested and he met the test.

Nelson Rockefeller and I have differed in the past and I am sure we will again, in that spirit of debate that differentiates our Nation from so many others. But common to us is the desire to serve, and it is that bond that will always remain.

To the former Governor of my State, his lovely wife and entire family, I offer my most sincere congratulations and best wishes on this day and for the months ahead.

Mr. NIX. Mr. Chairman, I will vote today in support of the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States despite some of the testimony developed in Senate and House hearings on cash gifts made by the nominee to public officials associated with him.

Nelson Rockefeller, who has given generously of his time and fortune to many causes, is a liberal, a lifetime member of the NAACP and from 1961 through 1971 made personal contributions to the NAACP Legal Defense Fund totaling $76,250. He is a long and regular supporter of CORE and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

As Under Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, he led the fight to obtain $6 million from Congress for Howard University construction. The Rockefeller Brothers Fund in its annual report shows current contributions of $860,000 in its 1972 annual report to such organizations as the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, the NAACP Special Contribution Fund, the National Council of Negro Women, and the National Urban League. The ties between Nelson Rockefeller and his family to equality and rights for black Americans stretch back to the time of the Underground Railroad in the 1850's. As a wealthy family their contributions to good and great causes have been freely and often.

It is the very generosity of Nelson Rockefeller which has raised an issue as to his confirmation to the Vice Presidency of the United States.

Testimony developed the following facts: Nelson Rockefeller had given to various friends involved in politics gifts totaling $2 million. Among these gifts or loans, later written off, was $625,000 to Dr. William J. Ronan, chairman of the New York Port Authority, Edward Logue, president of the New York State Development Corp., who received $31,389 as a gift and $145,000 as a loan; and Emmett Hughes, journalist, who received a total of $155,000. In no case was there any evidence established that Nelson Rockefeller had received any improper consideration from persons who were recipients of such gifts. What was established was the power of a man with immense wealth who had spent, all told, in his political career an amount close to $20 million on his career.

What has been established is the Rockefeller search for talent often involved the giving of outside income to those he wished to retain in public service or in political life.

These matters have a sensational impact but must be weighed in the balance against a liberal record as Governor of New York. This record includes:

The first statewide law in the United States prohibiting discrimination in private housing, a later extension of this legislation covered 95 percent of the private housing in New York State.

The development of the largest public university system in the world, which grew from 41 campuses and 38,000 students to 72 campuses and 232,000 full-time students and increased the number of community colleges from 13 to 38.

The initiation of the Nation's largest State medical care program for the needy under Medicaid creation.

The initiation of increased worker benefits in five minimum wage increases, five workmen's compensation increases, and four worker disability increases and New York's first minimum wage law.

The veto of a 1972 bill prohibiting busing.

Provided State aid for expenses in achieving school racial balance.

Initiated affirmative action in the construction industry hiring of minorities.

Created a tax break system for bringing jobs to low-income areas.

Nelson Rockefeller's career in public affairs began long before his election to the governorship of New York. He began his career under Franklin Roosevelt and he has taken an intense interest in foreign affairs. He maintained that interest while he was Governor of New York. Nelson Rockefeller was one of the first to speak out in behalf of the $2.2 billion military aid program on behalf of Israel on October 21, 1972, when Israel's need was greatest.

I believe that Nelson Rockefeller must not be discriminated against because of his wealth in voting on his nomination. I believe that his public life weighs in the balance against the bad judgment he used in making cash gifts to retain the services of New York State officials and political officials. That bad judgment highlights a brilliant career, a career that must not stop this afternoon in this Chamber.

I urge the Members of the House to support this nomination.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have given a great amount of thought to Mr. Rockefeller's nomination as Vice President of the United States.

In the first place, I thought about Attica which I see as an unfortunate circumstance which was poorly handled. I read in one of the dissenting views to the committee report that his refusal to go to the prison or to so much as recognize as valid some of the prisoners' demands—even after repeated urgings of his staff who were at the scene—was based upon the fact that he did not want to appear on world television as "the man who failed in this thing." It is sad when a public official's concern for his image is placed above his prime responsibility which is to govern. For him, Attica was destined to be a "no win" situation, because his momentary reluctance to lead left many men dead and played even greater havoc with his image.

Second, I am, too, bothered by the fact that he saw fit while Governor of New York to make loans and grants to individuals holding high political office. The revelation of this sophisticated persuasion has not done much to enhance his moral image, and has accomplished even less in narrowing the credibility gap that our citizens feel about public officials.

Third, and more important, I have strong misgivings which stem from the fact that his confirmation as Vice President will forge a marriage between immense monetary power and enormous political power. This seems especially true in light of yesterday's Star-News article which said that President Ford is seriously considering establishing a Domestic Policy Board on which Vice President Rockefeller will serve as Chairman. This Board, as I understand its proposed structure, will bring together domestic advisers and Cabinet members for the purpose of charting the course of domestic policy. As we all know, that policy is inextricably interwoven with monetary policy which has to do with the shaping of world economy.

Mr. Ford, according to the Star-News, wants to get Mr. Rockefeller involved in domestic policy. He already is. It is not secret that the Rockefeller assets include stock in Eastman Kodak, General Electric, Dow Chemical and IBM, Standard of California, Exxon, Mobil, and the Chase Manhattan Bank, which has holdings in four of our Nation's largest airlines and all three television networks. Although he has indicated a willingness to place his fortune in blind trust, his holdings so permeate the American economy that his every domestic policy decision will be subjected to outcries of "conflict of interest."

Further, Mr. Rockefeller has indicated an unwillingness to speak out against covert CIA activities and has steadfastly supported huge defense spending. In my view today's economy needs less such spending and more policy commensurate with social needs. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I cannot cast my vote for Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, with the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller the United States will, for the first time in its history, have both a President and a

December 19, 1974

Vice President whom the American people never elected. It is regrettable that both of these offices were achieved through the provisions of the 25th amendment. However it would be improper if the entire burden resulting from the operation of this new amendment were to be entirely shifted to the specific individual now nominated pursuant to it. For the reality is that we do now have a void in the second highest executive office in our Nation. It is necessary to fill that void, and the only mechanism now available to us is that provided by the 25th amendment.

Since the 25th amendment has seen such rapid and successive usage in the past year, I think it is vitally important to clarify what the responsibilities of Congress and its Members are when preparing to confirm a Vice President. The nomination of a Vice President is unique by its character and importance. It is also clear that the President and Congress are to be equal partners in the process, with the Congress particularly reflecting the popular will. Those criteria which are appropriate for the President to use when nominating, or for the people to use if they were electing, are proper for the Congress to use when confirming. The nominee should be evaluated as a potential President, and the level of scrutiny which ought to apply to a Vice Presidential nomination must be higher than that which is exercised by Congress over other Presidential nominations.

As responsible Members of Congress we must be aware of the likely ultimate consequences of our decision. If Mr. Rockefeller is not confirmed another individual will be nominated under the 25th amendment. Would it be Mr. Goldwater? Mr. Reagan? I am not comforted by the alternative selection list. A careful analysis of all those with any reasonable chance of subsequent nomination by Mr. Ford reveals no other Republican official with the equivalent experience in public affairs, or a similar commitment to solving the problems of the minorities and disadvantaged of our Nation. And it is only natural to expect that Mr. Ford would choose a second nominee from the ranks of Republicans, and would choose a man at least as compatible with his own views and philosophy as is Mr. Rockefeller.

Many persons are opposed to Mr. Rockefeller on the basis of what occurred at Attica. I, too, have strong feelings and a vivid memory of what took place at Attica. I condemned it for what it was, a damnable act. But in arriving at my decision as to how to cast this vote, I cannot isolate Attica. I must view it in the total analysis of the man. I do not know of any person with whom I would be in agreement upon the totality of his record or with all aspects of his general philosophy of government. My vote, therefore, must reflect upon the nominee's overall fitness to serve as Vice President.

Much has been said in recent weeks about the manner in which the enormous financial Rockefeller empire has been utilized. Much has been said about the gifts and loans which were made by Mr. Rockefeller and the purposes for which they were made. As a black American one of my main concerns was how the utilization of such wealth had adversely or favorably affected black Americans. I was principally concerned as to whether it had been used to the disadvantage of black Americans. For that reason I have taken the time to research the issue, because it is important that when I put the total picture together on Mr. Rockefeller from a black perspective, that all the facts be known.

No area of life in America today is more important to me than the area of education. Much progress has been made in this Nation by black Americans by utilization of the educational process, yet the acquisition of higher education has not been easy nor have black Americans had the equal access to higher education available to other Americans. In this category I cannot help but think of the tremendous financial undertaking which the United Negro College Fund undergoes each and every year in attempting to obtain from private resources the funds necessary to educate black youth in institutions of higher learning. My research led me to the fact that in 1881 the first college for black women was founded in Atlanta, Ga.

This institution was originally known as the Atlanta Baptist Female Seminary, but in 1920 its name was changed to Spelman College because of the significant financial contribution of John D. Rockefeller, whose wife's maiden name was Laura Spelman. This institution is today one of America's outstanding places of higher learning. Over the years the Rockefeller family has continued to contribute money to Spelman College, affording the opportunity for higher learning to thousands of black women. This year alone the Rockefeller Brothers Fund contributed $1 million to the college.

The first college for black women was only the beginning of the Rockefeller contribution to minority education. John D. Rockefeller founded the General Education Board, which was later to become the United Negro College Fund. The latest Rockefeller Brothers Fund donation to UNCF was $300,000. The total of all Rockefeller contributions to minority education is about $62 million.

Nelson Rockefeller demonstrated his commitment to black education when, as Under Secretary of HEW he managed to get $6 million from Congress for Howard University. As Governor of New York he was also active in this area, establishing the SEEK program which aided 15,000 disadvantaged youths seeking higher education. He also created the Higher Educational Opportunities Program which increased black attendance considerably in State universities.

There has been Rockefeller philanthropy toward minorities in many areas. The NAACP has been the recipient of on the average of $75,000 a year from the Rockefeller Brothers Fund. Nelson Rockefeller's personal contributions to the NAACP totaled $76,250 between 1961 and 1971, and he is a lifetime member of the association.

The Rockefeller Brothers Fund has been contributing to the National Urban League since 1921, providing their own money plus entrees to other sources. Nelson Rockefeller has been effective in soliciting millions of dollars for the League from the giants of American industry. He personally chaired several Urban League affairs and it was through his influence that the League became the only organization to have the fundraising benefit of a showing of the Rockefeller family's collected art works. The combined total of all Rockefeller donations to the National Urban League is the most impressive fact of all. It amounts to $8,399,501.03.

In the final analysis I do not wish to point merely to the pecuniary gain afforded to blacks by the Rockefeller family. My real concern is the history of this man and his family in terms of their commitment to minorities, the poor, and the disadvantaged. I must peer into the future also to see what his commitment will be to black Americans and the only criterion I have is his family's proven commitment over the years in terms of their vast contributions to the lives of minorities in this Nation. When I add up all the facts and take a look at the total picture I cannot discount their enormous assistance to black progress. For that reason I have no problem in casting my vote for the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States of America.

Mr. DON H. CLAUSEN. Mr. Chairman, today, December 19, 1974, marks another very significant day in our Nation's history. As a result of unparalleled and unprecedented circumstances related to the Presidency, we are asked to assume our constitutional responsibility and vote to confirm or reject the recommendation of the President that Nelson A. Rockefeller become Vice President of the United States.

This responsibility is delegated to us by virtue of the authority established by section 2 of the 25th amendment which reads as follows:

Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Now it is up to this body to exercise its constitutional responsibility. The 25th amendment clearly defines both the executive and legislative authority involved in the process. The President submits his nomination and we, in the Congress, vote to support or reject his nominee on the basis of factual evidence.

As would be the case with every human being, we can judge a nominee for this office and find points of disagreement, concern over motives, questions of judgment and other factors. In the final analysis, however, my vote must be based upon Governor Rockefeller's capabilities, qualifications, and honesty.

The State Rules Committee and the House Judiciary Committee have completed their very comprehensive and extensive investigations of Governor Rockefeller's personal and public life and presented us a 1,411-page hearing record and a condensed committee report of findings, evaluations and a recommendation.

December 19, 1974

The exhaustive investigations of the two committees found Governor Rockefeller capable and qualified by virtue of his background and experience. Few men have had their lives scrutinized more thoroughly. We can rely on the diligent investigations that were made.

In addition, I am personally acquainted with Governor Rockefeller and have high regard for his professional talents and expertise. He has testified before the committees on which I serve on a variety of legislative proposals and I have always found him to be an able advocate of his viewpoints with a grasp of the facts and issues.

If Governor Rockefeller is confirmed—and it is generally apparent that the House will follow the pattern of the Senate and approve his nomination by a large majority—he is going to be granted a unique and unusual opportunity to serve his country.

With this special opportunity comes a special responsibility and challenge to discharge his duties fully and effectively in troubled and historic times. If, in the final analysis, he rises to the challenge, he will have secured his place in history and vindicated the trust placed in him by the American people through their Representatives in the Congress.

Very few people have had this opportunity. I shall vote to present this major challenge to Nelson Rockefeller and then we must all give him the support and assistance he will need to serve effectively in this high office.

Mr. ROUSH. Mr. Chairman, under the requirements of the 25th amendment the House of Representatives will once again today concur or disagree with the President's choice for Vice President of the United States. This is the second time in just over a year that we have exercised this responsibility of choosing for the American people in the second highest executive position in the Government.

Few of us would say that we accept such a responsibility gladly. But I believe every Member of the House approaches the vote on confirmation with a profound sense of the historic quality of this particular decision. Equally impressive is the fact that each of us in casting our vote must vote for every constituent in our district. Now I cannot vote as all 500,000 of my constituents would wish me to, but I can and will try to represent the best interests of them all in my choice.

I have determined that the best way I can do this is by voting for the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller for Vice President.

I do so with certain reservations. I am disturbed about the possible conflict of interest between the Rockefeller fortune and this high position in the Government. I think Mr. Rockefeller displayed perhaps admirable generosity, but something less than wisdom when he dispensed large sums of money to friends whose positions in government made those gifts suspect, whether correctly so or not.

But, on the other hand, I cannot find in all the hearings on this nomination over several months' time that Nelson Rockefeller was ever involved in an actual conflict of interest situation; that he ever used his political position to augment his family's fortune. So I will not vote against confirmation simply on the grounds that he has "too much money." Nothing in the Constitution disqualifies a person from holding office, because of the accident of being with or without a personal fortune. I would not want to make such a disqualification a precedent in this vote today.

We have now been without a Vice President since August. I believe that we badly need to fill that second post in our executive branch. This country is now facing a severe economic crisis. We need all the help that we can get. Our President needs all the advice and assistance that he can secure. President Ford seems to think that Nelson Rockefeller fills the bill on that score. I believe the President deserves to have the person of his choice for Vice President, unless that person is proven unqualified for the office. In political conventions the Presidential candidate alone chooses who his running mate will be. The 25th amendment recognizes the particular right of the President in that regard by providing that he will nominate the Vice President; the Congress confirm.

Nelson Rockefeller can provide the wealth of executive experience that President Ford lacks, which he seriously needs and certainly deserves. I believe the fact that Mr. Rockefeller served four terms as Governor of one of our largest States, that he has had 40 years of service at the local, State, and Federal governmental levels, that he has filled consultative and administrative positions under five Presidents, all led President Ford to his choice.

Finally, Nelson Rockefeller has endured a kind of public scrutiny that few can pass and he has survived this with dignity, affability, and candor. Although he has not always supported issues that I support, and in spite of the fact that we will doubtless disagree on other matters in the future, yet I believe that Nelson Rockefeller has shown himself to be a man of rich experience, personal integrity, and dedicated service to this Nation. He, therefore, will have my vote for confirmation for Vice President of the United States.

Mr. MEEDS. Mr. Chairman, the Congress has been called upon twice in as many years to confirm the nomination of a man who could become President of the United States without being chosen by popular vote.

The potential ascension of a Vice President selected under the 25th amendment procedure was dramatically demonstrated on August 9 when Gerald Ford, who we confirmed as Vice President a year ago, became the 38th President. With the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller, the United States will for the first time, have both a President and Vice President who achieved these offices without popular election.

Because of the enormous responsibility placed upon the Congress in lieu of a Presidential election, I have thought about Mr. Rockefeller's nomination for some time and carefully reviewed the results of the committee investigation. I have decided, somewhat reluctantly, to vote in favor of confirmation, because Mr. Rockefeller's overall record of public service outweighs the individual misjudgments he may have made in financial gift-giving and in campaign tactics.

I am not as disturbed as some of my colleagues over the Rockefeller wealth. If this is truly a nation where one's economic background should not be a basis for discrimination, then the rich as well as the poor should have equal opportunity to achieve in their own right. Mr. Rockefeller has stated his intention to place his financial holdings in a blind trust and has made full disclosure of that wealth. There has been no evidence brought forward that he has used his or his family's wealth to abuse the political system.

However, I am disturbed by the legal and ethical questions raised by his substantial gifts and loans to public officials while Governor of New York. I am also displeased by his involvement in a scurrilous campaign book on Arthur Goldberg, which he sanctioned, and his apparent lack of judgment and leadership in dealing with the Attica prison riot.

These are all serious allegations. But they must be considered in the context of Mr. Rockefeller's overall record of public service. Few individuals in the United States today can match his record of achievement in foreign and domestic affairs.

He served Presidents Roosevelt, Truman, and Eisenhower well in various foreign and domestic assignments of considerable responsibility. His 15-year record as Governor of New York is one of accomplishment and that, in a State with the problems of New York, is an achievement that can stand well by itself.

Although he may have a few isolated misjudgments on the public record, there is nothing that indicates to me that Nelson Rockefeller is incompetent or lacking in sufficient wisdom to serve as President of the United States. His overall record demonstrates just the opposite and on that basis I will vote for his confirmation.

Mr. LEGGETT. Mrs. Chairman, I have decided to vote to confirm Nelson Rockefeller to the Office of Vice President. Since this is a decision I have made with considerable reservation, I believe I should explain my reasoning in some detail for the record and for my own satisfaction.

Much of the debate over this nomination has centered on the wealth of the nominee's family. While the Rockefeller family money is immense, I see no sign that it has been used for antisocial purposes or in an illegal manner. While this wealth has been used to further his political career, there is no evidence that it has done so illegally; the fault is in the system of private election financing which allows wealthy candidates an advantage; I do not feel we can fairly blame Mr. Rockefeller for playing by the rules. In summary, I do not regard wealth as necessarily a barrier to public office.

On the other hand, the most commonly advanced argument in favor of Mr. Rockefeller's nomination is that he is supposedly an experienced and distinguished public servant who is fully qualified to serve as President should the need arise. This, too, strikes me as a very weak argument. Because a man has occupied many offices over many years does not necessarily mean he has learned anything. Distinction does not automatically accompany experience—witness Richard Nixon as a prime example of how it did not.

We must examine the substance of Mr. Rockefeller's record and his views. On this basis, I find most serious cause for concern.

His record on foreign policy and national security questions has been dismal. He opposed the test ban treaty. He advocated bombing North Vietnam a year before Lyndon Johnson did it.

More important than his specific views is his broad view of the place of the national security apparatus in a democratic society. Consider these two instances:

First. When asked by Congressperson HOLZMAN, in the course of his confirmation hearings, for his views on our CIA efforts to subvert the Allende government in Chile, he acted as if she had belched in church. His attitude was that it would not be proper for him to discuss such things in public. Clearly, he does not regard foreign policy as the servant of the American people.

Second. In discussing the decision to retake Attica by force, he said:

I'm not a military man or a police official. These are professional judgments. . . . I do not feel I have the competence to make the judgments and I think there's nothing more dangerous than a civilian messing in military activities and trying to impose . . . his judgment over those of the professionals. . . . My experience is that the best thing a well-intentioned civilian political personality can do is not try and impose his judgment on professional matters but to pick good people and back them up.

Mr. Chairman, I want to state as forcefully as I can that a President who does what the military tells him to do is no President at all. The Constitution designates the President as the Commander in Chief.

Last night the American Broadcasting Co. brought us a gripping and brilliantly executed 3-hour dramatization of the Cuban missile crisis. We saw how every military advisor, backed by the congressional delegation and many of the diplomats, emphatically insisted on an invasion of Cuba. We saw how they told the President that their professional judgment left no room for doubt that a quarantine would be a miserably inadequate response.

When a single U-2 pilot was shot down, the military demanded a massive air strike in retaliation. We saw how it was only through the determination of President Kennedy to avoid war and follow his best judgment that the casualties of that episode were limited to one person, when they could easily have been 1 billion.

What would have happened if Nelson Rockefeller, with the attitudes he has expressed, had been President at that time?

Briefly, there are several other points which cause me concern:

First, Rockefeller's conduct regarding the book on Arthur Goldberg can only be described as a gradually retreating coverup reminiscent of former President Nixon. Even today, he has not come clean regarding the reasons for disguising the Rockefeller family financial support for the book.

Second, throughout the Attica crisis he seemed to be less concerned about the lives of the hostages than about the impact the incident would have on his political image. This makes painful contrast with former Illinois Gov. Adlai Stevenson's handling of a similar riot in the midst of a Presidential campaign.

Third, he has frequently shown a tendency to evade rather than confront issues, to give Ron Ziegler-style answers to difficult questions, and to attack the image of a problem rather than its substance.

But when all that is said and done, I believe that on balance he should be confirmed. These are my reasons:

First, Mr. Rockefeller is obviously a man of intelligence and ability. These qualities are not in overabundance in the current administration.

Second, there is reason to hope he will grow in office.

Third, he seems to have none of the insecurity which caused Mr. Nixon to do many of the things he did. There are, after all, some advantages to having independently wealthy people in office.

Fourth, and probably most important. While Congress could, of course, reject nominee after nominee, I believe this would be a perversion of the spirit of the 25th amendment. I believe it is our duty to confirm somebody, and realistically speaking Mr. Rockefeller is the best nominee we are likely to get in spite of the objections I have mentioned.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the confirmation of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

On August 20 last, President Gerald R. Ford sent to the Congress his nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to succeed him as Vice President.

The processes of confirmation as provided by the 25th amendment to the Constitution have been pursued exhaustively. No nominee for public office has ever been scrutinized so thoroughly. And the life and service of Nelson Rockefeller has met the test.

As one who has enjoyed the privilege of his political partnership and close association for many years, this comes as no surprise. I have long recognized his eminent qualification for high public responsibilities.

Nelson Rockefeller possesses extraordinary ability, vast executive experience, and an uncommon knowledge of foreign relations. He will be a distinct asset to the Ford administration, and a credit to our country.

It will be my pleasure to join the overwhelming chorus of "ayes" in acclaim of his confirmation, and I take this final moment to extend my congratulations and cordial good wishes to Mrs. Rockefeller and their family in appreciation for what this great moment must mean to each of them.

May God bless and use Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller.

Mr. JAMES V. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, after carefully reviewing the record of Nelson Rockefeller, I have concluded that I must, in fulfilling the responsibility entrusted to me under the 25th amendment, cast my vote against confirming Mr. Rockefeller for Vice President.

While no one can seriously believe that one's wealth inherently disqualifies him from serving in public office, I suggest that the extent and nature of the Rockefeller family wealth are vastly different from those of any Federal officeholders ever in our history. Regrettably, Mr. Rockefeller has not been sensitive to the dangers created when great wealth and governmental authority are fused. To the contrary, he has at times acted as though his financial power is a legitimate instrument to effect his political and governmental purposes. His pouring large sums of money into foundations whose main function—in addition to benefiting his tax situation—is to further his political ambitions, and his large gifts to others in public life, are of especially great concern to me.

Of course, if Mr. Rockefeller stood before the voters of this country as a candidate for President or Vice President, they might well decide that he could be trusted to exercise sound discretion with regard to his wealth. But, standing in the stead of the voters, and reviewing the record before us, I can say neither that the serious questions raised by the Rockefeller wealth have been answered in a satisfactory manner, nor that the fears of abuse of power—of which we have had our fill in recent years—are groundless.

In addition, I find that Mr. Rockefeller's conduct indicates that he would be hostile to what I consider to be one of this Nation's most pressing needs—the need for tax reform. In reducing his tax liability, Mr. Rockefeller has, I feel certain, done nothing illegal, and indeed, this fact shows what the problem is. The flagrant loopholes which permit the wealthy to avoid paying their fair share of the tax must be closed, and we can hardly expect leadership on this issue from one who has so benefited from the present tax system.

Thus I shall vote against confirming Nelson Rockefeller for Vice President.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the one thing I am sure of, as we confront the question of whether or not Governor Rockefeller should be confirmed for Vice President, is that the 25th amendment to the Constitution, which mea culpa I voted for, should be changed.

December 19, 1974

We will soon have a President and a Vice President neither of whom was elected by the people, and one of whom was selected by a President who was forced to resign his office in disgrace.

This situation, which clearly we did not foresee when we passed the 25th amendment, seems to me to be clearly intolerable. My vote today will be in part a protest against that situation and against the constitutional amendment which gave rise to it.

One of the things that is wrong with the 25th amendment is that it offers no criteria by which the Congress is to act in passing upon the President's nomination. As I have discussed this matter with many colleagues, I have discovered that widely varying sets of criteria are being used by different Members.

In attempting to resolve this question of criteria in my own mind, I have come, first, to the conclusion that the process here is different from the confirmation of a Presidential appointment to a Cabinet position. In the case of a Cabinet position, one has to agree that a President is entitled to have working for him as a department head a person who shares the President's point of view on the major issues involved in the operation of that department. In such a case, the principal question faced by the Senate is whether the person is of good character and is qualified in terms of experience and ability, although in recent years questions of possible conflicts of interest have also been carefully examined by the Senate.

It seems clear to me that the 25th amendment procedure presents a different case. First of all, the language is different. In the case of a Cabinet appointment, the President nominates and, "with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoints"; in the case of a Vice President, the President "shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress."

The language of the 25th amendment, I submit, suggests that the power to appoint a Vice President is a shared power, in which the President and the two Houses of Congress are to act to a degree as surrogates of the voters who normally elect a President and a Vice President.

It was on this basis that I voted against the confirmation of Gerald Ford as Vice President. I said then that my vote "should not be construed as any reflection on Mr. Ford's character or ability" but that I felt it was "incumbent upon the President to nominate a person whose public record and views lay somewhere between his own and those of the majority of both Houses." Instead, I noted, the President had nominated a person who had "given him virtually 100-percent support."

This is not to say that a Congressman's vote on the matter of confirming a Vice President should be a partisan one; but it is to say that the criteria to be applied are broader than simply ability, experience, and character.

Turning now to the nominee before us, let me first say that I have found it extraordinarily difficult to decide how to vote.

There is no doubt that Nelson Rockefeller has had a distinguished career. He performed creditably in several appointive posts in the Federal Government, including Under Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. Earlier, as FDR's Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs and later as Chairman of the International Development Advisory Board, he was a pioneer in the field of international development. His book "Partners in Progress" admirably set forth the need for developmental programs and the concepts of technical assistance embodied in President Harry Truman's Point 4 program.

When he first began campaigning for the Presidency, Nelson Rockefeller was considered a representative of the liberal wing of the Republican Party, and during that period he apparently incurred to his credit, the lasting enmity of many representatives of the extreme right wing. If he had maintained this political posture, he would in my view have a very strong case for confirmation. But he has not; as Governor of New York, he moved steadily in a conservative direction, apparently trimming his views to what he considered to be the political winds. He showed courage on some issues—notably the sensitive issue of legislation on abortion—but he showed a regrettable lack of courage in his refusal to speak out on the two overriding issues of our time: the Vietnam war and Watergate.

I have read with care the various opinions expressed in the committee report and dissenting views, and I find I cannot agree wholly with any of them.

For example, I felt that Messrs. McCLOY and SMITH, who curiously were the only members of the committee majority to state their reasons for voting to confirm, brushed far too lightly over the very disturbing matter of large loans and/or gifts to public officials. I feel these transactions were highly inappropriate, to say the least. What if a President were to give half a million dollars to the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, for example? Would that not be considered intolerable?

Governor Rockefeller has virtually admitted that this was bad practice by undertaking not to make such gifts while holding national office, except in case of medical emergencies or something of that sort.

Yet I do not feel that the motivation for these loans or gifts was selfseeking or in any way sordid. To some extent, they resembled the contributions that Adlai Stevenson as Governor solicited from friends of his so that some of his State government appointees could afford to accept or remain in their jobs. The chief difference was that Nelson Rockefeller could afford to make the supplemental payments himself, and Adlai Stevenson could not.

In any case, as already noted, Governor Rockefeller has agreed not to repeat such loans or gifts in the future.

I also cannot agree with the dissenters' severe criticism of Rockefeller's acceptance of tens of millions of dollars from members of his family "to achieve his political desires;" that is, to finance his various campaigns. Until the recent changes in Federal and State laws, this was a not uncommon practice for those who had wealthy relatives, and the voters of New York State, at least, showed on several occasions that they did not object to such contributions or to the fact that Nelson Rockefeller and his family were almost uniquely wealthy people.

The authors of the dissenting views seem to recognize this when they say "The people of this Nation may believe it appropriate to merge vast economic power with enormous political power," but they go on to say that "a decision of such fundamental magnitude must be made by the people, themselves, in a direct election, rather than by Congress." I fail to see the logic of that distinction, especially since the dissenters elsewhere state that in acting under the 25th amendment, the President and the Congress "are acting as surrogates of all the electorate."

Thus I cannot accept the argument that Nelson Rockefeller should be denied national office, because of the extraordinary economic power he and his family are in a position to exercise. And I wonder if my friends, the dissenters, would have reached that conclusion if the nominee had been a person whose views on the issues had in general coincided with their own.

Thus, we come back to the question of the nominee's positions on public issues. So far as I can discern, Governor Rockefeller's views coincide almost totally with those of President Ford. In naming him, the latter made no concession whatever to the fact that the majority of both Houses hold very different views. This consideration leads me in the direction of casting my vote on the basis of the same reasoning that led me to vote against confirmation of Gerald Ford.

One final point: In meetings with my constituents I have often been asked—as, I am sure, have all my colleagues—whether in deciding how to vote on an issue I follow my own convictions or whether I am guided by the views of my constituents. My answer is that, if my conviction is a profound one, I will follow it, even though my constituents may feel differently; but that, if the issue is one on which I am ambivalent and on which I know the majority of my constituents have strong views, I will "vote my district."

During the fall campaign I discussed the Rockefeller nomination with my constituents in all parts of the 22d District, singly and in groups. By an overwhelming margin, their advice to me "vote no" and that is what I shall do.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote in support of Nelson Rockefeller's confirmation. I can see no valid reason to do otherwise. He is remarkably able and more than amply qualified for the office.

December 19, 1974

Those who oppose this confirmation seem to base their opposition on one or more of three grounds. Either they feel Mr. Rockefeller should be disqualified because of his personal wealth, or they find something unattractive in the fact that he has been generous with his money, or they disagree with his public position on some particular issue.

As one who feels very strongly that no person should be disqualified to serve in high public office for lack of wealth, I cannot consistently support the theory that an individual should be disqualified simply because he possesses financial wealth.

Having actively and wholeheartedly supported John F. Kennedy for the Presidency, I could not now oppose Mr. Rockefeller for the Vice Presidency on the grounds of his affluence.

As for the contention that Governor Rockefeller's personal gifts to friends and associates implies some sinister or unworthy motive, I find this the least impressive objection of all. Are we to condemn a person for being generous? Every instinct of decency cried out against such tortured reasoning.

And supposing Mr. Rockefeller may at one time or another have disagreed with you or me on some issue of public policy. What man who thinks for himself has not disagreed with me on one occasion or another? To search for a public official who agrees with me on every point would commit me to a more difficult quest than that of Diogenes.

And to expect such a person to be nominated by a President of the other party would be unrealistic in the extreme for any Democrat.

If not Mr. Rockefeller, whom would you desire President Ford to name? Whom indeed could we find who is better grounded by experience? Whom could we find who has dedicated more years of his life to the service of our country?

There probably is relatively little that I can tell the House which most Members do not already know about Nelson Rockefeller, but I am pleased to share a few of my personal observations and the results of my personal experience with this truly distinguished public servant.

For approximately 10 years, in the consideration of legislation involving such matters as water pollution abatement, economic development, highway and port improvements, the House Committee on Public Works has had occasion to receive testimony from the Governors of various States. Typically a Governor will have a prepared statement and will be accompanied by staff personnel to assist in the factual answering of specific questions posed by members of the committee.

Ever since his extremely remarkable appearance before our committee in 1965, I have been deeply impressed by the unique skills, broad knowledge, and total dedication of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller. He has been clearly the best informed and most informative witness who has appeared before our committee in discussions of these vital matters.

Consistently, Nelson Rockefeller has displayed a profound depth of knowledge and a truly surprising capacity for detailed information. While accompanied by a battery of experts, he hardly ever has had to call upon one of them for a complete and factual answer to specific and sometimes difficult questions posed by members of our committee. In almost every instance, he has had the information we desired at his very fingertips and has replied lucidly, responsibly, and informatively to an almost infinite variety of questioning. More than once, he has volunteered suggestions which were innovative and creative. His mental capacity has been more than amply demonstrated in these appearances, and I have been very greatly impressed by his total grasp of deep and perplexing public problems.

More recently, during the past 2 years, I have had the privilege of serving with him as a member of the National Commission on Water Quality, of which Governor Rockefeller has served as Chairman. Here his decisive leadership and great executive capability have become known to me. He has the ability to assimilate enormous volumes of information, to sift through the outer froth and burn quickly to the center core of each issue. His questioning of expert witnesses is sharp and incisive. His ability to organize professional staff personnel and professional consultants into a purposeful and effective team is almost unrivaled in my experience.

In my judgment, there can be no question that Nelson Rockefeller possesses breadth of knowledge and experience, the traits of personality and the keen mental acuity to perform the duties of the Vice Presidency in a truly outstanding manner.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, despite some doubts, I vote to confirm Mr. Rockefeller. I do so in conformance with what I conceive to be my duties under article XXV, section 2, that I must vote to confirm unless the nominee is unqualified.

The doubts arise from the blend of vast financial and political power symbolized by Mr. Rockefeller.

Consider the financial empire in which Mr. Rockefeller family hold such substantial interests. In Vietnam, Thiokol-powered McDonnell Douglas aircraft use IBM or Itek guidance to drop bombs made by Automaton Industries; ground forces, flown in by Pan Am, guided by ITT communications, use vehicles fueled by Mobil, Chevron, and Amoco. In the United States, the family holds substantial interest in 17 of the top 100 military contractors. In Peru and Venezuela, political disputes rage over Exxon subsidiaries.

It is reported that Mr. Rockefeller has offered to put his financial holdings in a blind trust, and to forgo the financial butting up of political associates. These decisions are commendable.

But the larger question remains: Is it wise, in a democracy, to encourage the marriage of extreme wealth and high political power? The Milwaukee Journal perceived the danger 70 years ago in an editorial in which it saw the coming of the first billionaire, the original John D. Rockefeller, the nominee's grandfather. Said the editorial:

A billion dollars in the possession of one family, makes it possible for one man to say who shall work and who shall starve, who shall engage in business and who shall not be allowed to compete in the markets of the world. They make it possible to control legislation as well as the finances of the country. By centralizing industry and hogging opportunity they force an increase in the number of those who must work for wages and decrease the number of those who would embark in business for themselves.

There are wise men in this country who see in this coming billionaire and what he represents a greater danger than America has ever known before, and who believe that it can only be curbed by one of two methods: legislation rigidly enforced or revolution.

The last must not be.

The Rockefeller empire has grown more rich and more powerful in the last 70 years. And all this time, the Congress has been doing those things, and leaving undone those things, which have made this vast agglomeration of wealth and power possible. The plutocracy has grown, and recently the share of income and wealth going to those at the top has increased. The holding company, the conglomerate, the multinational have acquired sovereignty undreamt of by the first Rockefeller. Congress has acquiesced in a tax system that lets the incomes and inheritances of the wealthy very largely escape their just share of the burdens of civilization. Money makes money, and there is more of it at the top.

All this is so. But, in a certain sense, it is a world that Nelson Rockefeller never made—though it cannot be denied that he enjoys its benefits. He has not been one of the idle rich—indeed, there are those who complain that he is overenergetic. He has not shrunk from contact with the common man—indeed, there are those who complain that he is overgregarious.

It is Congress that has created the system that produced Mr. Rockefeller. Our duty ought to be to correct the inequities of the system, rather than to take it out on the exemplar who comes before us under article XXV. I vote to confirm.

One final thought, perhaps inspired by the Christmas season. When Mr. Rockefeller assumes his magistracy later today, he will be granted for the next 2 years powers and opportunities seldom granted to an American. Because of his unique background, he has a capacity to reform our society not given to Tom, Dick, or Harry. It is too much to hope that Mr. Rockefeller, in his high office, will lead the struggle to rid this country of the curse of bigness, to reform our tax laws so as to prevent the accumulation of empires like the Rockefeller, to reduce our international corporate giants to manageable and humane proportions?

Mr. BOWEN. Mr. Chairman, I have followed with great interest the hearings of the House Judiciary Committee and the debate here today. Although I have seen nothing on Governor Rockefeller's part which would disqualify him out of hand for the office of Vice President of the United States, I have found many things which give both me and my constituents cause for deep concern about whether or not this is the right man to fill the office. We have heard these matters discussed in detail today, and I do not propose during these few minutes to examine them any further.

Under the 25th amendment to the Constitution, the people of America have no voice in the selection of a Vice President, and because of the peculiar circumstances obtaining today they have had no voice in the selection of their President. My vote on most issues under consideration in this body has been and will continue to be based upon my own considered judgment of what I believe to be best for my district, my State, and my Nation, but under the circumstances of this confirmation process, I feel a very special obligation to vote as my constituents would want me to vote. I feel that I am serving here this evening in an unusual capacity as a member of an electoral college, representing the people of the Second Congressional District of Mississippi.

Through many letters, phone calls, and personal contacts over a period of several months I have found the overwhelming sentiment in my congressional district to be against Governor Rockefeller's confirmation. I have the highest respect for those of my colleagues who for convictions of their own will vote to confirm Governor Rockefeller, and I am certain they will be in the majority, but I feel a personal obligation to vote not to confirm Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

I do so for many reasons which I consider compelling. My purpose in rising at this time is to set forth the reason why I will vote no when the roll call is called on this important constitutional action of the Congress.

Our duties here are defined for us by the 25th amendment, which provides as follows:

AMENDMENT XXV
(Ratified February 10, 1967)

SECTION 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

SECTION 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

SECTION 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

SECTION 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

A clear reading of this amendment shows that there is no mandate upon the Congress to confirm or not confirm the President's appointee. As Members of a coequal branch of the Government we have the right, and more importantly, the solemn sworn duty to exercise our independent judgment on confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President, giving due weight to all facts and circumstances.

I note with some regret that the tone and language of the report of the Judiciary Committee gives the impression, which I am satisfied is erroneous, that the Congress has some sort of responsibility to confirm the nominee here. This interpretation is thoroughly out of keeping with the language, intent, and constitutional prerogatives of the Congress. To consider the meaning of the 25th amendment to be so is to convert the Congress to a mere rubber stamp, condemned in this instance, and probably in others, succeeding and difficult, to only approve and ratify the actions of the Executive without exercising the wise judgement necessary to a strong and independent Congress, properly responsive to the will of the people.

This Nation has learned time and again, from the days of the Magna Carta, the struggles of the Parliament against the excesses of Stuart kings, from the outrages of George III which led us to our War of Independence, and the scandals of Watergate and Richard Nixon, that a strong and independently minded Congress is the only protection of the liberties of people against executive tyranny and excess.

In that framework, let us then approach our task of determining whether the public interest requires that this Nation should fill this office of Vice President at this time, and whether or not Nelson Rockefeller should fill it by confirmation of the Congress.

THE IMPORTANCE OF OFFICE IS REALLY MINIMAL

A wise, and much beloved Vice President, the late Alben Barkley told a story of the significance of this office—he described a mother who had two sons, one went off to sea, and the other became Vice President and neither was ever heard of again.

Vice President John Nance Garner observed in his usual salty way the importance and value of the office was about equal to a "pitcher of warm spit."

President Eisenhower was asked for contributions to his administration by his Vice President, Mr. Nixon. Mr. Eisenhower asked for several days' time to think and observed that in that period he might think of some contribution or service by his Vice President to the Nation.

The duties of the Vice President are set out in law and the Constitution. He is to do the following:

First. Preside over the Senate;
Second. Cast the deciding vote in the event of a tie vote in the Senate; and Third. Assume the office of President in the event the President dies or becomes incapacitated.

A reading of history and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD reveals that few, if any, Vice Presidents bother with the tedious and burdensome duty of presiding over the Senate. According to my study Vice Presidents exercise this function on opening sessions, joint sessions, and when the meetings of the other body are televised. In other times they are not to be found, except where we read of their partisan denunciations of the other party in the press.

To prove the general uselessness of the position, of Vice President, the Republic has existed most comfortably for long periods with no incumbent in the office at all. In the difficult periods following the assassination of Presidents Lincoln, McKinley, and Kennedy there was no Vice President. In the period following the enforced resignation of President Nixon, there has been no Vice President. There is no demonstrable evil which has befallen the Nation for this absence of a Vice President in these difficult times.

In the period following the enforced resignation of Mr. Agnew there was no Vice President until confirmation of Mr. Ford as Vice President.

There was no evidence of any difficulty besetting the Republic during that period stemming from the absence of a Vice President.

THERE IS AN ORDERLY STATUTORY PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION

The law provides that in absence of a Vice President there shall be a regular statutory succession to the Presidency.

The immediate successor is the Speaker of the House, next the President pro tempore of the Senate, then Cabinet officers in order of seniority of their respective posts.

So if anything happens to the President, there are fully qualified successors ranked in depth ready to succeed to the office with minimal dislocation.

THE CONFIRMATION OF NELSON ROCKEFELLER MEANS TODAY THAT THE HIGHEST TWO OFFICERS OF THE NATION ARE APPOINTED, NOT ELECTED

The factual character of this statement cannot be denied. That the situation is evil and unintended even by framers of the 25th amendment cannot be gainsaid.

That we as a nation need tolerate this situation is obviously untrue. We have always believed that the people should select their servants and officials by open and free election. Let this process not be diminished here.

THERE IS GREAT COST AND SMALL BENEFIT IN THE CONFIRMATION OF NELSON ROCKEFELLER

The cost of keeping a Vice President in style is enormous.

His salary is over $60,000 per year. He gets a $10,000 a year as a personal expense allowance.

His staff, according to the last appropriation list costs about $550,000 a year.

Security by Secret Service is $1.5 million per year for this rather useless office, plus $200,000 per year for the new Executive Protection Service to look after his safety at the new Vice President home.

We have yet to get a figure as to the cost of remodeling the new official residence of the Vice President, entertainment costs, travel and so forth can only be estimated as large, and unneeded at this time.

What does the Nation receive for this expenditure? Very little.

NELSON ROCKEFELLER DOES NOT MEET THE HIGH STANDARDS OF CHARACTER REQUIRED FOR VICE PRESIDENT

Nelson Rockefeller, it is clear, did not deal fairly with the committees which investigated the qualifications. He failed to reveal his true holdings until prodded by the committees. His worth grew from around $30 million to somewhere around $300 million during his testimony.

If this discrepancy grew from ignorance of the English language it raises one kind of question as to his fitness. If the discrepancy grows from inability to keep count of assets, it raises still other questions. Possibly it results from intention on part of Mr. Rockefeller to deceive the Congress. I do not know what the reasons are. The questions raised by the discrepancy remain to speak loudly against his fitness.

Mr. Rockefeller's family supported his gubernatorial campaign with a book about his opponent which was in keeping with the best traditions of character assassination, muckraking and Watergate politics. Even the financing was obscured by laundering funds advanced by family members for the publication of the book.

LOANS AND GIFTS BY MR. ROCKEFELLER RAISE GRAVE QUESTIONS AS TO HIS BEHAVIOR BOTH AS GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK AND A PRIVATE CITIZEN

Mr. Rockefeller's gifts to officeholders, large gifts may well contravene the law of New York.

The roster of the recipients of Mr. Rockefeller's beneficence is long and distinguished.

Listen to the roster: Some $2 million showered upon the superintendent of banking, the commissioner of the department of environmental conservation, the commissioner of housing and community renewal, the commissioner of taxation and finance—who later became chairman of the State housing finance agency—the president of the State urban development corporation, the chairman of the New York and New Jersey Port Authority, the presiding judge of the New York Court of Claims, all officials of the State of New York; and the Assistant to the President of the United States for National Security Affairs.

Why these gifts?

What was their import? What was the quid or the pro quo here? We will never know. Nor do we need to. The appearances are against a real sensitivity to the public interest on the part of both donor and donee. There appears here real lack of appreciation of the responsibility of an officeholder to so behave as to maintain and justify the public trust in its officers in both appearance and fact.

The appearances are bad. It is doubtful that fact is appreciably better than appearance.

Certainly the recipients had, before them, on a daily basis, a plethora of questions affecting Mr. Rockefeller as an individual, as a member of the Rockefeller family, as Governor, as stockholder of scores, if not hundreds of major corporations. Gifts were made to persons who pass on questions relating to oil and Exxon, to banking and Chase Manhattan, on matters relating to airlines, all of which are matters of special interest to Nelson Rockefeller, stockholder and possible beneficiary and to his family whose financial interest multiplied his.

POTENTIAL CONFLICTS OF INTEREST AROUND IN THE PERSON OF NELSON ROCKEFELLER

Protestations as to establishment of a blind trust, and other remedies to the contrary, there is no way Mr. Rockefeller can be viewed as anything other than a walking, breathing, conflict of interest.

President Ford indicates Mr. Rockefeller will be his partner, in fashions not yet divulged, in running the country. While this arrangement is of doubtful legality and unsanctioned by law or usage, it does indicate the opportunity available to Mr. Rockefeller for conflicts will be immense.

If there is such virtue in blind trust, why is it coming years after Mr. Rockefeller was elected Governor of one of our largest, richest, and most populous States? What trustee will dissipate, sell, and dispose of Mr. Rockefeller's vast holdings in today's market and under the 2 years potentially remaining in his Vice-Presidential term? The questions answer themselves. The reform comes too late, and is clearly meaningless.

Mr. Rockefeller's actions and advice will clearly affect IBEC, the family holding company, his brother's bank, family banking interests, family investments in oil, his and his family's holdings in the giants of the oil industry. This action and advice will clearly affect the families interests in transportation, land, and other corporate interests and investments.

The Nation is told of his integrity. I do not know the gentleman. There is possibility his integrity is proof against both the constant flow of opportunity and temptation to favor his personal interests and those of his family. I hope so. Many people doubt it with the best of reasons.

Certainly trust of Mr. Rockefeller is gravely jeopardized by common understanding of the frailty of human nature and the immense size and frequency of temptation imposed on him by the office he seeks. No action of his will escape perfectly valid questions as to his self-interest.

I will not recount his holdings, or speculate as to his potential conflicts. His wealth is documented in the hearings. His conflicts of interest will cover the whole width and breadth of his official actions.

Nelson Rockefeller cannot escape these questions by our confirmation. Our action is not a baptism absolving Mr. Rockefeller of taint and question. We cannot even engage in a whitewash here. We cannot instill any trust of him or his actions into the public mind.

There will be no reason to bottom our judgments here on integrity or lack of it on the part of Mr. Rockefeller.

We have a special duty to exercise the greatest prudence and care here. Since no election will be held for the office for 2 years, we exercise a duty bound by the highest care and greatest caution. There are sufficient warnings here of potential peril that we cannot confirm this man. His every action is subject to broad and widespread public doubt and apprehension. Public trust in its Government cannot be helped by his appointment. Human nature being what it is, no one can be sure when and whether his actions favor the people or further Exxon's interests. No one will know when or whether he furthers the public interest or those of his brother's Chase Manhattan Bank. Or, worse, when his actions favor his brother's bank's correspondents here at home or abroad. Nelson Rockefeller should not be confirmed.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, this speech will perhaps be the most ironic speech I have ever made. However, it fits the most ironic situation America has ever faced. Let me point to a few of the ironies. Is it not ironic that in this instance, I disapprove one Rockefeller, the Vice-Presidential nominee; and end up approving another Rockefeller, his brother, John D., III. More importantly, the American political irony in which we find ourselves involved, looms beyond any single event this country has faced since its birth.

Approaching the 200th birthday of a nation built upon the world's greatest experiment in democracy and self-government, we find ourselves in a situation where the first and second office in the land will be occupied by people—not elected—but appointed. Needless to say, this greatly disturbs many of us.

More disturbing is the thought that this President was appointed by a President whose Vice President had to resign from office in disgrace as a convicted felon. Furthermore, the former President himself had to resign in face of certainty of impeachment because of crimes he had committed against the United States. Our present President unconscionably pardoned his benefactor for all crimes he had committed or may have committed, even before justice could have established his guilt or innocence.

Article II, section I, of the Constitution explicitly provides that the President and the Vice President are to be elected. This right of the people to choose their own leaders is the fundamental principle of self-government. Clearly, this was the intention of the framers of the Constitution. They believed firmly, like I do, that no one should serve as President who had not faced a national election. Neither the President nor the Vice President nominee has ever faced a national election. In fact, the Vice Presidential nominee was repudiated by his own party as their Presidential choice in the past. Today, public opinion of the American people show disapproval of Mr. Rockefeller's appointment by a margin of 43 percent against, to 39 percent for his appointment.

The authors of the 25th amendment back in 1967 never contemplated that they would introduce such an extraordinary innovation into the American system of government. When they cavalierly discarded the wisdom of the framers of the Constitution, by allowing the President to appoint his own successor, I am sure that they never contemplated such extraordinary events. Both the President and the Vice President will take office without winning a single precinct in the country or without the opportunity of a single voter to express an opinion. This has moved the most vital political choices farther and farther away from the people.

There are very serious questions about the wisdom; even the legitimacy of this arrangement. For these reasons alone, I oppose the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller. But, this is not to say that he otherwise gets a clean bill of health. One cannot easily forget the 40 prison inmates and guards slaughtered at Attica under his governorship. Nor, can one ignore the enormous accumulation of wealth and its attendant power.

Watergate has alerted a great number of Americans to the fact that the democratic, representational election procedure is much too valuable to be left in the hands of those who are willing to purchase it at any price. Rockefeller has demonstrated in the past that no price tag is too high to pay for an election. It is staggering to look at the money spent by the Rockefeller family to get him elected to office. In 1970, the Rockefeller campaign for reelection for Governor of New York cost $6,985,455 million. Over $4 million of this sum came from members of the Rockefeller family. In 1966, he spent $4,896,656 million, of which, more than $3.5 million came from the Rockefeller family. In his unsuccessful Presidential campaign of 1964, $5,228,550 million was spent. Over $8 million was spent in 1968 in his bid for public office.

I must say that I am confounded why an individual or a family would spend such vast amounts of money to stay in office or to get elected to an office. My concern is—what effect would this have on those less advantaged though dedicated who would also wish to seek election to public office in this country.

I sincerely believe that public officials seeking election to high offices such as these, should be decided by we the people of the United States, we alone, each equally. Furthermore, integrity in Government is a sine qua non to effective Government policymaking in all fields. Yet, the bag of history bulges with instances of the many ways that public officials flaunt that trust for their own personal material gain, conflict of interest, and outright corruption. One might ask, why did Mr. Rockefeller see fit to subsidize the U.S. Secretary of State, and in New York, the chairman of the transportation authority; the superintendent of banks; the head of environmental affairs; the commissioner of housing and community renewal; the chief of urban development; the commissioner of taxation and Finance; and the presiding judge of the State court of claims.

Earlier this year, Mr. Rockefeller personally, and through friends, established a "nonpartisan" national committee to "study" public issues. Rockefeller himself headed the proceedings. This cost millions of dollars, won countless admirers, friends, staffers, and supporters under the guise of political nonpartisanship. This clearly shows one way that a true public-spirited citizen with money can beat the political hustlings and gain a tremendous political advantage long before the Congress could institute campaign expenditure ceilings. This sort of maneuvering gives us a foretaste of the potentiality for corrupting the political process.

This litany can go on ad infinitum, but suffice it to say that my vote of no confidence will be recorded.

In conclusion, if Nelson, would subscribe to the ideals of his brother, John D., III, a millionaire himself, his ultimate solution to social and political equality would be the same as mine. In his book, "The Second American Revolution," John D., III recognized that the fundamental political problem in American society is the gap between our ideals and the way it has fallen into general disarray, disrepair, and disrepute. He, too, sensed that growing numbers of Americans feel hostile or alienated from the "system." In his words:

I became aware of the underlying similarities between the America of today and of 200 years ago. It seemed to me that now, as then, there are important social forces in motion that can legitimately be considered revolutionary, and they go to the essence of what our country is all about. In my judgement, we are in the early stages of a revolution of fulfillment, not of overthrow, a revolution designed to bring fruition to the great ideals upon which this nation was founded.

His hope is to fulfill these revolutionary impulses. So he latches onto the idea the "American Revolution" was not a war, with 1 day as its beginning and end, but a process that took time. It began on July 4, 1776, with the Declaration of Independence and formally terminated with the ratification of the Constitution in 1789. What he wants is the American people to rededicate themselves, starting in 1976 to Bicentennial era in order to complete a renaissance and rebirth of American principles.

One of the fundamental principles then, as is now, that this country of self-government should be governed by leaders chosen by the people. He believes that time is needed to find new ways to address our social and economic problems, and to chart our future into the third century of the American experience. Time. Time to learn. Time to discover. Time to chart. I subscribe to his idea.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, today the House will at long last pass judgment on the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States. The dilatory manner in which this nomination has been handled provides just one more example of why the Congress, as well as the nominee, stands today in judgment.

Reams of criticisms have been leveled at the 25th amendment, under which authority this nomination is being considered. Yet we have failed to come to grips with the amendment's most glaring deficiency; namely, its assumption that Congress would make a good-faith effort to complete the confirmation process with all deliberate speed. Someone obviously underestimated the willingness of Congress to pursue partisan advantage at the expense of the national interest. There is nothing wrong with the 25th amendment. There is definitely something wrong with a Congress that needs 4 months to make it work.

Even our interminable presidential election campaigns consume less time from nomination to election than the 17 weeks it took this Congress to process the Rockefeller nomination. This is just one more example of the desperate need to reform our antiquated congressional procedures and our even more obsolete congressional attitudes. Our zeal is boundless when it comes to exposing someone else's soiled linen, matched only by our lassitude in laundering our own.

Governor Rockefeller is without doubt the most investigated nominee for the office of Vice President that this country has ever known. The record shows that the nominee has the normal complement of human flaws. But, there is nothing in the record to indicate that he has violated the public trust, nor is there any reason to believe he would do so in the future.

The principal criticism of Nelson Rockefeller is that he is too rich. The next nominee might be too poor. Whomever the nominee might be, he or she could bring a record, an association with friends, a set of principles, a set of prejudices, and some assets. Any of us might be encumbered, but very few of us would be disqualified. Neither is Nelson Rockefeller.

Nelson Rockefeller has enjoyed a long and distinguished career of public service as Governor for 15 years of the then most populous State. As Governor, he was regarded as creative, but practical, and above all, effective. He has served as an employee, adviser, and trouble-shooter for several Presidents of both political parties. He has the background, the experience and the ability to complement President Ford in the day-to-day conduct of the executive branch. I consider him an excellent choice for Vice President.

Based on the record, I will vote to confirm Governor Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Chairman, it has not been very long since we were called upon to approve, by virtue of the 25th amendment, the nomination of Gerald Ford as Vice President of the United States. I voted in favor of that nomination and I believe that history has shown that that nomination and subsequent approval was in our national best interest. As a cosponsor of that amendment and being mindful of the great public interest in an orderly transition of power within the executive branch, I recognize the important task before us today; the confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

We, as a people, have been without a Vice President since August 9, 1974, when Gerald Ford was sworn in as the Chief Executive. The 25th amendment recognizes that the important matter with which we are now confronted is too critical to be decided arbitrarily or without the cooperative efforts of the executive and legislative branches. Accordingly, the House and Senate must approve the President's choice for Vice President after a searching inquiry into his personal and financial background and his capacity to lead. This process has gone forward and we have seen favorable action by the U.S. Senate in a vote of 90 to 7 for the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller.

This House knows that the nominee and I have disagreed many times about the priorities which should be set for the American people. In voting in favor of the President's nominee, I demonstrate my willingness to cooperate with him in insuring that the American people are spared the upheaval and uncertainty which would be encountered should an untoward event make a vacancy in the office of the Presidency. Certainly, in ratifying the 25th amendment the several States recognized that Presidential succession would be more orderly and less traumatic should it be accomplished by the processes at work today.

We are not called upon to vote for or against Nelson Rockefeller on the basis of his political philosophy or his view of the National Government's role in the Federal-State relationship. The President's nominee is to be approved or rejected on the basis of his personal integrity, capacity for leadership, and ability to unite the people of our great Nation. On the basis of the extensive inquiry which has been conducted since Mr. Rockefeller's nomination as our 41st Vice President, I feel compelled to vote in favor of his confirmation. Certainly, I join with my colleagues in wishing Mr. Rockefeller well in fulfilling the awesome responsibilities of that high office, for his successes will be shared by the American people.

The course that this House has embarked upon today is more prudent and considerably less divisive than rejecting the President's nominee and casting our Government into still further crisis and unrest. Our actions will serve to bring the American people closer together and provide a cohesive filament to strengthen further our institutions of government. I believe that the good people I am privileged to represent would have us do no less.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, the vote we cast today could be one of the most meaningful in the history of our Nation. We are being asked to approve the nomination of a man of great inherited private wealth and power to a position of enormous public influence, a breath from the Presidency. The mixture is not comforting.

I do not question the sincerity of Nelson Rockefeller in seeking the Vice Presidency of the United States. He has served his own constituencies, both well and poorly, with a dedication peculiar to his circumstances. But I question whether he could get elected today to any public office in the ninth Congressional District, or a majority of congressional districts throughout the Nation, because by accident of birth, he lacks the one quality desperately needed in today's crippled society, the quality of understanding.

In my own district, for example, would a man who has never suffered want in his life understand the pangs of hunger suffered by the elderly and poor living on social security and welfare? Would a man who keeps a doctor virtually within arm's reach 24 hours a day understand the health needs of the average person faced with spiraling costs of medical care and hospitalization? Would a man who has consistently used tax loopholes to protect his own empire understand the need for tax reform that will relieve the inequitable burden of taxation now carried by low- and middle-income persons? Would a man whose family fortune was built on oil understand the morality of eliminating special favors now granted to oil companies and other large corporate interests? Could a Nelson Rockefeller feel what it means to live on a social security check of $191 per month?

As a prospective member of the Ways and Means Committee, which deals with taxation, social security, and other human concerns, I question whether we will get a sympathetic ear from a man whose existence depends upon attempts to foil movements toward eliminating unfairness between the rich, the middle income, and the poor.

I fear that Nelson Rockefeller's whole background coupled with his shift toward conservative views which stall movements for reform, mitigate against his ability to make decisions which will solve the problems facing Americans today.

Nelson Rockefeller's concerns are not those of the average person. He does not share the hopes, the dreams of those he seeks to reign over.

He is not being elected by the people, and I do not believe he would be. He will not get my vote.

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I am voting against the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States for a variety of reasons. Most importantly, it is clear to me that the power of the Rockefeller fortune in a free and democratic society if combined with the authority of the Office of the President, which Rockefeller seeks, would amount to a monumental concentration of power that would leave the public potentially defenseless.

More particularly, a President not elected by the people, selecting a Vice President—also not elected by the people—is too bizarre a confluence of events to be ratified by a "lame duck" Congress where almost 100 "lame duck" Members will not be serving next year.

My colleagues may find of interest the material prepared by the Democratic Study Group which I am placing in the Record at this time:

THE ROCKEFELLER NOMINATION

This DSG Fact Sheet deals with President's Ford's nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States. The Rockefeller nomination is the second appointment to the office of Vice President in little more than one year. Confirmation of Rockefeller will give the U.S. its first President and Vice President who were not elected, but who achieved office through provisions of the 25th Amendment for filling a vacancy in the Vice Presidency.

The principal controversies surrounding the nomination include the following: possible conflicts of interest concerning the merger of Rockefeller family wealth and influence with the office of the Vice Presidency; Rockefeller's gifts and loans to public officials; Rockefeller's financing of a book critical of Arthur Goldberg, Nelson Rockefeller's 1970 gubernatorial opponent; Rockefeller family political contributions; and the nominee's handling of the Attica prison riot. The Rockefeller nomination is scheduled for consideration beginning Thursday, December 19. The Judiciary Committee has requested a rule providing eight hours of general debate. The Senate confirmed the nomination by a vote of 90 to 7 on December 10.

This DSG Fact Sheet contains the following sections:

- I. Background.
- II. Major Points of Controversy.
- III. Arguments For and Against the Nomination.

SECTION I Background

The office of Vice President became vacant at noon on August 9, 1974 when Gerald R. Ford was sworn in as the 38th President of the United States, succeeding Richard M. Nixon. On August 20, President Ford announced the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be the 41st Vice President of the United States. The nomination of Rockefeller to the office of Vice President is the second such nomination in little over a year under provisions of the 25th Amendment. The first occurred when President Nixon nominated House Minority Leader Ford to succeed Vice President Agnew, who submitted his resignation on October 12, 1973, immediately prior to his conviction on a felony count involving tax evasion.

The procedure for filling a vacancy in the Vice President is set forth in Section 2 of the 25th Amendment to the Constitution, which was ratified February 10, 1967:

"Section 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress."

The 25th Amendment

The 25th Amendment was adopted to prevent situations such as that which existed following President Kennedy's assassination when the Vice Presidency stood vacant for 13 months after Vice President Johnson became President. The first section of the amendment states that "In the case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President," thus making clear that the framers had in mind situations in which a vice presidential vacancy resulted from a prior presidential vacancy. The framers could not have foreseen an Administration so scandal-ridden that the Vice President would be forced to resign and a President under threat of impeachment himself would be replacing said Vice President with his own potential successor.

The legislative history surrounding the adoption of the 25th Amendment makes clear the intent of the framers regarding the role of Congress in the approval process:

The President and the Congress are equal partners in the process, with the Congress guaranteeing a popular voice in filling the office.

The Congress is expected to exercise a greater degree of scrutiny over a vice presidential nominee than it exercises over presidential nominations for other offices.

The Congress should judge the nominee as a possible future President and examine his capacity to lead and unify the nation.

Senate Action

The Rockefeller nomination was referred to the Senate Rules Committee, which requested reports on Rockefeller's financial background and qualifications from the FBI, the IRS, the Attorney General, the GAO, the Library of Congress, the New York State Board of Elections, and the Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities. Following eight days of hearings on the nomination, the committee unanimously recommended that the Senate confirm Rockefeller (Executive Rept. 93-34). On December 10, the Senate approved the nomination by a vote of 90 to 7. The seven dissenting votes included four Democrats (Abourek, Bayh, Nelson and Metzenbaum) and three Republicans (Goldwater, Helms and Scott of Virginia). Another Republican (Dominick) voted Present.

House Committee Action

In the House, the nomination was referred to the Judiciary Committee, which conducted an extensive investigation of the nominee, including financial and tax audits and his past record in public service. Following nine days of hearings, the committee on December 12 recommended approval of the nomination by a vote of 26 to 12. Voting against confirmation were Reps. Kastenmeier, Edwards, Ellberg, Conyers, Waldie, Sarbanes, Selberling, Danielson, Drinan, Holtzman, Owens and Mezvinsky.

SECTION II

Major points of controversy

This section briefly discusses the major points of controversy which have arisen regarding the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be the 41st Vice President of the United States.

Possible Conflicts of Interest: Rockefeller Wealth and Influence

The major concern surrounding the Rockefeller nomination involves potential conflicts of interest and the magnification of power which could result from merging the vast financial power of the Rockefeller family throughout the U.S. and the world with the office of the President of the United States, to which Rockefeller as Vice President might suddenly succeed. Many decisions Rockefeller would have to make would directly or indirectly affect the Rockefeller family fortune, which exercises substantial financial influence in several important sectors of the U.S. and world economy.

In disclosing his financial holdings, Nelson Rockefeller stated that his net worth is approximately $218 million. The Rockefeller family has assets totaling over $1 billion, most of which are held in two trusts established by John D. Rockefeller.

The $1 billion in total Rockefeller family assets does not include the Rockefeller brothers' fund, the Rockefeller family fund, the Chase Manhattan Bank and the Rockefeller Foundation, which if included, would add another billion dollars in assets. Also excluded from this figure is Nelson Rockefeller's real estate in the U.S. and his art collection valued at $33 million.

The Rockefeller family has more than $1 million of their stock in 12 corporations, including Dow Chemical, Eastman Kodak, General Electric, and IBM. The family also has aggregate holdings in three of the world's largest oil companies—Exxon, Mobil, and Standard Oil of California—which total more than $300 million, not including lesser holdings in the stock of other oil companies. In addition, the Rockefellers have controlling interests in the International Basic Economy Corp., which funnels family investments into Latin America and other developing areas; Coherent Radiation, which manufactures laser systems and optical equipment; and Rockefeller Center.

Rockefeller investments are coordinated by a central management group. It is reported that the 15 employees of this group serve on the Board of Directors of some 100 large business enterprises such as Chase Manhattan Bank, Chrysler Corp., and Eastern Airlines.

The Rockefeller family is the leading holder of stock in the Chase Manhattan Bank, of which David Rockefeller, the nominee's brother, is the Chairman of the Board. The Chase Manhattan Bank is one of the world's largest, holding major interests in four of the nation's largest airlines, all three television networks, and many other major corporations.

Rockefeller's financial advisor, J. Richardson Dilworth, testified that in most of the companies in which the Rockefellers have invested, their holdings are approximately 2%. He also stated that members of the family do not coordinate their investment, and stressed that while the family held total assets of over $1 billion, both the family members and their investment advisors "are totally uninterested in controlling anything." The family's aim is simply to make money, according to Dilworth.

Nelson Rockefeller stated that he hoped the "myth or misconception" about his family's control of "the economic life" of the U.S. would be dispelled by his financial disclosure. He also stated that he holds a "nominal percentage" of stock in the Standard Oil Companies and owns no shares in Chase Manhattan, although one of the Rockefeller family trusts owns shares of Rockefeller Center, which in turn owns Chase Manhattan Bank shares.

Nelson Rockefeller has offered to put his holdings in a "blind trust" if confirmed as Vice President.

Rockefeller Gifts and Loans

Questions of legality, propriety and moral value have been raised regarding some $3 million in loans and gifts Nelson Rockefeller made to public officials, friends, and personal associates during 15 years as Governor of New York. The Rockefeller gifts and loans to public officials almost always were given to persons when they moved from one post to another, and all were given to individuals in the top 1% of all wage-earning Americans.

Most of the gifts were given tax free and the loans were given with the apparent expectation that they would be forgiven at some future date. The record establishes that very few loans have ever been repaid.

Examples of Rockefeller's beneficiaries include:

Dr. Henry Kissinger, who was given $50,000 when he was about to become President Nixon's chief advisor for foreign affairs.

Dr. William Ronan, who was given more than $500,000 in loans, all of which were forgiven the same day he was elected Chairman of the Board of Commissioners of the New York-New Jersey Port Authority, an authority in which the Rockefeller family holds $1.8 million in bonds. Dr. Ronan also received a $75,000 gift two weeks before he was appointed Governor Rockefeller's secretary in 1959.

L. Judson Morhouse, a convicted felon and former Republican state chairman, received a $100,000 loan in 1960 for investment purposes. Subsequently he was convicted of bribery in a liquor license scandal. Rockefeller then commuted Morhouse's prison sentence because of his medical condition and then forgave the loan.

Fred Young, who received a $15,000 gift, had been a Republican state chairman and was appointed to the State Court of Claims as presiding judge. He was later relieved of the judgeship to assist in Nelson Rockefeller's 1964 campaign and then was reappointed as presiding judge on the Court of Claims in 1966.

G. Russell Clark received a $25,000 gift three weeks before he assumed office in 1959 as New York State Superintendent of Banks.

James W. Gaynor received $107,000 in gifts, which originally were given as loans. He received a $7,000 gift just after he assumed office in 1959 as New York State Commissioner of Housing and Urban Renewal.

Serious questions have been raised regarding the legality of the Rockefeller gifts and loans to New York State officials under the New York Penal Code (Section 200.35). That section states that it is unlawful to give money to a public official for the performance of his official duties for which he is not entitled to any special or additional compensation.

A memo by six distinguished law professors sent to Sen. Canavan and Rep. Rodino stated that "We do not know all of the facts bearing on these loans and their forgiveness. But enough evidence has been made public to raise substantial legal questions in our minds." The memo added, "The statute involved is important to the integrity of government. If it has been violated by the nominee, its violation could be a disqualification for holding high office in the Government of the United States."

Nelson Rockefeller testified that the loans and gifts were made "as gestures of affection and friendship," not as a reward to the recipients for services rendered. Although Rockefeller, during Senate testimony, recognized in retrospect the validity of concerns of impropriety, he adamantly denied that any ulterior motives were present in connection with his generosity.

nized in retrospect the validity of concerns of impropriety, he adamantly denied that any ulterior motives were present in connection with his generosity.

Rockefeller Financed Book on Arthur Goldberg

During the 1970 New York gubernatorial race, Nelson Rockefeller arranged family financing for a derogatory book about his opponent, former U.S. Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg. The book, entitled Arthur J. Goldberg: The Old and the New, was written by Victor J. Lasky with $65,000 in financial backing from Laurance Rockefeller, brother of the nominee.

Nelson Rockefeller did not contribute money to the publication himself; however, he did further its progress by arranging for John Wells, a lawyer who had worked in previous Rockefeller campaigns, to meet with Lasky and work out details for the book. He also arranged the financing of the book through his brother Laurance by requesting that he find investors for the publication.

Nelson Rockefeller originally disclaimed any knowledge or involvement with the publication of the book; but when attention remained focused on the issue during Senate hearings, he acknowledged his role in the publication and assumed "full responsibility" for his participation and his brother's $65,000 under writing of the Goldberg book. Upon accepting "full responsibility," Rockefeller stated that the book was a mistake and that he should not have become involved in the matter. He also extended an apology publicly and privately to Justice Goldberg and to others regarding publication of the book.

Rockefeller Political Contribution

The substantial political campaign contributions by Nelson Rockefeller and the Rockefeller family to further the nominee's past political career have been criticized. While there has been no evidence of any illegality, critics question the propriety of these contributions. Political contributions of the nominee and the Rockefeller family have totaled approximately $20 million over 17 years of the nominee's active political career, including major campaigns for Nelson Rockefeller's four gubernatorial and three presidential races plus various politically oriented research projects and background studies.

Nelson Rockefeller's own total contributions to political parties, campaign committees and candidates have amounted to nearly $3.3 million, two-thirds of which he gave in connection with his own campaigns. Approximately $16 million in contributions has been disbursed by the Rockefeller family, including a total contribution estimated at $10.5 million from the nominee's Step-mother Martha Baird Rockefeller.

In almost all of his campaigns, Nelson Rockefeller began as an underdog, but enormous infusions of money have given him the edge over rivals in the last few months of campaigning. During his 1970 gubernatorial campaign, Rockefeller spent almost $7 million compared with Arthur Goldberg's $1 million. Two-thirds of the Rockefeller campaign funds came from within the family. Rockefeller won the election with 51% of the vote.

Reports of political contributions by and to Nelson Rockefeller and the Rockefeller family furnished to the House and Senate investigating committees showed no violation of either state or federal election laws. During his testimony before the Senate Rules Committee, Rockefeller expressed his intention to continue to make political contributions to "selected political candidate:" if confirmed as Vice President.

Attica Prison Riot

Governor Rockefeller's handling of the 1971 prison riot at the New York Correctional Facility at Attica has raised questions of his leadership capabilities. Prison inmates held 39 correctional officers and civilians as hostages and presented Governor Rockefeller a list of grievances, including better food and medical facilities, recreation facilities, and the right to have legal counsel representation before the parole board. They also demanded amnesty and safe passage to a "nonimperialist" country.

Governor Rockefeller refused all of the demands and refused to meet with the inmates. Instead, he called in the state police who opened fire on the inmates, killing 43 prisoners and hostages and wounding 80 others.

After the Attica uprising ended, controversy arose about the handling of the situation by Governor Rockefeller, leading to the creation of a Citizen's Committee. This nine-member committee later became known as the New York State Special Commission on Attica, and included the Dean of the New York University Law School, Deputy Dean of Yale University, and the Chairman of the Board of the New York Urban Coalition. In its report, the Commission concluded that the prisoners were trying to demonstrate the pitiful conditions of their imprisonment and, having exhausted all other channels for their grievances, tried the method of taking hostages. Rockefeller never recognized the prisoners' demands and refused to go to the prison after repeated urgings of his staff at the scene. The reason, according to the Commission, and admitted by the nominee publicly many times, was that he saw the issue as one of state sovereignty versus rebellion.

The number of dead and injured left Attica with the highest casualty rate of any disturbance in U.S. prison history, resulting in the Commission describing the riot as "the bloodiest one-day encounter between Americans since the Civil War."

In his opening statement to the Senate Rules Committee, Rockefeller stated that the Attica prison riot was one of the five events that "I shall always deeply regret." He added that "these tragic developments will always remain in dispute but as one who has accepted the responsibility to govern and uphold the Constitution and the laws of the state, I had to do what I sincerely felt was best at the time under all the existing circumstances."

SECTION III

Arguments for and against the Rockefeller nomination

This section highlights the major arguments raised by opponents and supporters of Congressional approval of President Ford's nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States. Following is a summary of those arguments.

ARGUMENTS AGAINST THE ROCKEFELLER NOMINATION

Opponents make the following arguments against the Rockefeller nomination: The power of the Rockefeller family fortune combined with the office of the President of the United States, to which Rockefeller could succeed, discards a fundamental principle of the American system of checks and balances used to restrain economic power. This merger of power threatens our free enterprise system because it emasculates these healthy checks and balances that our system of government has established, through its anti-trust laws and regulatory agencies, to protect the public from huge economic powers. By confirming the nomination of Rockefeller, Congress is agreeing to a powerful economic and political consolidation; thereby encouraging abuse of power and leaving the American public without any protection.

The economic power of the Rockefeller family would continually raise the spectre of conflicts of interest. Rockefeller stands for the consolidation and expansion of executive power and economic concentration at a time when the U.S. is reducing those powers in the aftermath of the Nixon era. At a time when the U.S. faces serious decisions about the economy, Rockefeller is associated with and advised by those connected with the largest corporations in the world. One of the lessons of the Nixon years is that those who see government as something separate and remote from ordinary people are dangerous individuals, especially when that belief is combined with the power of the Presidency.

In addition, a number of matters recently have been brought to public attention which call into question Rockefeller's judgment: his involvement in the publication of a derogatory book on Arthur Goldberg, financed by the nominee's brother and sanctioned by Nelson Rockefeller; his lack of candor and leadership in the Attica prison riot; and his lack of sensitivity to the serious legal and ethical questions involved in his substantial gifts and loans to public officials while Governor of New York.

These poor judgments are reflected in a recent Harris Poll which shows that the American people disapprove of the appointment of Nelson Rockefeller by a 43 to 39 margin. The same poll also indicates that the public, by a 47 to 24 margin, believes Rockefeller's financial holdings and investments will create an inherent conflict of interest. Confirmation of Nelson Rockefeller would not restore public confidence and trust in government officials.

Rockefeller has clearly demonstrated his lack of sensitivity to U.S. spying activities by his continued support of covert CIA operations into the internal affairs of foreign nations and illegal domestic FBI activities. Also, Rockefeller was an ardent supporter of American involvement in the Southeast Asian war.

The confirmation should not be voted on until further inquiries into the Rockefeller fortune are examined, including testimony from the nominee's brother David, and the family's relationship to the Chase Manhattan Bank. Many unanswered questions still remain. Moreover, the Members of the 94th Congress, rather than the 93rd, should vote on the nomination since they represent the most direct, recent expression of the will of the American people. The responsibility of confirmation as stated in the 25th Amendment is in the hands of Congress, instead of the electorate, and therefore should not be left to a lame-duck Congress.

Finally, President Ford never would have nominated Rockefeller had he been aware of the problems which have subsequently come to light. Rejection of Rockefeller will free President Ford to find a more acceptable nominee.

ARGUMENTS IN BEHALF OF THE ROCKEFELLER NOMINATION

Supporters make the following arguments in behalf of the Rockefeller nomination: Few individuals in the U.S. today can match Nelson Rockefeller's experience and outstanding achievements in the field of public affairs. Rockefeller is a highly qualified and extremely competent individual who would bring strong leadership to the office of Vice President.

Rockefeller's government service began in 1940 when President Franklin D. Roosevelt appointed him coordinator of Inter-American affairs. In 1944-45, he served as Assistant Secretary of State for American Republic Affairs. While in that post, he participated in the founding of the United Nations. In 1950, he was named chairman of the newly-created International Development Advisory Board by President Truman.

In 1952, President Eisenhower asked Rockefeller to take over the chairmanship of the President's Advisory Committee on Government Organization, which subsequently recommended the establishment of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Rockefeller then became HEW Undersecretary. In 1954, he resigned that position to become special assistant to the President for foreign affairs.

Even while serving as Governor, Rockefeller undertook numerous presidential assignments, such as a Latin American fact-finding tour for President Nixon early in his administration.

Rockefeller's 15-year record as Governor of New York is also one of unparalleled accomplishment. His administrative hallmarks include: the establishment of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority; the creation of one of the nation's best state university systems; the development of a vast interstate highway network; lowering the voting age requirement to 18 years; and implementing a state revenue-sharing plan distributing 21% of state income tax revenue to cities and towns.

Rockefeller's full disclosure of his financial holdings during the intensive congressional investigation into his qualifications has proven that Rockefeller has never used his or his family's economic wealth to abuse political or public power. The nominee's full financial disclosure and his stated intention to place his holdings in a blind trust will serve as a sufficient safeguard against the use of the office of the Vice President for personal or family gain. In addition, all the attention that has been focused on Rockefeller's gifts and loans to political associates, and friends has failed to produce any evidence of illegality.

Although Rockefeller has been heavily criticized for his involvement in the publication of the derogatory book about his 1970 gubernatorial opponent, Arthur Goldberg, Rockefeller has admitted that the undertaking was a mistake and has apologized both publicly and privately to Justice Goldberg and all others involved in the book's publication. Rockefeller has also been sharply criticized for his lack of leadership in his role in the Attica prison riot. He has stated that the tragedy was one that he will always regret, but felt he did what "was best at the time under all the existing circumstances."

Although some Rockefeller supporters agree that publication of the book about Justice Goldberg and the handling of the Attica prison riot clearly demonstrate errors in judgment, they believe that Rockefeller's years of competent public service totally outweigh these errors in judgment.

Under the 25th Amendment, the President is guaranteed the right to choose an individual in whom he has trust and confidence. President Ford has nominated Nelson Rockefeller because he believes Rockefeller will bring substantial administrative and leadership skills to the job, plus diverse experience in both foreign and domestic affairs. Also, President Ford has indicated that he will make full use of the Governor's considerable talents. Congress should confirm the President's choice in the absence of any information which would serve to disqualify the nominee.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to rise in support of the nomination of former Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York to be the 41st Vice President of the United States.

I believe he is an American who is qualified, in every respect, to stand the traditional "one heartbeat" from the Presidency. He will bring to the administration of President Ford an added dimension of governmental expertise such as is rarely seen in our Nation's history.

The life record of Nelson Rockefeller is replete with devoted service to the public good. I feel that he will make a dynamic Vice President, combining hard work with selflessness, and applying himself with all the knowledge gained in a long career of tackling some of the toughest human problems existing on the national and international scenes.

I am enthusiastic about the nomination for four principal reasons:

First, Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President will inspire confidence. The need for greater confidence in government is shown by almost every index one can name—low voter turnout, nationwide polls, the stock market, inflation—you name it. We have a winner in the field of gaining public confidence, and I hope we have the acuity to recognize him as such.

Second, He has blue-chip qualifications in Government. He was Governor of New York for nearly 15 years, and was the first Governor in U.S. history to be elected to four 4-year terms. During part of that time New York was our most populous State, and the remainder of the time it was the second most populous.

Third, Nelson Rockefeller is a long-time believer in and practitioner of the free enterprise system, the system that has made this Nation what it is today. I am sure he would not apologize for that fact, and I am not here today to do it for him. If I may, I think I might call him an enlightened apostle of big capital. His goals have consistently been humanitarian, but he has always been realistic in ways to achieve them. He knows that the wealth that is controlled by government can derive only from the work of the governed; he is, therefore no welfare-stater.

Fourth, He is a firm believer in putting wealth to work. Much of his life has been devoted to finding imaginative ways to employ capital so as to create jobs—to provide housing—to improve diets—to lift the living standards of the poor of this Nation and other nations.

Mr. Chairman, these are my four principal points. However, the second one—the nominee's qualifications in Government—I believe deserves a little elaboration. What is often not recognized is the fact that Nelson Rockefeller, despite his record tenure as a Governor, has a parallel record as an organizer and administrator at the Federal level.

Mr. Chairman, the nominee's background has been most thoroughly dug into by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, by other Government agencies, by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration and by our House Judiciary Committee.

The purpose of those investigations was to determine the character and moral qualities of the candidate. In that regard it seems to me that there is a growing attitude in the country and especially in the media which seems to presuppose that any individual who has achieved some level of success in life is somehow automatically suspect when that individual becomes a candidate for public office or for appointment to a high position in government. This mood, or attitude, if you will, causes me a great deal of concern. It is unhealthy. People who have trouble imagining anybody with either power or money being honest and above-board betray more of their own nature than they perceive in others.

We have all heard and read some of the criticism of the President that he has been too slow in replacing officials from the previous administration and in getting his own team in place. While I am not familiar with all of his efforts in that field, I suspect that he is having a hard time attracting competent people because of the treatment that Governor Rockefeller and others have received from the media and committees of Congress.

If we are not careful, we will find ourselves with a political system woefully lacking in people who have a record of achievement and accomplishment in other fields of endeavor that could be usefully applied in government.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, President Ford has had an enormous burden thrust upon him. He faces an incredibly big task in rebuilding confidence in Government—in putting behind us the divisions created by our longest war—and in working with labor and with business to turn the economy around and bring out its vast underlying strength.

Big tasks require the efforts of big men and women. Gerald Ford is such a man and so is Nelson Rockefeller. They will make a great team. I hope you feel, as I do, that we should put the team on the field as soon as possible.

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Chairman, we are again confronted with our responsibilities under the 25th amendment.

Each of us, of course, may interpret these responsibilities differently. My own view is that standards against which we test a nominee for Vice President should be measured with the thought in mind that he could become President.

If I were a delegate to a national Presidential-Vice Presidential nominating convention, I would be justified in judging a nominee on the basis of ideology and political views on issues. It would be valid for me to compare his or her views with my own and those of the constituency which I was representing at such a nominating convention.

I do not feel that my responsibilities as a Member of Congress voting on a sitting President's nomination for a person to be Vice President allows me to base my decision on these same ideological or issue grounds.

I see my responsibility as judging such a nominee on his loyalty to the country, his personal integrity and his ability to do the job.

The President, under the 25th amendment, has the right to nominate a person who, in his judgment, is acceptable from an ideological and political basis. President Ford has nominated Nelson

December 19, 1974

Rockefeller to be his Vice President, and, while Mr. Rockefeller would not have been my choice for Vice President, the decision was President Ford's not mine.

Along with many of my colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee, I have been troubled by some of the matters uncovered during the investigation. I also have very strong disagreement with Nelson Rockefeller on some vitally important issues. Notable among them is abortion. Mr. Rockefeller favors it; I most strenuously oppose it. But I have been unable to persuade myself that these disagreements justify my voting against him. That, in my view, is not my right under the 25th amendment.

As a reading of the hearing transcript will reflect, I was also deeply disturbed by what I perceived to be a lack of candor on the part of Mr. Rockefeller and his associates relating to details surrounding the financing and publication of a book about one of Mr. Rockefeller's political adversaries.

But weighing the pros and cons, studying my own duty under the 25th amendment, and being concerned about the country being so long without a Vice President, I will vote "aye" on this confirmation.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I have approached my decision on this nomination on the basis of whether Mr. Rockefeller's policies are in the best interests of the citizens of this country. And after reviewing his record, I conclude that they are not.

I say that because we are now moving into a different period in American history. Since World War II, and up to Vietnam and Watergate, we operated under a misconception—a myth, if you will—that all would prosper in this country through the expansion and consolidation of American corporate wealth within the United States and abroad. Our governmental policies have reflected this continually. We have supported a huge defense establishment and a CIA with its destabilizing ability. We have supported expansionary fiscal policies, but all of a sudden, we realize that perhaps this theory, this myth, no longer applies. And I think that this question of what are the best interests of the people in this country converge upon our votes on this nomination, because I suggest that on policy grounds alone, this nominee does not meet the test.

I must respectfully refuse to be guided by the argument that since the nominee is as acceptable as any Republican would be, he ought to be supported. And the reason I reject that theory is that we would be injecting partisanship and we would be bringing political considerations to this test. That is not the test. Our test is more important than whether the nominee has ideas compatible with those of the President who nominated him. That is not the point, and that is precisely why the 25th amendment provided that we would each enter our one small 435th of a judgment, separate from that of the President of the United States who made this nomination. And so I reject this nomination on policy grounds—for example, on Mr. Rockefeller's continuing support for the notion of America as policeman of the world, which has led to the decline of American power and the shortage economy that we now live in. But over and above that, if that were not a sufficient ground, I would argue that this great merger of wealth and power is more than this Congress should tolerate.

Now I am not willing to say that the American people would not have the right to elect Nelson Rockefeller to the Vice-Presidency or indeed the Presidency. But I do say, and I say very firmly and with a deep conviction, that this Congress has no authority for the first time in our history to ratify this enormous merger of wealth and economic power with the political power that would become his upon assuming the office of the Vice-Presidency.

There is one other notion that I feel I must address because all have granted rather cavalierly that the rich and the poor should not be precluded from public office, which is something like precluding the wealthy from being able to sleep under bridges. The poor, in fact, are excluded from the American political process, and I think that it is incumbent upon at least some of us to make that statement public. Poor people—not professional people, not middle-class people, but poor people—have been traditionally excluded from this process, not only as active participants, but even as voters. And so the great struggle in this country to make this democracy what it has said it is continues with greater urgency than ever before.

What is before us now is a question of merging wealth and power that is so enormous that this Congress ought to reject it.

Now, finally, I have been troubled by the lack of candor, of the nominee. I have been impressed that most of the critical evidence has not been brought forward in a voluntary manner, but it has been discovered almost despite the activities of Nelson Rockefeller and the staff and counsel assisting him in the Judiciary Committee hearings. It has been brought forward most reluctantly. There are any number of contradictions on the record itself that disturb me.

My views on how this country ought to be run are not compatible with those that have been expressed and are reflected in the record of this nominee. He ought not be confirmed.

Mr. RARICK. Mr. Chairman, the action that we are asked to take, that is to confirm or reject the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States, is so far-reaching that it again points out the mistake of the adoption of the 25th amendment.

By treating his nomination as a perfunctory confirmation, we commit the grievous act of placing over the affairs of our country and our people a man who has not been selected, nor voted upon by the American people. His confirmation fulfills the wildest fears of the original opponents of the 25th amendment, in that we will then have both a President and a Vice President who, by the quirk of fate, have been hand-selected by a powerful minority of one political party, rather than by the traditional constitutional process of a Republic.

No minority government, unelected by its people has remained stable long.

I am not unmindful of Mr. Rockefeller's background as the Governor of New York, nor of the influential role he has played through applying his family's wealth to the change mechanisms which are hard at work in our country, as well as, almost every other country on the face of the Earth. I am also aware of the intense suspicions by many freedom-loving Americans as well as foreign nationals, to the Rockefeller wealth and Mr. Rockefeller's image as a little god, desirous of changing the world to suit his scheme, regardless of time-honored traditions, loyalties and the Creator's natural plan.

Mr. Rockefeller's nomination has set many fears in operation. He is identified with trade with the Reds for profit, with the pro-abortion movement, the firearm registration movement, and the international one-world supremacy elitists. He is too controversial to ever unite our people, let alone lead them.

Our vote will come on the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller to be the Vice President of the United States. I am not convinced that his confirmation would accomplish that purpose, nor that he will reduce his international posture to fulfill such position in the best interests of the American people.

Clear-cut conflicts of interest exist between Mr. Rockefeller's wealth and international commitments, and his ability to perform the constitutional responsibilities invested in the Office of Vice President.

Therefore, I am casting my people's vote against his confirmation.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. Chairman, in my 8 years of service here in the U.S. House of Representatives, the confirmation vote on Vice-President-designate Nelson Rockefeller has caused me the greatest amount of personal reflection and anguish. I have felt an enormous weight of responsibility in endeavoring to reach a judgment on his confirmation that is honest, painstaking, and right for the country—a vote which squares with my conscience and my instincts. The test I have applied is that of fitness to be President—for that to me is the real issue in this situation.

For countless hours, both day and night, I have wrestled with the real and complex issues associated with the Rockefeller nomination. As I am not personally acquainted with the nominee, as I was earlier acquainted with Gerald Ford when he was the Vice-Presidential-designee, I have keenly felt the absence of first-hand personal awareness and knowledge—and this has troubled me.

Now, like my colleagues, I am to speak for my constituents and for the American people in judging whether Mr. Rockefeller should or should not receive the vote that it is my responsibility to cast.

The issue in my mind comes down to two basic factors: first, the qualities, good and bad, of the man himself and second, this particular crucial moment in time where we find ourselves as a self-governing people.

I find a mix of strengths and weaknesses in the nominee himself.

On the negative side there is for me his inexcusable and near blind support of the Vietnam war and the American bombing policy in Southeast Asia. As bad, was his continued blind support of the Nixon-Agnew administration and its policies—and his failure to see and comprehend the mountain of evidence proving the pervasive corruption of that administration.

My memory does not recall Governor Rockefeller stepping forward to speak out against the "Southern strategy," against former Vice President Agnew's divisive and polarizing political attacks, or the sad Nixon nominees to the Supreme Court which the U.S. Senate wisely rejected.

As the country was staggered by Watergate and the massive criminal law violations of the Nixon administration, Mr. Rockefeller remained essentially silent. The comments I remember him making were to give unqualified support to a discredited President Nixon. On the burning national issues of the past decade, Mr. Rockefeller has not offered the kind of alternative national leadership the country desperately needed. As a potential national leader, he was either unable or unwilling to lead. To me that is a terrible failure. He counted for little, in national leadership terms, when the country needed him most.

Add to this his aloofness and misjudgment in the Attica prison uprising—and the terrible loss of life experienced there. Add further the shoddy campaign tactic of the Goldberg book, and what seems to be a pattern of deliberately evasive answers in regard to this shameful book project.

Add to this the countless loans and gifts to political associates and the continuing conflicts of interest such gifts must necessarily cause to arise. Add further the enormous concentration—in my mind overconcentration—of private economic power he represents and the obvious impossibility of avoiding future conflicts of interest—to me they are inherent in his situation.

Finally I have a sense that Governor Rockefeller was in many respects a political bully—a man who used his executive powers and family resource powers to enforce his own will.

I am also convinced that in 1970 Mr. Rockefeller could have averted the Nixon purge of Senator Goodell. My instincts tell me that despite some Rockefeller financial help to Goodell, Mr. Rockefeller was careful to limit his help—and more importantly to limit his own direct involvement—and the associated political risks to himself—so that in the end Senator Goodell was purged and Senator Buckley elected. That incident to me suggests that self-interest came ahead of any other principle.

I should make one additional point. I have seen nothing that convinces me that Mr. Rockefeller has a deep understanding of the pressures and problems facing the average citizen in this country. It pains me greatly to feel that Mr. Rockefeller has spent a lifetime too removed from auto workers in Flint, Mich.—coal miners in West Virginia—agricultural workers in California—and other rank and file people across the whole of America. Does Mr. Rockefeller know—and feel—the agony and pain facing millions and millions of people across our land? I am sad to say that I see little evidence of this kind of understanding.

Having said the worst, let me now indicate the pluses I see in this nomination.

Mr. Rockefeller seems to me to be genuinely dedicated to public service—and has so invested his working life. Moreover he has shown himself to be a competent chief executive and a man able to govern and win reelection from his constituents. Obviously his unlimited wealth facilitated his campaign efforts, but my confidence in the electorate tells me he was not able to "buy" his reelection victories—although his great wealth did provide him a substantial, and in my judgment, unfair, advantage.

On matters of civil rights generally, Mr. Rockefeller has shown himself a moderate. He has shown a greater concern for urban problems—and the difficulties facing low- and middle-income people, than most of his contemporaries in the Republican Party. His general approach to the problems of State government demonstrated an awareness of the broad public interest that I find encouraging.

As to motivation, I do not believe the assertion advanced by some that Mr. Rockefeller would use a public trust to promote his own private gain.

The evidence examined by the Judiciary Committee does not support that charge—and I do not suspect Mr. Rockefeller of that intent. However, I do feel there is another kind of conflict—an attitude conflict—that probably exists both consciously and unconsciously, that would tend to lead Mr. Rockefeller in directions that would preserve concentrated private power at the possible expense of the broad public interest.

Finally it is my sense that Mr. Rockefeller genuinely wants to do a good job, whether as Vice President or President.

The suitability of confirming Mr. Rockefeller must take into account these factors as well as the unique moment in time where we now find ourselves.

The times cry out for strong, experienced, humane, and sensitive leadership. Our economic difficulties alone here in America, and in the Western World, suggest to me that we have not a moment to lose in devising and implementing a comprehensive economic recovery program.

Other life and death human issues also cry out for attention and solution. Addressing these urgent national and global issues requires talent and broad experience—it seems to me Mr. Rockefeller could be an important additional element in getting this job done.

The 25th amendment, as imperfect as it is, gives the President the power to name a Vice President, subject to the confirmation of Congress. He has submitted his choice, we have spent considerable time investigating and examining his candidate, and now we ought to properly settle the matter. I think the country would be ill-served to continue indefinitely without a Vice President.

President Ford has named a person he feels he can work with during the next 2 years. I have said on numerous occasions that the interests of America require that President Ford be effective in the discharge of his responsibilities. If he is to do his best, he needs to assemble the talent and resources he feels are necessary—with Congress retaining its proper oversight responsibility. My position has been to give Mr. Ford the essential tools he needs to do his job.

In recent years and months Congress has acted with new vitality to regain its constitutionally assigned powers in relationship to the executive branch of Government. I feel we are on the verge of an era of congressional government—after a long and disillusioning period of executive government.

Whatever potential excesses, then, the present administration might be inclined toward, I am confident that a strong and independent legislative branch will be fully adequate to meet and repel them.

In summary then, America and free world—in fact the whole world—face unprecedented crises on all fronts—and the fate of mankind demands competent and decisive leadership. Despite his shortcomings—and the serious reservations I cited earlier—I believe the times and circumstances argue for the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller.

There is no joy in my vote, and the struggle in my mind on this issue will not end when I finally cast my vote today. I vote today the way I think will help my country the most and hurt it the least. I hope and pray that the future will show that this Congress, this day, rendered a wise collective judgment that will serve our people well.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, the House is assembled today to elect a Vice President of the United States. Under normal circumstances, this task is reserved for the American people, but we find ourselves today voting in behalf of the approximately 500,000 citizens we represent.

I believe that the 25th amendment provides Congress an equal share of responsibility for the selection of a Vice President under its provisions. The House is called upon to make a judgment regarding the fitness of the nominee, not so much with regard to the Vice Presidency, as to the Presidency itself.

Before proceeding further, I must comment on my disappointment over the urgency with which this issue is being resolved in the House. The 1,400 pages of testimony before the Judiciary Committee were available only for a few days prior to this vote. I was able to obtain one copy of the Judiciary Committee report this morning. I would have hoped that the decision on the Rockefeller nomination could have been postponed several weeks, until the 94th Congress convenes, so that the 92 new Members of the House would have been able to participate in a debate which will have great implications for them.

I cannot resolve in my mind the pressing misgiving that the 25th amendment ought not to be invoked in this instance. We have, in effect, an appointed President choosing his potential successor. We are far away from the position that the American people at large ought to participate in the selection of their President and Vice President.

I intend to vote against this nomination. It is a decision which has developed in my mind and my heart since the day that President Ford announced that Nelson Rockefeller was his choice for Vice President. I have been a close observer of Mr. Rockefeller for 16 years, and it is on the basis of these 16 years of observation that I am constrained to vote against his nomination.

I have tried hard to generate within myself some degree of confidence that Nelson Rockefeller would be a good President of the United States. From my observations and from my study of the Judiciary Committee report, I must conclude that I cannot generate this basic confidence.

Basically, I have little confidence in Mr. Rockefeller's judgment to the point that it would be the judgment I would like to see a U.S. President possess. The record of the Judiciary Committee investigation is replete with instances of serious bad judgment. I refer to substantial financial loans and gifts to close political allies, the matter of his assent to the authorship of an ugly book against his gubernatorial opponent, his tragic mishandling of the Attica prison revolt, his continuing defense of the Vietnam war, and so on.

My own observations of his stewardship as Governor of New York strengthen my lack of confidence in Mr. Rockefeller's judgment. Taxes paid by the people of New York are much greater than those paid by citizens of other States. During the Rockefeller years, literally thousands of jobs departed from New York as businesses located elsewhere to escape excessive taxation. When it appeared politically feasible for the Governor to create a massive welfare program, he did so, and when it was politically feasible to dismantle that program, he also did so.

With further regard to his leadership capability, I noted during my years of service as a New York Congressman that the Governor had a tendency to dump all of the problems he created in the State into the lap of the Federal Government. Governor Rockefeller devised grandiose plans for raids by the State into the Federal Treasury for funds to pay for programs which the State enacted but could no longer financially support.

I could go on in this vein, but I have made my point. I have little confidence that Nelson Rockefeller possesses that high degree of political and governmental judgment that a President ought to possess.

I would be remiss if I did not also mention my deep concern over the vast financial and political influence of the Rockefeller family. The American people watched with amazement as each announcement of the Governor's wealth grew substantially. The point is not Nelson Rockefeller's personal wealth, whatever it actually is. My concern is the marriage of the power of the American Presidency and the power of the Rockefeller family's enormous economic and financial influence.

Perhaps the most pressing issues facing Americans today are economic and financial issues, and the resolution of those issues may well require major adjustments in the economic and financial structure of this country. I have little confidence that Nelson Rockefeller could lead the United States in a period of economic and financial stress.

Mr. Chairman, I feel certain that Mr. Rockefeller will be confirmed. I wish him the very best in the duties he is about to undertake, and I pledge my cooperation and support to the maximum extent possible.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. Chairman, when the nomination of Governor Nelson Rockefeller to the Vice Presidency comes before the House of Representatives today, I will vote for confirmation. My decision is based upon Governor Rockefeller's long record of public service—a record that demonstrates the understanding, the concern and the ability to serve the public interest. It is not a record free of controversy, but the negatives are far outweighed by the experience and ability of the nominee.

First, I should restate my preference for a younger person as Vice President. I had hoped that the President would choose someone from a political generation other than his own to fill this position. Governor Rockefeller was not a choice I would have made. He is, however, the only choice on which I will have the opportunity to vote. Under these circumstances, in order to vote negatively, there would have to be substantive factual reasons for doing so.

Three such reasons have been advanced.

First, Mr. Rockefeller's participation in the publishing of the Goldberg book was unfortunate. Publications of this nature, which are written to cast the worst possible interpretations on the actions of an individual, would never have my approval. However, I view statements about the material being libelous, or the tactics being comparable to the Watergate plot to obstruct justice, as an exaggeration of the situation. Taken in perspective, I do not believe that the facts surrounding these actions are either conclusive enough or serious enough to warrant voting against this nomination.

Second, Governor Rockefeller's substantial monetary gifts to public officials raises grave questions of possible conflict of interest. Such gift—however, well-intentioned—should not have been made.

But, a careful review of the testimony before the Senate and House committees reveals no evidence that any action of any public official was improperly influenced by the gifts. Nor can I find any evidence that they were given with this objective in mind. The unanimous vote of approval of the Senate Rules Committee underscores the absence of conclusionary evidence on this point.

Finally, on the issue of Governor Rockefeller's wealth, it is argued that if he were to succeed to the office of the Presidency, his power would be used for the advancement of his, or his families' financial interests, rather than the public interest.

I believe the nominee's record as Governor of New York for 15 years cuts the ground out from under this objection. There is no evidence that he had misused his considerable power as Governor of our largest State for personal or family gain.

Too much of the case against Governor Rockefeller depends upon guessing at his possible past motives and on unknowable future actions. Conversely, the case for the nominee is supported by a long career of able public service.

I think that the Senate committee's action in unanimously approving the nomination, plus the House committee's approval, support these judgments.

For all of these reasons, I will vote in favor of Governor Rockefeller for the office of Vice President of the United States.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, after carefully considering my duty under the Constitution, studying the findings of the Judiciary Committee, and listening to the floor debates, I have concluded that I shall vote, with reservations, to confirm Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. My reasons for voting affirmatively are:

First, my duty under the Constitution is to confirm the President's nomination if the nominee is qualified and fit to hold the office, even though I may not agree with some of his political views or actions.

Second, he unquestionably possesses a breadth and depth of experience which, when coupled with his intelligence, energy, and personality, qualifies him for the position.

Third, based on the searching examination into his 35 years of public life I must conclude, on balance, that his judgment, character, and integrity pass any reasonable test of fitness.

Fourth, our Nation needs a Vice President, and unless this nominee is confirmed, the successor shall continue to be the Speaker of the House, who is not a member of the party elected by the American people in the last Presidential election.

Fifth, while I do not condone the nominee's involvement in the publication of the anti-Goldberg book, I reject completely the hypocritical double-standard applied by those members of the majority party who claim it is a basis for disqualification. If they are serious about wanting to clean up political campaigns, then I suggest they start with eliminating the gutter-politics practiced by members of their own party in congressional races.

Sixth, those who oppose this nomination based on the nominee's alleged conflict of interest, have failed to make their case. The gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. KASTENMEIER, the leader of the opposition, stated in his views on page 28 of the Judiciary report:

In all candor I must admit that I find no specific instance of any conspiracy on Mr. Rockefeller's part to advance his economic position at the expense of those he would publicly serve.

Mr. Chairman, if after exhaustive investigation into 35 years of public service, the Judiciary Committee and the leader of the opposition to the nomination reach the above conclusion, I must conclude that no such disqualifying evidence exists.

Mr. Chairman, my reservations to the nomination are:

First, I do not subscribe to many of the political positions taken by the nominee during his years of public service; indeed I strenuously oppose the massive spending and taxing measures he supported while Governor of New York, as well as his excessive commitment to internationalism.

Second, I acknowledge the inherent potential for conflict of interest which exists due to the pervasive economic interests of the Rockefeller family.

Third, while the nominee's gifts and loans to public people may have been motivated by the highest principles, their pattern casts a shadow which has not been removed.

Fourth, the use of vast economic resources to achieve political power must be of deep concern, even while recognizing that some national leaders of both parties have used their wealth to aid them in achieving positions of political prominence. It is clearly arguable, that political leaders who are economically secure, are not dependent on political jobs and may therefore act more independently in the public interest.

Mr. Chairman, I conclude, on balance, that my constitutional duties dictate that I vote to confirm the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. CHISHOLM).

Mrs. CHISHOLM. Mr. Chairman and my fellow colleagues in this House, I have sat in this Chamber practically all day today in order to be able to listen very attentively to the remarks that were being made with respect to the potential nomination of Vice President of these United States in the person of Nelson Rockefeller.

One of the reasons why I felt that it was very important for me to participate in the debate—as I had no intentions originally to do so, except to cast my vote—was due to the fact that in spite of the fact that Nelson Rockefeller served as the Governor of the State of New York for close to 14 years, the indication and the feelings that have been exhibited would lead one to believe that during the years of public service of this man there were very few things that were positive, that there was a lack of sensitivity to the needs of different segments of the people that made up the entire State of New York, that, indeed, there were feelings that were generated around here that Nelson Rockefeller was a terrible ogre, a terrible monster.

Anyone who knows anything about me in terms of my having served in the New York State Legislature knows fully well that Nelson Rockefeller and I crossed swords on many, many occasions, but I could not see myself sitting here in this Chamber and not telling some of my colleagues who do not come from the State of New York and who, therefore, will have to make their decisions on the basis of what many of my colleagues from New York have said, without giving to you a total picture in total perspective.

I could not be silent, and so although the Members have been sitting all day long, I ask you to just bear with me while I read this statement.

Mr. Chairman, I take the floor of the House today because we as a body of colleagues are confronted with the movement of history. We come here this evening or today to confirm a Vice President of this Nation. Much controversy has surrounded this nomination. Charges have been made over the last several weeks about abuses of his wealth; yet none have been actually proven before the Committee on the Judiciary.

Charges have been made relative to his alleged insensitivity to human needs; yet his record as Governor of New York on balance was a veritable demonstration of some progressivism.

I can recall that when President Ford nominated Nelson Rockefeller—now seemingly ages ago—many of us here in this chamber breathed a sigh of relief when he had made the selection of a progressive, seasoned, and 20th century-thinking man. Many in my own party were even pleased. And at that time there was no great hue and cry against this nominee.

Yet today some of our colleagues feel compelled to convey to the American people a totally negative and unjust image of a man who has devoted a large portion of his life to participating in the problem-solving process.

We have all heard about how Nelson Rockefeller supposedly used his wealth for political reasons, but no one has spoken about the constructive uses of Rockefeller money and personal initiative. No one speaks any longer about the establishment of one of the first black colleges in this Nation, Spellman College—we just do not talk about these things nowadays. This college could not stand today had it not been for the Rockefellers. None of my liberal friends talk about or newspapers print in bold headlines the fact that the Rockefeller brothers have contributed—yes, have contributed—over $300,000 to the United Negro College Fund and over one-half million dollars to the NAACP Legal Defense and Special Contribution Funds, some of my friends even got here in the well this afternoon and very casually said that we must not talk about the $50,000 he gave to the Urban League or to the NAACP Defense Fund. Yet if it were not for those dollars in terms of the needs of these organizations a certain segment in this country would not even be now moving into the midstream of this Nation. If the money had not been forthcoming, we would not have been able to provide the benefits that would redound to the benefit of hundreds of minority children in this generation of today.

Yes, I am going to talk about it. Mr. Chairman, I think it is very interesting that some of those in this Nation and in this House who were in the forefront of the movements and causes which were courageously championed by Governor Rockefeller somehow faded into the woodwork and failed to speak up positively and remind the Nation of some of his constructive service in government for the 14 years that he served in New York State.

Where are those very skilled and articulate social workers and community organizers who called on Governor Rockefeller, he who has been alleged to be insensitive to the community needs, who initiated the largest State medical program, as he did? Where are those environmentalists who lobbied for stringent environmental controls and expansive State-wide planning? Why have not the many people, particularly from the delegation of the State of New York, come forward to tell us it was Governor Rockefeller who created the State's pure waters program, the largest in the Nation, and a department of environmental conservation?

I only mention these things because of the constant talk about his insensitivity and lack of attunement to what the people need today in this Nation.

The record speaks for itself.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues, where are the voices of labor today? Why have not they and the American people been made aware of the fact that it was Rockefeller, yes, big bad, and rich Nelson A. Rockefeller who in New York set up the first State-wide minimum wage law and extended the right of collective bargaining to public employees and started in this country the State's first manpower training program?

Now, I am not here to tell the Members by a long shot that Nelson Rockefeller is perfect, because neither is anyone of us in this Chamber perfect, but I resent the fact that in terms of the record of public service that we have not balanced this on both sides of the scale.

It is no wonder that many of the Members here have their constituents writing in and telling them not to support Rockefeller and they do not want the Members to support Rockefeller. I do not blame them, and it is because of the fact that they have heard nothing in proportion to what the gentleman has done in terms of public service as contrasted to the publicity with respect to his wealth and also some errors in judgment which he has made. Of course, they have to rely on what the papers and the media have told them.

I realize that most of the Members have their minds already made up, but I am saying to them: Let us place everything in proper perspective.

Finally, where are the wonderful women who have spent endless hours in New York—and I worked with many of them—working toward an equitable and intelligent abortion law? Where are their voices now, telling my colleagues that it was Nelson A. Rockefeller who stood in the eye of the storm and in the face of heated controversy pushed through New York's abortion law? Where are these voices today? Well, I guess it is just not fair nor just to a man of great stature, for all of those who have endlessly called on him in the past, when they desired certain things on behalf of humanitarianism, to remain so silent and mute in this hour.

I do not intend to be silent nor do I intend to dispense undeserved praise. I only call on my colleagues to look at the total record and judge this man on the basis of fact and not allegation nor emotion.

The 25th amendment stipulates to us that it is our responsibility to make a determination as to whether or not the man has the qualifications to assume this important office.

Now if, indeed, we feel there is something wrong with the 25th amendment, we need to repeal the amendment and do something else.

Finally, my colleagues, I would just like to say that the fundamental problem with the Rockefeller nomination, of course, is that the Congress has not yet determined precisely what its responsibilities ought to be under the 25th amendment. Those responsibilities are quite different from those of a voter in a Presidential election. A voter is entitled to make his decision on prejudice, qualifications, philosophy, partisanship, or anything else that crosses his mind. Under the 25th amendment, it seems that Congress ought not to vote to reject a nominee unless it can be demonstrated that his judgment is consistently and persistently bad, that his political views are outside the mainstream of American politics and that his knowledge and experience are so limited as to make him unable to grasp the problems a President must face.

Mr. Chairman and my colleagues in the Congress, let us not for even 1 hour more delay the business of this Government. The Nation needs to have a Vice President, a team at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue that will help get the Nation going forward. Let us overwhelmingly confirm this man, though not perfect, Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. CHISHOLM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say, this has been one of the few times today that the clear, cool wind of fairness and truth has blown through this Chamber and I thank the gentlewoman.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PICKLE.)

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the nomination of Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President.

Mr. Chairman, Vice President Nelson Rockefeller is a distinguished American from a distinguished family. The President has nominated him to be the Vice President. We need to have a Vice President, and the President is entitled to a man of his choice if he qualifies. I think Mr. Rockefeller qualifies based on his public service. I intend to vote for him.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO).

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that anything further can be added to this debate. I yield back the balance of time.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, today, when Congress again considers the confirmation of a Vice President under the provisions of the 25th amendment—and after having endured the agonizing months of "Watergate"—it seems appropriate to call to the attention of my colleagues an article by one of the most distinguished jurists of our time, Abe Fortas. The title of Mr. Fortas' article is "The Constitution and the Presidency." Inevitably, he also discusses the other branches of Government, the fourth estate or the press, and what he insightfully refers to as the fifth estate—the people, themselves—and the sixth estate—individual freedom of conscience. All these disparate entities—the President, the Congress, the Supreme Court, the press, the people and the individual—have rights, responsibilities and limitations defined in the Constitution. Mr. Fortas comments:

A management consultant, looking at the product of the Founding Fathers, would almost certainly have said that it could not possibly work. A realistic chart of the governmental system they created would look more like a hopeless maze, bound to frustrate the emergence of decision, than an orderly structure. But the remarkable fact is that this system, defying all management principles, has survived for about 200 years. Its longevity is unparalleled. No other nation has been governed for so long a period under a continuous written charter.

As we all know, one of the great strengths of that charter is its adaptability to changing realities. There are presently 26 amendments to the Constitution. Mr. Fortas advocates the repeal of some and the adoption of new ones. He does so only after thoroughly examining the assault on the Constitution which he believes the "Watergate" debacle represents and the weaknesses in the Constitution as now written to adequately meet such a challenge. I may not agree with all of the statements in this article, but I wholeheartedly agree that this time we have been lucky; that we must not presume our survival of the ordeal means we have sufficient constitutional safeguards to meet a similar challenge in the future, and that we now have an obligation, having been forewarned, to provide a more flexible means for removal of a President than the only one now at our disposal—the impeachment process.

Mr. Fortas refers to a constitutional amendment I have proposed which would permit a new election for President and Vice President within 90 days if two-thirds of the Members of the House and two-thirds of the Members of the Senate agree that the incumbent President has either failed to meet certain specific constitutional responsibilities or has exceeded his powers. The legislative branch is as capable of abuse of power as is the executive and in the proposed constitutional amendment which I suggest there are certain built-in restraints to prevent capricious use of power by the Congress. I invite your attention to this legislation and hope hearings will be held in 1975. I think it is a good, sound proposal and I wish to give credit where credit is due. It grew out of a luncheon conversation with Mr. Fortas, himself. I believe his to be one of the most brilliant and incisive minds I have ever encountered. I offer the following article as an example. With wit, eloquence, passion, and logic Mr. Fortas argues powerfully that we must, in his words "revitalize the machinery of government."

THE CONSTITUTION AND THE PRESIDENCY (By Abe Fortas)

The American Presidency, like slavery, is a peculiar institution. Many of our Chief Executives have sometimes felt that the Presidency is in fact a form of slavery. But they seem to resist emancipation; and most of them exercise considerable ingenuity to avoid being relieved of their splendid misery. Every job has its compensations. Its trappings are regal; its fringe benefits are sumptuous; and the power which is attendant upon it is overwhelming. The President's finger can put vast events in motion—not just the firing of the nuclear bomb.

The Presidency has become the central, dominating factor in our collective lives, and a crucial factor in the world.

The Presidency does not induce humility. The President is coddled, cuddled, and sheltered—even while he is denounced and abused. But he is still just a man: A fallible human being. His exalted position and his vast power constantly remind him that he has a great mission; and the splendid unreality of the White House residence, the airplanes, secret service agents, and body servants—the retinue and trappings of the office—constantly tell him that he is a chosen man—that he is uniquely endowed with wisdom and genius to determine the Nation's course.

His life is sheltered: He is criticized in public, sometimes viciously, but never to his face. In his presence, he is treated with reverence: He is never Harry or Lyndon or Dick. He is always "Mr. President."

To most Presidents, public criticism and the frustrations of our system are healthy reminders of their fallibility; but sometimes, and to some Presidents, they are incitements to use the enormous power of the office to punish in retaliation: They are unbearable interferences with the great mission of the Presidency as he sees it.

The Framers of the Constitution tried to design a modest Presidency. They foresaw the danger of an Imperial Presidency, in Arthur Schlesinger's phrase. They realized that the Presidency was capable of misuse and abuse: That it could be used to invade the constitutional liberties of private citizens; to weaken and enfeeble opposing political parties by illegal means; to operate secretly; to avoid accountability; and to circumvent and enfeeble the other institutions of government. We know now that their fears were justified.

The group of astonishing young men, whom we call the Founding Fathers, sought to devise a system that would not permit a run-away Presidency. They feared the corruption of power. They distrusted kings and Presidents. They distrusted legislatures and they even distrusted the people themselves. As George Washington phrased it, they wondered whether "mankind when left to themselves are unfit for their own government."

But they had reluctantly concluded that a strong central government was essential. They had learned, from their distressing experience under the Articles of Confederation, that feeble government was no government; and that no government meant chaos. They had learned that people need the restraining hand of government—just as government requires the restraints of the people. They had not abandoned the revolutionists' exalted faith in the divine nature of man; but they had learned that man's divinity was still a seed which needed the help of an effective government.

So it was that in 1787, when the delegates to the constitutional convention met, they tried to create a government in which power would exist, but always in check. They devised a powerful government; but they fragmented its power. They built conflict and tension into the system that they created. No one—no official or branch of government—was given authority independent of the authority of others. No one was given power to decree. Their guiding principle was not efficiency, but advocacy and persuasion. The President could advocate and propose, and he could execute the laws, but he could not legislate. The Congress could legislate, but unless it could persuade the President or override him, it was subject to the President's veto power. And the Supreme Court could checkmate both of them.

Even this was not enough: They did not merely fragment power in three parts. They created not just a tri-partite government, but a pluralistic political system. The checks and balances were not confined to the three estates of the Legislature, Executive and Judiciary. The architects of our Constitution decreed a fourth estate, the press, and a fifth estate, the people; and to both of these, they guaranteed rights to affect and even determine the course of government—rights which were placed beyond the reach of government. And they also carved out of the domain of government, a sixth estate, untouchable by government or by a majority of the people: This was each man's fealty or non-fealty to God and to the institutions of religion. They knew that man's inner commitment and the vastly important establishments of the various faiths are the bedrock of political democracy because they are the ultimate—the irreducible essence—a personal freedom. They knew that no government could achieve absolute authority if the conscience of the people is free.

By the First Amendment, guaranteeing individual liberty and freedom of the press and religion, the Founding Fathers sought to serve more than the cause of personal liberty. The First Amendment is more than a charter of individual freedom; it is a fundamental political principle. It is the fundamental institution of political government in a democracy. A free people—and only a free people—protected in their persons, their conscience, their speech, their rights to act jointly—secure in their homes and offices, can effectively preserve a political democracy.

A management consultant, looking at the product of the Founding Fathers, would almost certainly have said that it could not possibly work. A realistic chart of the governmental system they created would look more like a hopeless maze, bound to frustrate the emergence of the decision, than an orderly structure. But the remarkable fact is that this system, defying all management principles, has survived for about 200 years. Its longevity is unparalleled. No other nation has been governed for so long a period under a continuous written charter.

Our Constitution has survived because it is essentially and realistically a human document. It has survived because of, and not in spite of, its ambiguities and its managerial imperfections—because it is peculiarly adapted to the American character and to our institutions, of which it is both parent and child. A more perfect Constitution—efficiently designed, and free of the ambiguities and conflicts of our charter—would long ago have been shattered by the pressures and demands of the spectacular growth of our Nation and the aggressiveness of its people.

But the very characteristics which made our Constitution viable, were themselves the source of danger. The ambiguities of our Constitution are essential to its vitality; but an ambiguous charter is a temptation to the ambitious. The fragmentation of power in our Constitution is essential to its democratic design; but fragmentation of power carries with it conflict, confrontation, and frustration; and the combination of power and frustration is hard for some leaders to accept. To some men in the Presidential chair, our system is a cage preventing them from accomplishing their herculean task; and the peril that a President may seek to break through the bars of the cage has always been present.

The Founding Fathers realized this danger. They were acutely aware that Presidents might seek to breach the limitation upon their power.

So it was, according to legend, that when Benjamin Franklin returned to his lodging from the constitutional convention, he was asked by his landlady: "Mr. Franklin, what have you given us, a republic or a monarchy?" and he replied, "A republic—if you can keep it."

That is still our challenge, dramatized by the events of the past few years.

Despite their misgivings, the drafters of the Constitution concluded—and wisely—that they had no alternative; that a strong Presidential office is essential to effective government.

They resolved that the President was to be the only "National Officer," the only chosen official, along with his Vice President, representing the Nation as a whole. As Gouverneur Morris stated it, he was to be the only "National Officer, acting for and equally sympathizing with every part of the United States."

The President was to be the Chief Executive of the government—the sole and ultimate repository of power to carry out the laws of the United States.

He was to be the supreme military commander; Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States.

He was vested with the power to conduct our foreign affairs.

He was given a legislative function: He must report to Congress on the State of the Union, and recommend measures for their consideration. He may veto bills passed by the Congress, in which event they do not become law unless passed over his veto by two-thirds of each House. He may convene Congress and, in certain circumstances, adjourn them.

He was given a vital role with respect to the Judiciary: He appoints Justices of the Supreme Court and judges of the other federal courts, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

These are great powers; but they are incomplete. The President has power to administer, to initiate, to lead, and to advocate. He can shape events which determine the fate of the Nation. As Chief Executive and political leader, he has unique opportunity to summon the people to his support, and to reward those who aid him and to punish his opposition.

But the ultimate power to make the rules, to legislate, is not the President's; it is the Legislature's. Our Constitution creates a President with formidable governmental power; but it does not authorize him to govern. The President is a part of the government; he is not the government.

There have been many instances in our history, dating from the earliest days of the Republic, when Presidents have taken action which was not authorized by the Congress, and which was, in greater or less degree, beyond the President's unilateral power. With few exceptions, these instances have been related to armed conflict and foreign affairs. They have stemmed from the premise, which I believe to be erroneous, but which many Presidents have adopted, that the President, particularly as Commander-in-Chief, has implied and virtually unlimited emergency powers.

Even Lincoln and Truman, both of whom were sensitive to the meaning and genius of our Constitution, were guilty of exceeding their constitutional powers. Truman seized the steel mills in order to prevent interruption of production which might jeopardize conduct of the Korean War. Lincoln suspended the writ of habeas corpus during the Civil War. Both Presidents rationalized their acts by the claim, as Truman stated, that "The President of the United States has very great powers to meet great national emergencies." The Supreme Court held that both of them had acted unconstitutionally.

In considering the constitutional derelictions of past Presidents, however, it is important to realize that, without exception, their unconstitutional actions have been specific and isolated—taken to meet specific and emergency situations. Their derelictions have not challenged or implicated the basic constitutional structure of our government. They have not been part of a general course of action in the day-to-day conduct of government. They have not been based upon, nor have they constituted an assertion of general Presidential power to override the power of Congress or to disregard the law. Presidents have not sought to prevent examination of their acts, or to avoid responsibility for them. They have not claimed that "executive privilege" confers upon the President total immunity from legal process and absolute, comprehensive and exclusive authority to decide what he will and will not disclose in response to congressional demand or other lawful authority.

Obviously, most Presidents, under the pressure of events, have sometimes wished that our system was different. Every President is certain that he could do better if it were not for the Congress and the press, and sometimes, the Supreme Court. In the past, they have nevertheless endured the frustrations of the system; and within that system, some of them have nevertheless achieved greatness. Strong Presidents have found within the President's constitutional power the potential for powerful, daring, innovative action; but, with relatively few lapses, they have done so by providing leadership and advocacy and by using the office to obtain the consensus that our Constitution requires.

The outstanding exemplar of this was Franklin Roosevelt. During his incumbency, Presidential power expanded to an unprecedented degree; but the expansion occurred despite, and not because of, his abortive and unfortunate attempt to weaken the institution of the Supreme Court. It was the result of constitutional processes. The explosive increase of Presidential function and prerogative which revolutionized the Presidency was the product of congressional legislation, enacted under Roosevelt's extraordinary leadership. It was not a consequence of unilateral action, of the seizure of power.

Roosevelt deployed the tensions and conflicts built into our Constitution to achieve affirmative action within the system. Faced by a catastrophic depression and a World War, he sought and obtained from the Congress great and novel authority for the President to act. But he did not usurp the power of the Congress or invade the rights of the people or the press or even of the opposing political party in order to accomplish the vast programs that he initiated.

III

This has not been the method of the Nixon administration. Like all strong Presidents, President Nixon has sought to have the nation follow his leadership and accept his decisions. But his conception of the Presidency is radically different from that of his predecessors. It represents a sharp break with our history and constitutional tradition. The Nixon administration has challenged our constitutional institutions. It has not merely committed acts in excess of constitutional right and authority. It has boldly confronted us with a new and revolutionary concept of the Presidency.

President Nixon obviously believed that he had authority to impound funds appropriated by the Congress, and he did so. He believed that he could refuse to carry out programs enacted by the Congress, and he did so. He claimed broad and final authority to withhold information from the Congress, and to avoid accountability for his actions. Members of his staff, seeking to accomplish Presidential purposes, have used the powers of the Presidential office to plan or authorize fantastic acts of lawlessness, violating ancient and fundamental rights of the people.

He has presented us with a challenge to our Constitution—to our basic institutions and our way of life. However well-motivated the President may be, or however unaware he may be of the implications of his actions, the net effect of his actions has been an attempted constitutional coup d'état: A fundamental alteration—a subversion—of our basic constitutional structure.

And so, we have been confronted with a constitutional crisis. The significance of this crisis does not stem from the incredible acts of alleged criminal or quasi-criminal conduct that have been the subject of massive investigation. These are merely the ugly manifestations of a conception of Presidential power and status which has no place in our constitutional system.

The alleged criminal acts are, or course, of great national concern. They include charges to which the administration's former Attorney General vividly referred as "horrors": Alleged complicity in burglary, unlawful electronic espionage, concealment of felonies, obstruction of justice, unlawful suppression and withholding of evidence.

I hope that the President's personal involvement in respect of these charges can be disproved. But the fact remains that if and when substantial allegations of misfeasance are made against a President, our system of government requires that the President must respond to the allegations, like any other person so accused.

Our Constitution does not give a President or his staff authority to participate in or to authorize criminal acts. Certainly it would be preposterous to argue that a President or his staff may engage in unlawful conduct in order that he may be reelected. As a candidate for reelection, he has no more rights than his rivals. But even as to acts related to the conduct of his office, the President and his staff are subject to the law, including the prohibitions of the criminal code. Nor does our Constitution confer immunity upon a President or his staff for the consequences of their acts, or a right to withhold relevant evidence.

A President is accountable for criminal acts, if he has committed them, like any other citizen. He may be removed from office. He may be prosecuted after impeachment and removal from office; and, in theory, nothing in the Constitution itself would bar indictment and prosecution even while he is in office—unwise and infeasible as this may be in practice. There is no constitutional difference in this respect between a President or Vice President, a federal judge or any other civil officer of the United States—despite assertions to the contrary.

But we shall be derelict in our duty if our response to the present crisis is merely punishment of the malefactors—if we neglect the underlying meaning and moral of the traumatic experience which we are enduring. The events of the past few years teach a lesson which we will ignore only at our great peril. They teach us the terrible consequences which can result from the exercise of unbridled power: That power exercised without constitutional restraint can destroy not only our democratic political system, but our personal, individual liberty.

Some of the criminal acts in which the Nixon administration was allegedly implicated involved violations of ancient and fundamental rights, enshrined in our constitutional guarantees: The right to privacy, to security of our homes and offices, to freedom from lawless action under cloak of governmental authority. It is not mere coincidence that these spectacular charges of criminal and unconstitutional invasion of the rights of individuals have been lodged against a White House which is also accused of disregarding the limitations of Presidential authority in governmental affairs: Of disregarding congressional commands with respect to Cambodia and Laos; of unlawfully impounding appropriated funds; and of refusing to implement programs enacted by the Congress.

The same inflated conception of Presidential power and immunity which provided the basis for Watergate and the other "horrors," also led to the exercise by the President of governmental power which our Constitution denies to him. All of these acts and events are the product of a conception and theory of the Presidency as an office with power to disregard the law to achieve Presidential objectives; with power to make law, rather than execute it; and with power to refuse to account for Presidential acts.

The history of political institutions warns us that the destruction of restraints upon political power and the destruction of individual liberty go hand in hand. Regimes that seize political power preserve and expand that power by the ruthless and lawless invasion of personal rights. Let us not delude ourselves into believing that we are immune: that we can tolerate the violation of the political restraints which our Constitution places upon the Presidency, and nevertheless remain complacently secure that we retain our cherished freedoms.

We will not solve our problems merely by punishing those guilty of criminal acts. We will not save our nation merely by rebuffing this administration's attempt to exercise unconstitutional authority. We must ponder the fundamental problem of which we are now so dramatically warned: The problem of the adequacy and effectiveness of our machinery to restrain the Presidency.

We have experienced the incredible. The unprecedented, the unthinkable, have happened. They can happen again; and it is not inconceivable that if they occur again—if we fail to take measures to prevent their recurrence—the next time they will succeed. If they succeed, virtually unlimited Presidential power may replace our political democracy and undermine our personal liberty and our freedom from arbitrary, lawless governmental action.

We must, therefore, consider the following questions: Are our constitutional institutions adequate to confine the President's actions to the limits necessary for democratic government and to protect each of us against misuse of Presidential power; is our constitutional machinery adequate to make the President properly accountable for his acts; have the changes wrought by time and events, and the evolution of the power of the President, so enfeebled the checks and balances provided by our Constitution that fundamental revisions are essential?

In short, we must address ourselves to an examination of the adequacy of our machinery to protect the rights of the people and their institutions: The Congress, the press and our political system: To protect these against Presidential usurpation and abuse; to establish proper and workable definitions for Presidential authority; and to create effective machinery to ensure Presidential accountability for the President's actions.

IV

I should like, first, to clear away some of the dust that has recently been kicked up, by stating a few elementary principles:

1. The President is not above the law. He is subject to the Constitution and the laws enacted by the Congress—in all respects, not just some.

2. It is the President's constitutional duty to execute, to apply and administer the laws duly enacted by the Congress, whether they are good, bad or indifferent; whether they will balance the budget or break it.

He cannot constitutionally impound funds which Congress has appropriated and directed him to spend, unless and except to the extent that Congress has authorized him to do so. He cannot refuse to carry out programs which Congress has enacted, whether they relate to minority employment opportunities or to the sewage and water systems of our Nation.

3. The President cannot constitutionally, even for a moment of time, authorize lawless programs of domestic surveillance, wiretapping, electronic espionage, or breaking and entering homes or offices, whether in the interests of internal security or otherwise. He can neither do these things, nor authorize or permit them to be done. It is his duty to prevent any such acts, and to see that the perpetrators are prosecuted.

4. The President and the entire executive establishment must account to the Congress for their actions and, with extremely limited exceptions, must respond to authorized congressional, judicial and grand jury demands for relevant material and information, including memoranda and even tape-recordings.

Our system does not recognize a general, royal or Presidential prerogative incident to Presidential tapes or papers or communications, or to the person occupying the Presidency. "Executive privilege" is nothing more or less than the principle that, in limited situations, the courts will permit the President or a principal executive officer to decline to comply with subpoenas or congressional demands for his physical presence or for the disclosure of certain restricted and reasonably well-identifiable types of documents or communications. This is not because of any explicit provision in the Constitution. The Constitution says nothing about executive privilege; but the courts will recognize such a privilege, where and to the extent that it is a necessary incident to the performance of official duties, and where the recognition of the privilege is necessary to serve the national interest. In making these judgments, the courts will also take into account the reasons for the demand for disclosure, the purpose which disclosure would serve, and the materiality and importance of disclosure to the issues before Congress or the courts.

Executive privilege will almost always be recognized by the courts where and to the extent that the subpoenaed material contains secret and sensitive defense or foreign affairs information. On the other hand, a claim of privilege by the President will not be sustained if the communication does not directly relate to his official duties, if it is otherwise material to the matter at issue. This is true with respect to verbal as well as written or recorded communications between the President and his staff, or other persons. There is no basis, therefore, for a claim of executive privilege with respect to communications relating to such acts as campaign activities or actions which may violate the criminal laws. Even communications between the President and his personal lawyer are not privileged if they involve a conspiracy to commit a violation of law or to conceal a felony.

Obviously, this doctrine, correctly understood, refutes the claim that the President may, himself, finally decide whether or not he will make the production. The power to decide whether the President must or need not comply is in the courts; the President may claim the right to decline to comply, but only the courts can decide the question. Obviously, the doctrine provides no basis for a claim of privilege by the President with respect to documents or tapes relating to the President's political activities or to any matter except those incident to his lawful, official duties, disclosure of which would be injurious to the Nation or would hamper the President in the performance of his constitutional and lawful functions.

Lawyers will recognize that the doctrine is not essentially different from the principles that govern decisions with respect to private citizens. The basic principles are the same: Disclosure is required only where the communication is material to the issue at hand; but where it is material, claims of privilege must be decided on the basis of the subject matter of the communication—not the status of the participants. The difference between the treatment of the President and a private citizen is merely the consequence of the executive's special constitutional and official duties.

This is fundamental to our democratic, constitutional system. The President of the United States is not above the law. He is subject to the law, like any other person; and he can claim only such immunity, such privilege, as is given to him by express legislation or by the application of universal legal principles to his particular role and responsibilities.

5. Under our constitution, the President has no implied powers which enable him to make or disregard laws, except as specifically authorized by the Congress.

The President has certain emergency powers, derived from his duties as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, but these powers are extremely limited. They do not authorize him to suspend or disregard laws, or to invade the constitutional rights of citizens, whether or not internal security is involved. The President's powers as Commander-in-Chief are military, not legislative. He is the supreme civilian head of the Armed Forces. He controls their use and deployment, subject, however, like any other commander of military forces, to law and to congressional authorization. Like a field commander, he can take military action to meet an emergency, if such action is limited to the emergency; but it is the right and duty of the Congress, which it has sometimes cravenly avoided performing, to enact legislation, as promptly as possible, to direct that the military action continue or be terminated. The President, whether as Commander-in-Chief or otherwise, has no constitutional authority to use armed forces contrary to law and to congressional direction.

6. With respect to foreign affairs, the drafters of the Constitution understood that the President's role would, of necessity, be primary. The authority to deal with foreign governments had to be vested in an individual, not in the Congress; and they hoped that adequate checks upon Presidential power would be provided by the necessity of obtaining the Senate's advice and consent to treaties and the exclusive power of Congress to declare war. But the tidy, formal world that this arrangement postulated has long vanished. Relations with foreign governments defy the neat constitutional categories. Wars are seldom declared; they develop and exist. International commitments are made without the formality of treaties. These commitments sometimes, in practical effect, inextricably involve the Nation in alliances of vast consequences, even leading to present the Congress and the people with a fait accompli. A President can, for example, by diplomatic moves, create a situation of detente with the Soviet Union and China, in which Congress had no participation. Congress can decline to enact the measures to implement Presidential commitments, but often this is a Hobson's choice—more rhetorical than real.

As we saw in the Vietnam and Korean conflicts, a President can even commit the Nation to a course of action that, step by step, leads to major armed conflict far from our shores. Presidents Eisenhower and Kennedy began our Vietnam involvement by assigning "military advisers" to South Vietnam. They could perhaps justify this as part of their diplomatic function, as part of foreign intelligence gathering, or as an adjunct to military aid and the supply of weapons, authorized by the Congress. But as we have experienced, it is a dangerous process—simple to commence, difficult to limit, and hard to terminate.

7. As Chief Executive, the President is the head of the entire executive establishment of the United States. The departments are created by law of the Congress; the Congress defines their jurisdiction, duty, power, and, within constitutional limits, their procedures; and they must render an accounting to the Congress for their administration. But Congress has no power to remove an executive officer from his position, even by the indirect means of using its appropriation power, except by the process of impeachment under exactly the same constitutional provision and procedure that applies to the President and Vice President.

Accordingly, the ultimate responsibility for decisions by the vast federal bureaucracy—except as to the quasi-judicial agencies—is in the President. His power, however, is limited. He may instruct an executive department how to exercise the powers that Congress has given it, but only within the terms of the congressional legislation. If the head of the department does not like his direction, he may attempt to circumvent it, as officials sometimes do; or he may resign. If he refuses, the President may remove him from office, and appoint more cooperative personnel. The President may not, however, himself take over the function or transfer it to another department, or create an agency or group to perform the function, because Congress has authorized the department, and not the President to do so. In short, the President may direct the agency because of his constitutional power, but he can do so only within the terms prescribed by the Congress. He cannot take over the powers of an agency without congressional authorization. An illustration of violation of this principle is presented by the White House's creation of the so-called Plumbers and the attempt to invest them with authority which, if it existed anywhere, was in the FBI—certainly not in the White House. The President has authority and flexibility within the discretionary appropriation to him, to create a White House staff, but the functions of that staff are limited by the limitations of Presidential authority. They are to aid him in performance of his duties. They cannot be authorized to perform functions which the Congress has vested in an agency or department of the government.

As we consider and evaluate the complexities and problems of the Nation today, it seems beyond dispute that we need, we must have, a strong Presidency. We must have a Presidency that has the power and status to lead the Nation; to speak effectively for us in the complex, difficult and dangerous area of relations with other nations; and effectively to oversee the enormous federal establishment. The President must be equipped with adequate powers to discharge these duties. To the extent that he does not have them by specific constitutional grant or existing legislation, Congress should enact new laws, carefully designed so as to subject the President to appropriate congressional controls. We should neither deny to the President the authority that he needs to do his job, nor should we, by failing to give him that authority, tempt him to exceed his constitutional powers.

But the Presidency must be controlled and restrained. We need restraints upon the President commensurate with the greatness of his powers and the potential of his office for expansion and misuse of these powers. The events of the past few years warn us that we cannot rely merely upon the self-restraint of the man who is President, or upon his sensitivity to the meaning and message of our constitutional system.

The controls that the Founding Fathers adopted are no longer adequate. The balance that the Founding Fathers ingeniously devised no longer exists. It has been destroyed by the complexities of modern life; the vast expansion of governmental function; the decline of Congress due to the growth in the number of its members and, principally, to its failure effectively to reorganize its management and procedures; and the enormous increase in Presidential power and prestige. At the same time, we have permitted the erosion and obsolescence of the checks, the restraints, upon the President in which the drafters of the Constitution placed their ultimate reliance.

The primary check upon the President upon which the Founding Fathers relied was the power of the people to elect and reelect him, if they so decided. They believed that Presidents would seek to conduct themselves so as to win the favor of the people in order to assure reelection. If a President should die, resign or be removed from office prior to expiration of his term, the people's second choice for that great office—the Vice President—would succeed him. But both of these features of our constitutional system have been eroded. A President, in his second term, is no longer influenced by the possibility that he may decide or be called upon to stand for reelection. This change came about in 1951, when, in reaction to FDR's long tenure, we adopted the Twenty-Second Amendment to the Constitution, limiting the President to two terms. To some Presidents, this limitation can be an incitement to extreme action. In his second term, a President is admonished that, by law, this is his last chance to reshape the Nation in his own image. He sees the end of the road, and to a hard-driving man of vast ambition, the prospect of an incomplete mission may not be endurable. He believes that he knows what should be done; and he is immune from the restraining effect of the possibility that the people may disagree and, if he decides again to submit himself to the electorate, that they may repudiate him at the polls. In our history, every President except Franklin D. Roosevelt, has observed the tradition limiting a President to two terms; but until the adoption of the Twenty-Second Amendment, the possibility, however theoretical, of another term has been a seasoning ingredient in Presidential psychology.

The power of the people has also been diminished by changes in the manner of selecting the Vice President. Initially, the Vice President was the candidate for President who received the second-largest number of electoral votes. In 1804, we adopted the Twelfth Amendment which provided that the Vice President would be separately nominated and elected. Inevitably, this led to the present situation in which Vice Presidents are not, in fact, nominated or elected by the voters, but are designated by the Presidential nominees and elected as an appendage to the successful Presidential candidate. The result is that if a President dies, resigns or is removed from office, he is succeeded by a person who, realistically, is not the selection of the people, but the choice—usually for political or ticket-balancing reasons—of his predecessor. In 1967, we compounded this by ratification of the Twenty-Fifth Amendment which includes a provision authorizing the President to fill a vacancy in the office of Vice President, with the concurrence of a simple majority of each House of the Congress.

Both of these Amendments—the Twenty-Second, limiting the President to two terms in office and those provisions of the Twenty-Fifth providing for Presidential designation of a Vice President to fill a vacancy in that office—have merit. But the fact—the important fact—is that both represent a dilution of a fundamental part of the design of our Constitution: The power of the people, by their vote, to choose their President and the restraint which this reference to the people was designed to exercise upon the behavior of their Chief Executive.

The second and ultimate restraint which the Founding Fathers built into the Constitution was a mechanism for removal of a President prior to the expiration of his term. This mechanism was the theoretically formidable weapon of impeachment. The architects of the Constitution provided that the President, Vice President, and any civil officer of the United States could be removed from office upon impeachment by majority vote of the House of Representatives and conviction by two-thirds of the members of the Senate present. Upon conviction, not only is the President removed from office, but he may not thereafter hold any office of honor, trust or profit under the United States; and he is subject to indictment and prosecution for any criminal offenses he may have committed.

Let me make a preliminary point about the impeachment provisions of the Constitution. A President may be impeached and convicted for treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. The phrase "high misdemeanors" is and was understood to be a term of art, deliberately broad and ambiguous in specific application, but clearly embracing serious violations of public trust by officers of the government, including such acts as failure or refusal faithfully to execute the laws or any type of misconduct in office which constitutes an abuse of its authority or prerogatives.

There is simply no acceptable basis to argue that the impeachment provision of the Constitution restricts impeachment to acts in violation of the criminal laws. There is no support for this contention in the history of English impeachments, the understanding of the makers of the Constitution, or in the precedents in our own history.

In the leisurely days of 1787, when the House of Representatives and the Senate were small bodies with little to do, impeachment may have been a practical procedure for removing a President from office. It is now staggering to contemplate the amount of time that a Senate trial of impeachment charges will require; the inevitable fury that it will provoke; and the divisions, diversions, and hostilities that it will engender. Inescapable as an impeachment trial may be in the present situation, its dimensions—the disruption that it has caused and will cause—are disconcerting; and I submit that we must find a better way to supply the ultimate remedy for removing a President from office.

We must find a method that permits us to terminate a President's tenure which is not so easy and facile that he can be deposed because of political disagreement or policy opposition. We must find a way that preserves our system of conflict, tension, advocacy and consensus between the Congress and the President, and does not destroy it by permitting the Congress to terminate a President's tenure because of disagreement with him. The parliamentary system, in my opinion, is not suitable to our temperamental balance. We seek to restore our constitutional balance: The balance that the Founding Fathers created and which has served us so well.

At the same time, we cannot, we should not have as our only choices the alternatives of enduring for four long years a President who has violated his trust and who threatens essential national values, or subjecting the Nation to the protracted, complex and destructive ordeal of impeachment proceedings.

I believe, then, that we are in need of some fundamental changes to restore the balance in our system, to protect our political democracy, and to safeguard our individual rights and liberties.

First: While we have no present option except to proceed with the pending impeachment proceedings, unless the President decides to resign, we should provide an alternative method. Representative Edith Green of Oregon has proposed a joint resolution to amend the Constitution which seems to me to be well-designed for this purpose. It provides that a special election shall be called for President and Vice President if the House and the Senate, by two-thirds vote of each, shall enact a resolution that the President has failed or refused faithfully to execute the laws; or has willfully exceeded his powers; or has caused or willfully permitted the rights of citizens to be trespassed upon. The special election would be federally financed and would be held within 90 days; and the incumbent President and Vice President would be eligible to be candidates.

This plan has the following virtues: It avoids the procedural difficulties of impeachment. Its implications are not as devastating: It does not bar the President from reelection, nor does it necessarily imply the devastating moral judgment which is implicit in impeachment, that is, the disqualification of the President from any future position of public honor or trust. It does not require a trial of the President on charges; but it limits the House and Senate by requiring that they find specific and limited grounds for calling the special election. It makes possible a complete change in executive leadership, rather than merely a shift from the President to the Vice President. And finally, it remits the ultimate judgment as to whether the President is to continue in office to the people—which is where it belongs.

The Green resolution does not eliminate the Founding Fathers' idea of a fixed term for the President to assure his independence of the Congress and to carry out the basic constitutional idea that he would act as a check upon the Congress and would balance congressional power. It retains the American principle of fragmented power—of a government by consensus, conflict, advocacy and tension. It does not adopt the unitary parliamentary system. But it would provide a mechanism which would operate in extreme situations; and more importantly, it would provide a constant restraint upon the President, warning him that extreme misconduct may result in his having to submit to a special election.

Second: I believe that we should reconsider the Twenty-second Amendment. It is a good tradition that Presidents should not serve more than two terms; but it is a dubious constitutional prohibition. It is bad psychology; there is a vast difference between the effect upon an incumbent President of a constitutional prohibition and of a voluntary decision that he will not run again. Presidents are people; essentially, they are just people; and the message of the Twenty-second Amendment, that they face the end of the road, and their last chance to achieve their goals, can be an incitement to the extreme and willful use of power.

Third: We should amend the provisions of the Twenty-fifth Amendment relating to filling a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, and we should redefine the office and functions of the Vice President. The twenty-fifth Amendment provides that when the office of Vice President is vacant because of death or resignation, the President nominates his successor who takes office upon approval by a majority of the House of Representatives and the Senate. If a President dies, resigns or is removed early in his term, this means that a person who has not been elected by the people of the Nation becomes President, and it is possible that he may serve as such for more than three years, without having obtained a mandate from the people. It seems obvious to me that this is inconsistent with our basic, democratic principles; and that if the Vice Presidential office becomes vacant, his successor should be elected in a special election.

Fourth: For somewhat the same reasons, I submit that we should revise the provisions of our Constitution with respect to the Vice President. Vice Presidents are not really chosen by the voters. They are selected by the Presidential candidates; and they are elected merely as an appendage to the people's vote for President.

We should amend the Constitution in recognition of this reality, and provide that a Vice President, succeeding to the office of the President, should hold that office only until a President is selected by the voters in a special election to be held within 90 days. This would also go a long way towards reducing the significance of the present, and I think, unavoidable, inadequacies of the methods of the selection of Vice Presidential candidates—which were dramatized so vividly and sadly in the Eagleton incident at the last Democratic Convention.

I would also change the constitutional provisions concerning the duties of the Vice President. He should not preside at the sessions of the Senate, as the Constitution now provides. He should be an executive official, entirely; and he should be available for such full-time executive responsibilities as the President may delegate to him, including the responsibility of head of a department such as the Department of State. Hopefully, this would permit the President to delegate some of his excessive duties to the Vice President—and it would also make it possible to give the Vice President some useful work to do.

Fifth and finally: It is somewhat unrealistic to expect that Presidents will not invade the province of Congress unless Congress is effectively doing its job. The Congress simply must face up to its responsibilities and must put its house in order. Public confidence in the Congress is at a low ebb—and with some justification. Congress must redefine its mission so as to make it practical and manageable; it must legislate and appropriate in broad terms; it must delegate responsibility for details; it must meticulously require the executive agencies to account for their administration, but it must not intervene in their specific decisions; and it must reorganize its machinery and its procedures so that it can do its job.

A model, in a very difficult area, of constructive congressional action to preserve its authority but at the same time to permit effective government action, is available in the recently enacted War Powers Resolution.

In November 1973, the Congress enacted the "War Powers Resolution," which had been originated by Senator Javits. It enacted this resolution over President Nixon's veto. The operative part of this resolution requires that, in any instance where armed forces are introduced, the President shall report to Congress within forty-eight hours, and that he shall terminate the use of the United States forces in that situation within 60 days unless Congress otherwise provides.

This resolution is strong medicine. It warns the President that prolonged secrecy of military operations, and studied exclusion of the Congress from participation in military decisions, such as we experienced in Laos and Cambodia, are not permissible. At the same time, it recognizes the reality that the Nation may be faced with situations where armed intervention is essential, and that only the President is in a position to act speedily; and it carefully preserves the ultimate control of the Congress.

Another kind of example of the restructuring that is essential is presented in some of the impoundment bills presently under consideration by the Congress. Congress has and must exercise the appropriation power. The President may not refuse to expend appropriated funds, unless Congress has so authorized. But situations arise after Congress has acted, in which changed conditions or circumstances require reconsideration of appropriations. Present statutory provisions to permit the President to act in these circumstances are inadequate. Obviously, the Congress should enact an appropriate measure to achieve this result, for example, by enabling the President to suspend the expenditure of appropriated funds for a limited period during which he will request the Congress to reconsider.

In conclusion, I ask you consider my thesis: The fantastic events that we label Watergate have profoundly shocked us. They would have been shocking if they had involved only the President's political party, or only a committee which he authorized to work for his reelection. The participation of the President's White House staff and close associates made them a calamity. And the possibility of the President's personal involvement made the events deeply traumatic—a national disaster.

But Watergate was more than a series of incredible assaults upon our political process; it was more than a series of patently lawless acts of a base, criminal nature. Watergate was the ugly exorcism of a theory of government which asserts the supremacy of the Presidency over the Congress and the law of the land. It makes little difference whether the theory was the President's or his associates'. It makes little difference whether the theory was conscious or articulated, or whether it is merely the unifying principle from which the various acts emerged.

This is an intolerable theory for a democratic society. Some years ago, Richard Nixon was a leader in combating the alleged subversion of our institutions by those who, he said, advocated a foreign ideology; but foreign ideologies are not the only danger—and not the greatest danger—to our Constitution and our political democracy.

Watergate was the ugly, dreadful face of a theory which embraced the idea of a Presidency overriding congressional laws that conflicted with the President's conclusions as to the national interest; a Presidency inducing or tolerating lawlessness to promote its objectives; a Presidency immune from court processes and congressional inquiry.

We must remember this coupling of Watergate and political theory. We must remember that we can be reasonably confident of avoiding Watergate's criminal assaults upon our basic liberties only if we preserve our political democracy. Freedom is indivisible. If we permit a President to override the political restraints of our Constitution, to overrule the Congress, to ride roughshod over the limits upon his powers to govern which are prescribed by our Constitution, we invite a Presidency which may also ride roughshod over the sanctity of our homes and the privacy of our persons.

By the grace of God and good fortune, we have been saved—this time. If we are to avoid these dangers in the future, we must do more than punish those who participated in the current assaults upon us. We must restore the balance that our Constitution designed; and to do that, we must, I submit, revitalize the machinery of our government.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NATCHER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the resolution (H. Res. 1511) confirming Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States, pursuant to House Resolution 1519, he reported the resolution back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the resolution, House Resolution 1511.

H. Res. 1511

Resolved, That the House of Representatives confirm the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller, of the State of New York, to be Vice President of the United States.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 287, nays 128, answered "present" 1, not voting 18, as follows:

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 13296) to authorize appropriations for the fiscal year 1975 for certain maritime programs of the Department of Commerce, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

AMENDMENT NO. 1

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate adopted an amendment, adding a new section 3 to the House-passed bill, which amended the Shipping Act, 1916 by adding a definition of "citizen of the United States" which would include a State or a political subdivision of a State, thereby making the provisions of the Ship Mortgage Act applicable to State governments as well as to private lenders and mortgagees.

Conference amendment

Although the conferees rejected the Senate amendment, there was no disagreement about the need for the proposal and the Managers on the Part of the House agreed to act expeditiously in the 94th Congress on similar legislation if it should be approved by the Senate.

AMENDMENT NO. 2

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate adopted an amendment, adding a new Section 4 to the House-passed bill, which would create by statute at least one regional office of the Maritime Administration for each of the four major seacoasts of the United States.

Conference agreement

The conferees agreed to the Senate amendment.

The Merchant Marine Act of 1970 (Public Law 91-469) made comprehensive amendments to the Merchant Marine Act, 1936. One such amendment was to make specific reference to the Great Lakes in section 809 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 U.S.C. 1213). This was to give long overdue recognition to the Great Lakes as the fourth major seacoast of the United States. The Maritime Administration of the Department of Commerce implements the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 through its Washington, D.C. office, and a regional office on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific coasts of the United States. The conferees agreed to the Senate amendment as it would provide for a Great Lakes regional office as contemplated by the legislative history of the Merchant Marine Act of 1970. It is anticipated that this office will be established and adequately staffed before the end of the current fiscal year.

AMENDMENT NO. 3

House bill

No comparable provision.

Senate amendment

Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the Senate will offer a motion to recede from its amendment with an amendment changing paragraph (5) of the proposed new subsection (f) to read as follows:

"(5) This subsection shall apply with respect to uncompensated damage to or destruction of any vessel or the gear of such vessel occurring:

"(A) during the period from January 1, 1972, through the date of enactment of this subsection, if an application for a claim for such damage or destruction has been filed with the Federal Government during such period; and

"(B) during the period from the day after the date of enactment of this subsection through March 15, 1976.

Funds authorized under this section shall not be available for compensation under this subsection after March 15, 1976." The managers on the part of the House will move to concur in this amendment.

The Senate adopted an amendment, adding a new section 5 to the House-passed bill, which would establish a special loan program to provide for the payment of compensation to U.S. owners and operators whose vessels or gear are damaged by the actions of foreign vessels on the U.S. Continental Shelf. This amendment would amend section 4 of the Fish and Wildlife Act of 1956 (16 U.S.C. 742c; 70 Stat. 1121) which creates a more general loan program for financing or refinancing the cost of purchasing, constructing, and equipping, maintaining, repairing, or operating commercial fishing vessels or gear.

Conference substitute

The conference substitute is identical to the Senate amendment with two changes. First, the Conferees agreed to incorporate an expiration date of March 15, 1976, on this new program. This will allow the Congress to evaluate the success of this program after a year's experience. Second, the Conferees agreed to restrict the retroactive provision (paragraph 5 of the Senate amendment) to only that damage or destruction for which claims for compensation were filed with the Federal Government between January 1, 1972, and the date this amendment would become law. Those who filed such claims would also file applications for compensation, pursuant to this new program. In addition, the program would be available for compensating damage or destruction to U.S. fishing vessels or gear occurring between the effective date of this new provision and March 15, 1976. Funds authorized under this section would not be available for compensation after March 15, 1976.

December 19, 1974

It is the intent of the Conferees that the "fisheries loan fund" provided for in subsection (c) of section 4 of the Fish and Wildlife Act of 1956 be the source of funds for compensation made pursuant to this amendment. Currently, the fund contains approximately $4,000,000. However, because of past administrative difficulties the Administration has imposed a moratorium on the use of these funds, although these difficulties may soon be resolved. Since the purposes of this amendment do not involve past differences with the general loan program and since it is tied to a compensation program which will keep the fund replenished, this moratorium should not apply to the program created by this amendment. The funds to be used are not expected to exceed $250,000 per year.

Paragraph (2) of the amendment outlines the procedures and states the basic conditions of the loan/compensation program. These procedures begin with an application by an owner or operator claiming to have had his vessel or gear either damaged or destroyed by the actions of a foreign vessel or its crew. After receiving the application, but not more than 30 days after it is filed, the Secretary of Commerce determines whether there is reason to believe that damage or destruction did, in fact, occur as a result of actions by vessels of a foreign nation. To establish a prima facie case, a fisherman should submit the following: (1) a copy of the vessel's log showing the location of the vessel and the location, quantity, and type of gear alleged to be lost, damaged, or destroyed; (2) a statement by an appropriate Government official (e.g., someone from the U.S. Coast Guard) that foreign vessels were known to be in the area at the approximate time the gear was lost, damaged, or destroyed; and (3) an affidavit of the owner or operator of the vessel that, to the best of his knowledge, the damage or destruction of the gear or vessel was not caused by his negligence or intentional acts, natural causes, or other U.S. fishing vessels, and that he was not operating his vessel or employing his gear in violation of any applicable laws or regulations. To knowingly falsify such statements will subject the applicant to the penalties contained in 18 U.S.C. 1001 relating to false statements.

After being satisfied that any owner or operator has a bona fide case according to the above guidelines, the Secretary is to make a non-interest bearing loan to each such owner or operator from the fisheries loan fund. The loan would essentially cover "out-of-pocket" losses of the vessel owner. It would be made in an amount equal to the replacement value of the damaged or destroyed property and the market value of fish proved to be on-board a damaged or destroyed vessel or within lost, damaged or destroyed fishing gear.

The loan is made subject to the following conditions: (1) assignment to the Secretary of Commerce of any right to recover for damages caused by foreign fishing activities; (2) the other requirements of section 4 relating to loans to the extent they are not consistent with the purpose of this amendment; and (3) any other conditions determined by the Secretary to be necessary.

As soon as an application is received, the Secretary must begin a thorough investigation of the incident alleged to have taken place. Although this investigation may be completed before a loan is made (which is unlikely), it must be completed within six months after the loan compensation application is filed. In this time frame, it is believed an adequate investigation can be efficiently completed. If the Secretary finds that the damage or destruction was indeed caused by the actions of foreign vessels, he is required to cancel repayment of the loan made and to seek recovery from the foreign nation involved. If, however, despite the truthful sworn statement of the owner or operator, the Secretary finds that the damage or destruction was caused by natural events (storms, waves, etc.) the non-interest bearing loan is to be converted into one with interest at a rate determined appropriate by the Secretary. In addition, if the owner or operator is at fault because of negligence or intentional actions, the Secretary is to require the immediate repayment of the loan with interest.

Paragraph (4) directs and authorizes the Secretaries of State and Commerce, with the help of the Attorney-General if need be, to seek recovery of damages from the foreign nation whose vessels are found to be at fault.

(4) Paragraph (8) of section 222(a) of such Act is repealed.

(5) Paragraph (9) of section 222(a) of such Act is repealed.

(d) (1) Section 222(a) of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 is amended by inserting after paragraph (11) the following:

The Director is authorized to provide financial and other assistance for programs and activities, including, but not limited to, an energy conservation and education program; winterization of old or substandard dwellings, improved space conditioning, and insulation; emergency loans, grants, and revolving funds to install energy conservation technologies and to deal with increased housing expenses relating to the energy crisis; alternative fuel supplies, special fuel voucher or stamp programs; alternative transportation activities designed to save fuel and assure continued access to training, education, and employment; appropriate outreach efforts; furnishing personnel to act as coordinators, providing legal or technical assistance, or otherwise representing the interests of the poor in efforts relating to the energy crisis; nutrition, health, and other supportive services in emergency cases; and evaluation of programs and activities under this paragraph. The Director after consultation with the Administrator of the Federal Energy Office and appropriate Federal departments and agencies shall establish procedures and take other appropriate action necessary to insure that the effects of the energy crisis on low-income persons, the elderly, and the near poor are taken into account in the formulation and administration of programs relating to the energy crisis.

"(13) A program to be known as 'Summer Youth Recreation' designed to provide recreational opportunities for low-income children during the summer months. Funds made available for this section shall be allocated by the Director, after consultation with the Secretary of Labor, among prime sponsors and other agencies designated under title I of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973 on the basis of (1) the relative number of public assistance recipients in the area served by such prime sponsor or agency, as compared to the Nation; (2) the relative number of unemployed persons in such area as compared with the Nation; and (3) the relative number of related children living with families with incomes below the poverty line in such area, as compared to the Nation. That part of any allotment which the Director determines will not be needed may be reallocated, at such dates during the fiscal year as the Director may fix, to the extent feasible, in proportion to the original allotments. In making allocations under this section, the Director shall insure, to the maximum extent possible, that for the program commencing in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for the program in each succeeding fiscal year no prime sponsor or other designated agency shall receive an amount less than the amount received for such program during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1974, whichever is higher."

(e) (1) Section 225(a) of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 is amended by striking out the third sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The remainder shall be allotted among the States, in accordance with the latest available data, so that equal proportions are distributed on the basis of (1) the relative number of public assistance recipients in each State as compared to all States, (2) the relative number of unemployed persons in each State as compared to all States, and (3) the relative number of related children living with families with incomes below the poverty line in each State as compared to all States. For purposes of this subsection, the Director shall utilize the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the 1970 decennial census. The Director shall insure that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for each succeeding fiscal year, no State shall be allotted for programs under section 221 and section 222(a) an amount which is less than the amount received for use within such State for programs described in such sections during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1974."

needs of the poor within the community, area, or State will not be diminished in order to provide the contributions required under this section. The requirement imposed by the preceding sentence shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary may adopt and promulgate establishing objective criteria for determinations covering situations where a strict application of that requirement would result in unnecessary hardship or otherwise be inconsistent with the purposes sought to be achieved.

"(c) The provisions of section 242 of this Act shall not apply to assistance provided under this section.

"INTERGOVERNMENTAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON COMMUNITY SERVICES"

"Sec. 236. (a) There shall be established within the Office of Economic Opportunity or successor authority an Intergovernmental Advisory Council on Community Services (referred to in this section as the 'Council').

Sec. 6. (a) Section 312(b) (3) of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 is amended by striking out "and training" and inserting in lieu thereof "and developmental programs".

(b) The Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 is further amended by inserting after section 314 thereof the following new section:

"SPECIAL RESPONSIBILITIES"

"Sec. 315. The Director shall be responsible for coordinating programs under this part with other Federal programs designed to assist or serve migrant and seasonal farmworkers, and for reviewing and monitoring such programs."

(c) In providing financial assistance under the provisions of part B of title III of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, the Director shall give special consideration to any public or private nonprofit agency which has previously received financial assistance thereunder for the provision of services for migrant and other seasonally employed farmworkers and their families, taking into account financial assistance provided to any such agency under section 303 of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973.

COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH SERVICES

Sec. 7. Title IV of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE IV—COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH SERVICES"

"COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH SERVICES"

"Sec. 401. (a) The Secretary shall establish within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare a 'Comprehensive Health Services' program which shall include—

"(1) programs to aid in developing and carrying out comprehensive health services projects focused upon the needs of urban and rural areas having high concentrations or proportions of poverty and marked inadequacy of health services for the poor. These projects shall be designed—

"(A) to make possible, with maximum feasible use of existing agencies and resources, the provision of comprehensive health services, such as preventive medical, diagnostic, treatment, rehabilitation, family planning, narcotic addiction and alcoholism prevention and rehabilitation, mental health, dental, and followup services, together with necessary related facilities and services, except in rural areas where the lack of even elemental health services and personnel may require simpler, less comprehensive services to be established first; and

"(B) to assure that these services are made readily accessible to low-income residents of such areas, are furnished in a manner most responsive to their needs and with their participation and wherever possible are combined with, or included within, arrangements for providing employment, education, social, or other assistance needed by the families and individuals served, except that pursuant to such regulations as the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may prescribe, persons provided assistance through programs assisted under this paragraph who are not members of low-income families may be required to make payment, or have payment made in their behalf, in whole or in part for such assistance; and

"(2) programs to provide financial assistance to public or private agencies to projects designed to develop knowledge or enhance skills in the field of health services for the poor. Such projects shall encourage both prospective and practicing health professionals to direct their talents and energies toward providing health services for the poor. Funds for financial assistance under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be allotted according to need, and capacity of applicants to make rapid and effective use of that assistance, and may be used as necessary, to pay the full costs of projects. Before approving any project, the Secretary shall solicit and consider the comments and recommendations of the local medical associations in the area and shall consult with appropriate Federal, State, and local health agencies and take such steps as may be required to assure that the program will be carried on under competent professional supervision and that existing agencies providing related services are furnished all assistance needed to permit them to plan for participation in the program and for the necessary continuation of those related services. In carrying out the provisions of paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Secretary is authorized to provide or arrange for training and study in the field of health services for the poor.

"(c) Pursuant to regulations prescribed by him, the Secretary may arrange for the payment of stipends and allowances (including travel and subsistence expenses) for persons undergoing such training and study and for their dependents.

"(d) The Secretary shall achieve effective coordination of programs and projects authorized under this section with other related activities.

"DRUG REHABILITATION AND ALCOHOLIC COUNSELING AND RECOVERY PROGRAMS"

"Sec. 402. In addition to the authority conferred under section 401 of this title the Secretary is authorized, as part of the Comprehensive Health Services programs, to carry out the following programs:

"(1) An 'Alcoholic Counseling and Recovery' program designed to discover and treat the disease of alcoholism. Such program should be community based, serve the objective of the maintenance of the family structure as well as the recovery of the individual alcoholic, encourage the use of neighborhood facilities and the services of recovered alcoholics as counselors, and emphasize the reentry of the alcoholic into society rather than the institutionalization of the alcoholic.

"(2) A 'Drug Rehabilitation' program designed to discover the causes of drug abuse and addiction, to treat narcotics and drug addiction and the dependence associated with drug abuse, and to rehabilitate the drug abuser and drug addict. Such program should deal with the abuse or addiction resulting from the use of narcotic drugs such as heroin, opium, and cocaine, stimulants such as amphetamines, depressants, marijuana, hallucinogens, and tranquilizers. Such program should be community based, serve the objective of the maintenance of the family structure as well as the recovery of the individual drug abuser or addict, encourage the use of neighborhood facilities and the services of recovered drug abusers and addicts as counselors, and emphasize the reentry of the drug abuser and addict into society rather than his institutionalization. The Director is authorized to undertake special programs aimed at promoting employment opportunities for rehabilitated addicts or addicts enrolled and participating in methadone maintenance treatment or therapeutic programs, and assisting employers in dealing with addiction and drug abuse and dependency problems among formerly hardcore unemployed so that they can be maintained in employment. In undertaking such programs, the Director shall give special priority to veterans and employers of significant numbers of veterans, with priority to those areas within the States having the highest percentages of addicts. The Director is further authorized to establish procedures and policies which will allow clients to complete a full course of rehabilitation even though they become non-low-income by virtue of becoming employed as a part of the rehabilitation process but there shall be no change in income eligibility criteria for initial admission to treatment and rehabilitation programs under this Act."

HEADSTART AND FOLLOW THROUGH

Sec. 8. (a) Title V of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 is amended by striking out the heading thereof and all of such title preceding part B thereof (which is hereby redesignated as part D) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE V—HEADSTART AND FOLLOW THROUGH SHORT TITLE"

"Sec. 501. This title may be cited as the 'Headstart-Follow Through Act' (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Act').

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE"

"Sec. 502. In recognition of the role which Project Headstart has played in the effective delivery of comprehensive health, educational, nutritional, social, and other services to economically disadvantaged children and their families, the Act extends the authority for appropriation of funds for that program.

"POLICY WITH RESPECT TO INDIAN AND MIGRANT CHILDREN"

"Sec. 503. In carrying out the purposes of Part A the Secretary shall continue the administrative arrangement responsible for meeting the needs of migrant and Indian children and shall assure that appropriate funding is provided to meet such needs.

"PART A—HEADSTART PROGRAMS"

"FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR HEADSTART PROGRAMS"

"Sec. 511. The Secretary may upon application by an agency which is eligible for designation as a Headstart agency pursuant to section 514, provide financial assistance to such agency for the planning, conduct, administration, and evaluation of a Headstart program focused primarily upon children from low-income families who have not reached the age of compulsory school attendance which (1) will provide such comprehensive health, nutritional, educational, social, and other services as will aid the children to attain their full potential, and (2) will provide for direct participation of the parents of such children in the development, conduct, and overall program direction at the local level.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS"

"Sec. 512. There are authorized to be appropriated for carrying out the purposes of this part such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1975 through 1977.

"ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS; LIMITATIONS ON ASSISTANCE"

"Sec. 513. (a) Of the sums appropriated pursuant to section 512 for any fiscal year beginning after June 30, 1975, the Secretary shall allot not more than 2 per centum among Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Virgin Islands, according to their respective needs. In addition, the Secretary shall reserve not more than 20 per centum of the sums so appropriated for use in accordance with such criteria and procedures as he may prescribe. The remainder shall be allotted among the States, in accordance with the latest satisfactory available data, so that equal proportions are distributed on the basis of (1) the relative number of public assistance recipients in each State as compared to all States, and (2) the relative number of related children living with families with incomes below the poverty line in each State as compared to all States; but there shall be made available, for use by Headstart programs within each State, no less funds for any fiscal year than were obligated for use by Headstart programs within such State with respect to fiscal year 1975. Allocation of such increases within each State shall, to the extent feasible, be made in such manner as to reflect the proportionate increases in program costs incurred by grantees, in accordance with regulations which the Secretary shall prescribe for this purpose. For the purpose of this subsection, the Secretary shall utilize the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the 1970 decennial census.

"(b) Financial assistance extended under this part for a Headstart program shall not exceed 80 per centum of the approved costs of the assisted program or activities, except that the Secretary may approve assistance in excess of such percentage if he determines, in accordance with regulations establishing objective criteria, that such action is required in furtherance of the purposes of this part. Non-Federal contributions may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to plant, equipment, or services. The Secretary shall not require non-Federal contributions in excess of 20 per centum of the approved costs of programs or activities assisted under this part.

"(c) No program shall be approved for assistance under this part unless the Secretary is satisfied that the services to be provided under such program will be in addition to, and not in substitution for, comparable services previously provided without Federal assistance. The requirement imposed by the preceding sentence shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(d) The Secretary shall establish policies and procedures designed to assure that for fiscal year 1975 not less than 10 per centum of the total number of enrollment opportunities in Headstart programs in the Nation shall be available for handicapped children and that for fiscal year 1976 and thereafter not less than 10 per centum of the total number of enrollment opportunities in Headstart programs in each State shall be available for handicapped children (as defined in paragraph (1) of section 602 of the Education of the Handicapped Act) and that services shall be provided to meet their special needs. The Secretary shall report to the Congress at least annually on the status of handicapped children in Headstart programs, including the number of children being served, their handicapping conditions, and the services being provided such children.

"(e) The Secretary shall adopt appropriate administrative measures to assure that the benefits of this part will be distributed equitably between residents of rural and urban areas.

"DESIGNATION OF HEADSTART AGENCIES"

"Sec. 514. (a) The Secretary is authorized to designate as a Headstart agency any local public or private nonprofit agency which (1) has the power and authority to carry out the purposes of this part and perform the functions set forth in section 515 within a community, and (2) is determined by the Secretary to be capable of planning, conducting, administering, and evaluating, either directly or by other arrangements, a Headstart program.

"(b) For the purposes of this title, a community may be a city, county, multicounty, or multicounty unit within a State, an Indian reservation, or a neighborhood or other area (irrespective of boundaries or political subdivisions) which provides a suitable organization base and possesses the commonality of interest needed to operate a Headstart program.

"(c) In the administration of the provisions of this section, the Secretary shall give priority in the designation of Headstart agencies to any local public or private nonprofit agency which is receiving funds under any Headstart program on the date of the enactment of this Act, except that the Secretary shall, before giving such priority, determine that the agency involved meets program and fiscal requirements established by the Secretary.

"POWERS AND FUNCTIONS OF HEADSTART AGENCIES"

"Sec. 515. (a) In order to be designated as a Headstart agency under this part, an agency must have authority under its charter or applicable law to receive and administer funds under this part, funds and contributions from private or local public sources which may be used in support of a Headstart program, and funds under any Federal or State assistance program pursuant to which a public or private nonprofit agency (as the case may be) organized in accordance with this part, could act as grantee, contractor, or sponsor of projects appropriate for inclusion in a Headstart program. Such an agency must also be empowered to transfer funds so received, and to delegate powers to other agencies, subject to the powers of its governing board and its overall program responsibilities. This power to transfer funds and delegate powers must include the power to make transfers and delegations covering component projects in all cases where this will contribute to efficiency and effectiveness or otherwise further program objectives.

"(b) In order to be so designated, a Headstart agency must also (1) establish effective procedures by which parents and area residents concerned will be enabled to influence the character of programs affecting their interests, (2) provide for their regular participation in the implementation of such programs, and (3) provide technical and other support needed to enable parents and area residents to secure on their own behalf available assistance from public and private sources.

"SUBMISSION OF PLANS TO GOVERNORS"

"Sec. 516. In carrying out the provisions of this part, no contract, agreement, grant, or other assistance shall be made for the purpose of carrying out a Headstart program within a State unless a plan setting forth such proposed contract, agreement, grant, or other assistance has been submitted to the Governor of the State, and such plan has not been disapproved by the Governor within thirty days of such submission, or, if so disapproved, has been reconsidered by the Secretary and found by him to be fully consistent with the provisions and in furtherance of the purposes of this part. Funds to cover the costs of the proposed contract, agreement, grant, or other assistance shall be obligated from the appropriation which is current at the time the plan is submitted to the Governor. This section shall not, however, apply to contracts, agreements, grants, loans, or other assistance to any institution of higher education in existence on the date of enactment of this Act.

"ADMINISTRATIVE REQUIREMENTS AND STANDARDS"

"Sec. 517. (a) Each Headstart agency shall observe standards of organization, management, and administration which will assure, so far as reasonably possible, that all program activities are conducted in a manner consistent with the purposes of this part and the objective of providing assistance effectively, efficiently, and free of any taint of partisan political bias or personal or family favoritism. Each such agency shall establish or adopt rules to carry out this section, which shall include rules to assure full staff accountability in matters governed by law, regulations, or agency policy. Each agency shall also provide for reasonable public access to information, including but not limited to public hearings at the request of appropriate community groups and reasonable public access to books and records of the agency or other agencies engaged in program activities or operations involving the use of authority or funds for which it is responsible. Each such agency shall adopt for itself and other agencies using funds or exercising authority for which it is responsible, rules designed to establish specific standards governing salaries, salary increases, travel and per diem allowances, and other employee benefits; to assure that only persons capable of discharging their duties with competence and integrity are employed and that employees are promoted or advanced under impartial procedures calculated to improve agency performance and effectiveness; to guard against personal or financial conflicts of interest; and to define employee duties in an appropriate manner which will in any case preclude employees from participating, in connection with the performance of their duties, in any form of picketing, protest, or other direct action which is in violation of law.

"(b) No financial assistance shall be extended under the Act in any case in which the Secretary determines that the costs of developing and administering a program assisted under the Act exceed 15 per centum of the total costs, including non-Federal contributions to such costs, of such program. The Secretary shall establish by regulation, criteria for determining (1) the costs of developing and administering such program and (2) the total costs of such program. In any case in which the Secretary determines that the cost of administering such program does not exceed 15 per centum and such total costs but is, in his judgment, excessive, he shall forthwith require the recipient of such financial assistance to take such steps prescribed by him as will eliminate such excessive administrative cost, including the sharing by one or more Headstart agencies of a common director and other administrative personnel. The Secretary may waive the limitation prescribed by this paragraph for specific periods of time not to exceed six months whenever he determines that such a waiver is necessary in order to carry out the purposes of the Act.

"(c) The Secretary shall prescribe rules or regulations to supplement subsection (a) of this section, which shall be binding on all agencies carrying on Headstart program activities with financial assistance under this part. He may, where appropriate, establish, special or simplified requirements for smaller agencies or agencies operating in rural areas. Policies and procedures shall be established to insure that indirect costs attributable to the common or joint use of facilities and services by programs assisted under this part and other programs shall be fairly allocated among the various programs which utilize such facilities and services.

"(d) At least thirty days prior to their effective date, all rules, regulations, guidelines, instructions and application forms shall be published in the Federal Register and shall be sent to each grantee with the notification that each such grantee has the right to submit comments pertaining thereto to the Secretary prior to the final adoption thereof.

"PARTICIPATION IN HEADSTART PROGRAMS

"Sec. 518. (a) The Secretary shall by regulation prescribe eligibility for the participation of persons in Headstart programs assisted under this part. Such criteria may provide (1) that children from low-income families shall be eligible for participation in programs assisted under this part if their families are below the poverty line, or if their families are eligible or in the absence of child care would potentially be eligible for public assistance; and (2) pursuant to such regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe that programs assisted under this part may include, to a reasonable extent, participation of children in the area served who would benefit from such programs but whose families do not meet the low-income criteria prescribed pursuant to clause (1).

"(b) The Secretary shall not prescribe any fee schedule or otherwise provide for the charging of any fees for participation in Headstart programs, unless such fees are authorized by legislation hereafter enacted. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the families of children who participate in Headstart programs and who are willing and able to pay the full cost of such participation from doing so.

"APPEALS, NOTICE, AND HEARING

"Sec. 519. The Secretary shall prescribe procedures to assure that—

"(1) special notice of and an opportunity for a timely and expeditious appeal to the Secretary will be provided for an agency or organization which desires to serve as a delegate agency under this part and whose application to the Headstart agency has been wholly or substantially rejected or has not been acted upon within a period of time deemed reasonable by the Secretary, in accordance with regulations which he shall prescribe;

"(2) financial assistance under this part shall not be suspended, except in emergency situations, unless the recipient agency has been given reasonable notice and opportunity to show cause why such action should not be taken; and

"(3) financial assistance under this part shall not be terminated, an application for refunding shall not be denied, and a suspension of financial assistance shall not be continued for longer than thirty days, unless the recipient has been afforded reasonable notice and opportunity for a full and fair hearing.

"RECORDS AND AUDITS

"Sec. 520. (a) Each recipient of financial assistance under this part shall keep such records as the Secretary shall prescribe, including records which fully disclose the amount and disposition by such recipient of the proceeds of such financial assistance, the total cost of the project or undertaking in connection with which such financial assistance is given or used, the amount of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking supplied by other sources, and such other records as will facilitate an effective audit.

"(b) The Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of the recipients that are pertinent to the financial assistance received under this part.

"TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND TRAINING

"Sec. 521. The Secretary may provide, directly or through grants or other arrangements, (1) technical assistance to communities in developing, conducting, and administering programs under this part, and (2) training for specialized or other personnel needed in connection with Headstart programs.

"RESEARCH, DEMONSTRATION, AND PILOT PROJECTS

"Sec. 522. (a) The Secretary may provide financial assistance through grants or contracts for research, demonstration, or pilot projects conducted by public or private agencies which are designed to test or assist in the development of new approaches or methods that will aid in overcoming special problems or otherwise in furthering the purposes of this part.

"(b) The Secretary shall establish an overall plan to govern the approval of research, demonstration, or pilot projects and the use of all research authority under this part. Such plan shall set forth specific objectives to be achieved and priorities among such objectives.

"ANNOUNCEMENT OF RESEARCH, DEMONSTRATION, AND PILOT PROJECTS CONTRACTS

"Sec. 523. (a) The Secretary shall make a public announcement concerning—

"(1) the title, purpose, intended completion date, identity of the grantee or contractor, and proposed cost of any grant or contract with a private or non-Federal public agency or organization for any research, demonstration, or pilot project under this title; and

"(2) the results, findings, data, or recommendations made or reported as a result of such activities.

"(b) The public announcements required by subsection (a) of this section shall be made within thirty days of making such grants or contracts, and the public announcements required by subsection (b) of this section shall be made within thirty days of the receipt of such results.

"(c) The Director shall take necessary action to assure that all studies, proposals, and data produced or developed with Federal funds employed under this title shall become the property of the United States.

"(d) The Director shall publish studies of the results of activities carried out pursuant to this title not later than ninety days after the completion thereof. The Director shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress copies of all such studies.

"EVALUATION

"Sec. 524. (a) The Secretary shall provide, directly or through grants or contracts, for the continuing evaluation of programs under this part, including evaluations that measure and evaluate the impact of programs authorized by this part, in order to determine their effectiveness in achieving stated goals, their impact on related programs, and their structure and mechanisms for delivery of services, including, where appropriate, comparisons with appropriate control groups composed of persons who have not participated in such programs. Evaluations shall be conducted by persons not directly involved in the administration of the program or project evaluation.

"(b) Prior to obligating funds for the programs and projects covered by this part with respect to fiscal year 1976, the Secretary shall develop and publish general standards for evaluation of program and project effectiveness in achieving the objectives of this part. The extent to which such standards have been met shall be considered in deciding whether to renew or supplement financial assistance authorized under this part.

"(c) In carrying out evaluations under this part, the Secretary may require Headstart agencies to provide for independent evaluations.

December 19, 1974

"(d) In carrying out evaluations under this part, the Secretary shall, whenever feasible, arrange to obtain the specific views of persons participating in and served by programs and projects assisted under this part about such programs and projects.

"(e) The Secretary shall publish the results of evaluative research and summaries of evaluations of program and project impact and effectiveness not later than ninety days after the completion thereof. The Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress copies of all such research studies and evaluation summaries.

"(f) The Secretary shall take the necessary action to assure that all studies, evaluations, proposals, and data produced or developed with assistance under this part shall become the property of the United States.

"POVERTY LINE

"Sec. 525. (a) The Secretary shall revise annually (or at any shorter interval he deems feasible and desirable) a poverty line which, except as provided in section 711, shall be used as a criterion of eligibility for participation in Headstart programs.

"(b) The revision required by subsection (a) of this section shall be accomplished by multiplying the official poverty line (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget) by the percentage change in the Consumer Price Index during the annual or other interval immediately preceding the time at which the revision is made.

"(c) Revisions required by subsection (a) of this section shall be made and issued not more than thirty days after the date on which the necessary Consumer Price Index data becomes available.

"PART B—FOLLOW THROUGH PROGRAMS

"FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR FOLLOW THROUGH PROGRAMS

"Sec. 551. (a) (1) The Secretary is authorized to provide financial assistance in the form of grants to local educational agencies, combinations of such agencies, and, as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, any other public or appropriate nonprofit private agencies, organizations, and institutions for the purpose of carrying out Follow Through programs focused primarily on children from low-income families in kindergarten and primary grades, including such children enrolled in private nonprofit elementary schools, who were previously enrolled in Headstart or similar programs.

"(2) Whenever the Secretary determines (A) that a local educational agency receiving assistance under paragraph (1) is unable or unwilling to include in a Follow Through program children enrolled in nonprofit private schools who would otherwise be eligible to participate therein, or (B) that it is otherwise necessary in order to accomplish the purposes of this section, he may provide financial assistance for the purpose of carrying out a Follow Through program to any other public or appropriate nonprofit private agency, organization, or institution.

"(3) Programs to be assisted under this section shall provide such comprehensive services as the Secretary determines will aid in the continued development of children described in paragraph (1) to their full potential. Such projects shall provide for the direct participation of the parents of such children in the development, conduct, and overall direction of the program at the local level. If the Secretary determines that participation in the project of children who are not from low-income families will serve to carry out the purposes of this section, he may provide for the inclusion of such children from non-low-income families, but only to the extent that their participation will not dilute the effectiveness of the services designed for children described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"Sec. 552. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated for carrying out the purposes of this part $60,000,000 for the fiscal year 1975, and for each of the two succeeding fiscal years. Funds so appropriated shall remain available for obligation and expenditure during the fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year for which they are appropriated.

"(b) Financial assistance extended under this part for a Follow Through program shall not exceed 80 per centum of the approved costs of the assisted program or activities, except that the Secretary may approve assistance in excess of such percentage if he determines, in accordance with regulations establishing objective criteria, that such action is required in furtherance of the purposes of this part. Non-Federal contributions may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to plant, equipment, or services. The Secretary shall not require non-Federal contributions in excess of 20 per centum of the approved costs of programs or activities assisted under this part.

"(c) No project shall be approved for assistance under this part unless the Secretary is satisfied that the services to be provided under such project will be in addition to, and not in substitution for, services previously provided without Federal assistance. The requirement imposed by the preceding sentence shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary may adopt.

"RESEARCH, DEMONSTRATION, AND PILOT PROJECTS; EVALUATION; AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ACTIVITIES

"Sec. 553. (a) In conjunction with other activities authorized by this part, the Secretary may—

"(2) provide, directly or through grants or contracts, for the continuing evaluation of projects assisted under this part, including evaluations that describe and measure the impact of such projects, their effectiveness in achieving stated goals, their impact on related programs, and their structure and mechanisms for delivery of services, including, where appropriate, comparisons with appropriate control groups composed of persons who have not participated in such projects, which evaluations shall be conducted by persons not directly involved in the administration of the project evaluated; and

"(3) provide, directly or through grants or other appropriate arrangements, (A) technical assistance to Follow Through programs in developing, conducting, and administering programs under this part, and (B) training for specialized or other personnel which is needed in connection with Follow Through programs.

"SPECIAL CONDITIONS

"Sec. 554. (a) Recipients of financial assistance under this part shall provide maximum employment opportunities for residents of the area to be served, and to parents of children who are participating in projects assisted under this part.

"(b) Financial assistance under this part shall not be suspended for failure to comply with applicable terms and conditions, except in emergency situations, nor shall an application for refunding be denied, unless the recipient agency has been given reasonable notice and opportunity to show cause why such action should not be taken.

"(c) Financial assistance under this part shall not be terminated for failure to comply with applicable terms and conditions unless the recipient has been afforded reasonable notice and opportunity for a full and fair hearing.

"(7) projects will, where feasible, promote the development of entrepreneurial and management skills and the ownership or participation in ownership of assisted businesses and housing, cooperatively or otherwise, by residents of the area served;

"(8) projects will be planned and carried out with the fullest possible participation of resident or local businessmen and representatives of financial institutions, including participation through contract, joint venture, partnership, stock ownership or membership on the governing boards or advisory councils of such projects consistent with the self-help purposes of this title;

"(10) the program will not result in the displacement of employed workers or impair existing contracts for services, or result in the substitution of Federal or other funds in connection with work that would otherwise be performed;

"(11) the rates of pay for time spent in work-training and education, and other conditions of employment, will be appropriate and reasonable in the light of such factors as the type of work, geographical region, and proficiency of the participant;

It is the purpose of this part to meet the special economic needs of rural communities or areas with concentrations or substantial numbers of low-income persons by providing support to self-help programs which promote economic development and independence, as a supplement to existing similar programs conducted by other departments and agencies of the Federal Government. (a) The Director is authorized to provide financial assistance, including loans having a maximum maturity of 15 years and in amounts not resulting in an aggregate principal indebtedness of more than $3,500 at any one time, to any low-income rural family where, in the judgment of the Director, such financial assistance has a reasonable possibility of effecting a permanent increase in the income of such families, or will contribute to the improvement of their living or housing conditions, by assisting or permitting them to—

All such loans shall be repayable within a period of not more than thirty years.

"(b) The Director is authorized to adjust interest rates, grant moratoriums on repayment of principal and interest, collect or compromise any obligations held by him, and to take such other actions in respect to

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R.

14440) to provide for the mobilization of community development and assistance services and to establish a Community Action Administration in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to administer such programs, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill provided new statutory authority for programs formerly under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 entitled the "Community Services Act of 1974". The Senate amendment extended the Economic Opportunity Act through the "Headstart, Economic Opportunity and Community Partnership Act of 1974".

The conference agreement amends the Economic Opportunity Act by citing the first nine Titles of the Act as the "Community Services Act of 1974". The conference agreement contains a substantial number of technical and conforming amendments to reflect this decision on the part of the conferees.

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

Sec. 2. (a) The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The achievement of equal access to quality health care at a reasonable cost is a priority of the Federal Government.

(2) The massive infusion of Federal funds into the existing health care system has contributed to inflationary increases in the cost of health care and failed to produce an adequate supply or distribution of health resources, and consequently has not made possible equal access for everyone to such resources.

(3) The many and increasing responses to these problems by the public sector (Federal, State, and local) and the private sector have not resulted in a comprehensive, rational approach to the present—

(A) lack of uniformly effective methods of delivering health care;

(B) maldistribution of health care facilities and manpower; and

(C) increasing cost of health care.

(4) Increases in the cost of health care, particularly of hospital stays, have been uncontrollable and inflationary, and there are presently inadequate incentives for the use of appropriate alternative levels of health care, and for the substitution of ambulatory and intermediate care for inpatient hospital care.

(5) Since the health care provider is one of the most important participants in any health care delivery system, health policy must address the legitimate needs and concerns of the provider if it is to achieve meaningful results; and, thus, it is imperative that the provider be encouraged to play an active role in developing health policy at all levels.

(6) Large segments of the public are lacking in basic knowledge regarding proper personal health care and methods for effective use of available health services.

(b) In recognition of the magnitude of the problems described in subsection (a) and the urgency placed on their solution, it is the purpose of this Act to facilitate the development of recommendations for a national health planning policy, to augment areawide and State planning for health services, manpower, and facilities, and to authorize financial assistance for the development of resources to further that policy.

REVISION OF HEALTH PLANNING PROGRAMS UNDER THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT

Sec. 3. The Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE XV—NATIONAL HEALTH PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

"PART A—NATIONAL GUIDELINES FOR HEALTH PLANNING

"NATIONAL GUIDELINES FOR HEALTH PLANNING

"Sec. 1501. (a) The Secretary shall, within eighteen months after the date of the enactment of this title, by regulation issue guidelines concerning national health planning policy and shall, as he deems appropriate, by regulation revise such guidelines. Regulations under this subsection shall be promulgated in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) The Secretary shall include in the guidelines issued under subsection (a) the following:

(1) Standards respecting the appropriate supply, distribution, and organization of health resources.

(2) A statement of national health planning goals developed after consideration of the priorities, set forth in section 1502, which goals, to the maximum extent practicable, shall be expressed in quantitative terms.

(c) In issuing guidelines under subsection (a) the Secretary shall consult with and solicit recommendations and comments from the health systems agencies designated under part B, the State health planning and development agencies designated under part C, the Statewide Health Coordinating Councils established under part C, associations and specialty societies representing medical and other health care providers, and the National Council on Health Planning and Development established by section 1503.

"NATIONAL HEALTH PRIORITIES

"Sec. 1502. The Congress finds that the following deserve priority consideration in the formulation of national health planning goals and in the development and operation of Federal, State, and area health planning and resources development programs:

(1) The provision of primary care services for medically underserved populations, especially those which are located in rural or economically depressed areas.

(2) The development of multi-institutional systems for coordination or consolidation of institutional health services (including obstetric, pediatric, emergency medical, intensive and coronary care, and radiation therapy services).

(3) The development of medical group practices (especially those whose services are appropriately coordinated or integrated with institutional health services), health maintenance organizations, and other organized systems for the provision of health care.

(4) The training and increased utilization of physician assistants, especially nurse clinicians.

(5) The development of multi-institutional arrangements for the sharing of support services necessary to all health service institutions.

(6) The promotion of activities to achieve needed improvements in the quality of health services, including needs identified by the review activities of Professional Standards Review Organizations under part B of title XI of the Social Security Act.

(7) The development by health service institutions of the capacity to provide various levels of care (including intensive care, acute general care, and extended care) on a geographically integrated basis.

(8) The promotion of activities for the prevention of disease, including studies of nutritional and environmental factors affecting health and the provision of preventive health care services.

(9) The adoption of uniform cost accounting, simplified reimbursement, and utilization reporting systems and improved management procedures for health service institutions.

(10) The development of effective methods of educating the general public concerning proper personal (including preventive health care and methods for effective use of available health services).

"NATIONAL COUNCIL ON HEALTH PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

"Sec. 1503. (a) There is established in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare an advisory council to be known as the National Council on Health Planning and Development (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Council"). The Council shall advise, consult with, and make recommendations to, the Secretary with respect to (1) the development of national guidelines under section 1501, (2) the implementation and administration of this title and title XVI, and (3) an evaluation of the implications of new medical technology for the organization, delivery, and equitable distribution of health care services.

(b) (1) The Council shall be composed of fifteen members. The Chief Medical Director of the Veterans' Administration, the Assistant Secretary for Health and Environment of the Department of Defense, and the Assistant Secretary for Health of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare shall be nonvoting ex officio members of the Council. The remaining members shall be appointed by the Secretary and shall be persons who, as a result of their training, experience, or attainments, are exceptionally well qualified to assist in carrying out the functions of the Council. Of the voting members, not less than five shall be persons who are not providers of health services, not more than three shall be officers or employees of the Federal Government, not less than three shall be members of governing bodies of health systems agencies designated under part B, and not less than three shall be members of Statewide Health Coordinating Councils under section 1524. The two major political parties shall have equal representation among the voting members on the Council.

(2) The term of office of voting members of the Council shall be six years, except that—

(A) of the members first appointed to the Council four shall be appointed for terms of two years and four shall be appointed for terms of four years, as designated by the Secretary at the time of appointment; and

(B) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term.

A member may serve after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office.

(3) The chairman of the Council shall be selected by the voting members from among their number. The term of office of the chairman of the Council shall be the lesser of three years or the period remaining in his term of office as a member of the Council.

(c) (1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the members of the Council shall each be entitled to receive the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day (including traveltime) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Council.

(2) Members of the Council who are full-time officers or employees of the United States shall receive no additional pay on account of their service on the Council.

(3) While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Council, members of the Council shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code.

(d) The Council may appoint, fix the pay of, and prescribe the functions of such personnel as are necessary to carry out its functions. In addition, the Council may procure the services of experts and consultants as authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but without regard to the last sentence of such section.

(e) The provisions of section 14(a) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply with respect to the Council.

"PART B—HEALTH SYSTEMS AGENCIES

"HEALTH SERVICE AREAS

"Sec. 1511. (a) There shall be established, in accordance with this section, health service areas throughout the United States with respect to which health systems agencies shall be designated under section 1515. Each health service area shall meet the following requirements:

(1) The area shall be a geographic region appropriate for the effective planning and development of health services, determined on the basis of factors including population and the availability of resources to provide all necessary health services for residents of the area.

(2) To the extent practicable, the area shall include at least one center for the provision of highly specialized health services.

(3) The area, upon its establishment, shall have a population of not less than five hundred thousand or more than three million; except that—

(A) the population of an area may be more than three million if the area includes a standard metropolitan statistical area (as determined by the Office of Management and Budget) with a population of more than three million; and

(B) the population of an area may—

December 19, 1974

"(1) be less than five hundred thousand if the area comprises an entire State which has a population of less than five hundred thousand, or

"(2) be less than—

"(I) five hundred thousand (but not less than two hundred thousand) in unusual circumstances (as determined by the Secretary) or

"(II) two hundred thousand in highly unusual circumstances (as determined by the Secretary).

If the Governor of each State in which the area is located determines, with the approval of the Secretary, that the area meets the other requirements of this subsection.

"(4) To the maximum extent feasible, the boundaries of the area shall be appropriately coordinated with the boundaries of areas designated under section 1152 of the Social Security Act for Professional Standards Review Organizations, existing regional planning areas, and State planning and administrative areas.

The boundaries of a health service area shall be established so that, in the planning and development of health services to be offered within the health service area, any economic or geographic barrier to the receipt of such services in nonmetropolitan areas is taken into account. The boundaries of health service areas shall be established so as to recognize the differences in health planning and health services development needs between nonmetropolitan and metropolitan areas. Each standard metropolitan statistical area shall be entirely within the boundaries of one health service area, except that if the Governor of each State in which a standard metropolitan statistical area is located determines, with the approval of the Secretary, that in order to meet the other requirements of this subsection a health service area should contain only part of the standard metropolitan statistical area, then such statistical area shall not be required to be entirely within the boundaries of such health service area.

"(b) (1) Within thirty days following the date of the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall simultaneously give the Governor of each State written notice of the initiation of proceedings to establish health service areas throughout the United States. Each notice shall contain the following:

"(A) A statement of the requirement (in subsection (a)) of the establishment of health service areas throughout the United States.

"(B) A statement of the criteria prescribed by subsection (a) for health service areas and the procedures prescribed by this subsection for the designation of health service area boundaries.

"(C) A request that the Governor receiving the notice (1) designate the boundaries of health service areas within his State, and, where appropriate and in cooperation with the Governors of adjoining States, designate the boundaries within his State of health service areas located both in his State and in adjoining States, and (2) submit (in such form and manner as the Secretary shall specify) to the Secretary within one hundred and twenty days of the date of enactment of this title, such boundary designations together with comments, submitted by the entities referred to in paragraph (2), with respect to such designations.

At the time such notice is given under this paragraph to each Governor, the Secretary shall publish as a notice in the Federal Register a statement of the giving of his notice to the Governor, and the criteria and procedures contained in such notice.

"(2) Each State's Governor shall in the development of boundaries for health service areas consult with and solicit the views of the chief executive officer or agency of the political subdivisions within the State, the State agency which administers or supervises the administration of the State's health planning functions under a State plan approved under section 314(a), each entity within the State which has developed a comprehensive regional, metropolitan, or other local area plan or plans referred to in section 314(b), and each regional medical program established in the State under title IX.

"(3) (A) Within two hundred and ten days after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary shall publish as a notice in the Federal Register the health service area boundary designations. The boundaries for health service areas submitted by the Governors shall, except as otherwise provided in subparagraph (B), constitute upon their publication in the Federal Register the boundaries for such health service areas.

"(B) (1) If the Secretary determines that a boundary submitted to him for a health service area does not meet the requirements of subsection (a), he shall, after consultation with the Governor who submitted such boundary, make such revision in the boundary for such area (and as necessary, in the boundaries for adjoining health service areas) as may be necessary to meet such requirements and publish such revised boundary (or boundaries); and the revised boundary (or boundaries) shall upon publication in the Federal Register constitute the boundary (or boundaries) for such health service area (or areas). The Secretary shall notify the Governor of each State in which is located a health service area whose boundary is revised under this clause of the boundary revision and the reasons for such revision.

"(2) In the case of areas of the United States not included within the boundaries for health service areas submitted to the Secretary as requested under the notice under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall establish and publish in the Federal Register health service area boundaries which include such areas. The Secretary shall notify the Governor of each State in which is located a health service area the boundary for which is established under this clause of the boundaries established. In carrying out the requirement of this clause, the Secretary may make such revisions in boundaries submitted under subparagraph (A) as he determines are necessary to meet the requirement of subsection (a) for the establishment of health service areas throughout the United States.

"(4) The Secretary shall review on a continuing basis and at the request of any Governor or designated health systems agency the appropriateness of the boundaries of the health service areas established under paragraph (3) and, if he determines that a boundary for a health service area no longer meets the requirements of subsection (a), he may revise the boundaries in accordance with the procedures prescribed by paragraph (3). (B) (i) for the establishment of boundaries of health service areas which include areas not included in boundaries submitted by the Governors. If the Secretary acts on his own initiative to revise the boundaries of any health service area, he shall consult with the Governor of the appropriate State or States, the entities referred to in paragraph (2), the appropriate health systems agency or agencies designated under part B and the appropriate Statewide Health Coordinating Council established under part C. A request for boundary revision shall be made only after consultation with the Governor of the appropriate State or States, the entities referred to in paragraph (2), the appropriate designated health systems agencies, and the appropriate established Statewide Health Coordinating Council and shall include the comments concerning the revision made by the entities consulted in requesting the revision.

"(5) Within one year after the date of the enactment of this title the Secretary shall complete the procedures for the initial establishment of the boundaries of health service areas which (except as provided in section 1535) include the geographic area of all the States.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other requirement of this section, an area—

"(1) for which has been developed a comprehensive regional, metropolitan area, or other local area plan referred to in section 314(b), and

"(2) which otherwise meets the requirements of subsection (a), shall be designated by the Secretary as a health service area unless the Governor of any State in which such area is located, upon a finding that another area is a more appropriate region for the effective planning and development of health resources, waives such requirement.

"HEALTH SYSTEMS AGENCIES"

"SEC. 1512. (a) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this title, the term 'health systems agency' means an entity which is organized and operated in the manner described in subsection (b) and which is capable, as determined by the Secretary, of performing each of the functions described in section 1513. The Secretary shall by regulation establish standards and criteria for the requirements of subsection (b) and section 1513.

"(b) (1) Legal Structure.—A health systems agency for a health service area shall be—

"(A) a nonprofit private corporation (or similar legal mechanism such as a public benefit corporation) which is incorporated in the State in which the largest part of the population of the health service area resides, which is not a subsidiary of, or otherwise controlled by, any other private or public corporation or other legal entity, and which only engages in health planning and development functions;

"(B) a public regional planning body if (1) it has a governing board composed of a majority of elected officials of units of general local government or it is authorized by State law (in effect before the date of enactment of this subsection) to carry out health planning and review functions such as those described in section 1513, and (2) its planning area is identical to the health service area; or

"(C) a single unit of general local government if the area of the jurisdiction of that unit is identical to the health service area.

A health systems agency may not be an educational institution or operate such an institution.

"(2) STAFF.—"

"(A) EXPERTISE.—A health systems agency shall have a staff which provides the agency with expertise in at least the following: (i) Administration, (ii) the gathering and analysis of data, (iii) health planning, and (iv) development and use of health resources. The functions of planning and development of health resources shall be conducted by staffs with skills appropriate to each function.

"(B) SIZE AND EMPLOYMENT.—The size of the professional staff of any health systems agency shall be not less than five, except that if the quotient of the population (rounded to the next highest one hundred thousand) of the health service area which the agency serves divided by one hundred thousand is greater than five, the minimum size of the professional staff shall be the lesser of (1) such quotient, or (2) twenty-five. The members of the staff shall be selected, paid, promoted, and discharged in accordance with such system as the agency may establish, except that the rate of pay for any position shall not be less than the rate of pay prevailing in the health service area for similar positions in other public or private health service entities.

If necessary for the performance of its functions, a health systems agency may employ consultants and may contract with individuals and entities for the provision of services. Compensation for consultants and for contracted services shall be established in accordance with standards established by regulation by the Secretary.

"(3) GOVERNING BODY.—"

"(A) In general.—A health systems agency which is a public regional planning body or unit of general local government shall, in addition to any other governing body, have a governing body for health planning, which is established in accordance with subparagraph (C), which shall have the responsibilities prescribed by subparagraph (B), and which has exclusive authority to perform for the agency the functions described in section 1513. Any other health systems agency shall have a governing body composed, in accordance with subparagraph (C), of not less than ten members and of not more than thirty members, except that the number of members may exceed thirty if the governing body has established another unit (referred to in this paragraph as an 'executive committee') composed, in accordance with subparagraph (C), of not more than twenty-five members of the governing body and has delegated to that unit the authority to take such action (other than the establishment and revision of the plans referred to in subparagraph (B) (1)) as the governing body is authorized to take.

"(B) RESPONSIBILITIES.—The governing body—

"(i) shall be responsible for the internal affairs of the health systems agency, including matters relating to the staff of the agency, the agency's budget, and procedures and criteria (developed and published pursuant to section 1532) applicable to its functions under subsections (e), (f), and (g) of section 1513;

"(ii) shall be responsible for the establishment of the health systems plan and annual implementation plan required by section 1513(b);

"(iii) shall be responsible for the approval of grants and contracts made and entered into under section 1513(c) (3);

"(iv) shall be responsible for the approval of all actions taken pursuant to subsections (e), (f), (g), and (h), of section 1513;

"(v) shall (I) issue an annual report concerning the activities of the agency, (II) include in that report the health systems plan and annual implementation plan developed by the agency, and a listing of the agency's income, expenditures, assets, and liabilities, and (III) make the report readily available to the residents of the health service area and the various communications media serving such area;

"(vi) shall reimburse its members for their reasonable costs incurred in attending meetings of the governing body;

"(vii) shall meet at least once in each calendar quarter of a year and shall meet at least two additional times in a year unless its executive committee meets at least twice in that year; and

"(viii) shall (I) conduct its business meetings in public, (II) give adequate notice to the public of such meetings, and (III) make its records and data available, upon request, to the public.

The governing body (and executive committee (if any)) of a health systems agency shall act only by vote of a majority of its members present and voting at a meeting called upon adequate notice to all of its members and at which a quorum is in attendance. A quorum for a governing body and executive committee shall be not less than one-half of its members.

"(C) COMPOSITION.—The membership of the governing body and the executive committee (if any) of an agency shall meet the following requirements:

"(i) A majority (but not more than 60 per centum of the members) shall be residents of the health service area served by the entity who are consumers of health care and who are not (nor within the twelve months preceding appointment been) providers of health care and who are broadly representative of the social, economic, linguistic and racial populations, geographic areas of the health service area, and major purchasers of health care.

"(ii) The remainder of the members shall be residents of the health service area served by the agency who are providers of health care and who represent (I) physicians (particularly practicing physicians), dentists, nurses, and other health professionals, (II) health care institutions (particularly hospitals, long-term care facilities, and health maintenance organizations), (III) health care insurers, (IV) health professional schools, and (V) the allied health professions. Not less than one-third of the providers of health care who are members of the governing body or executive committee of a health systems agency shall be direct providers of health care (as described in section 1531(3)).

"(iii) The membership shall—"

"(I) include (either through consumer or provider members) public elected officials and other representatives of governmental authorities in the agency's health service area and representatives of public and private agencies in the area concerned with health.

"(II) include a percentage of individuals who reside in nonmetropolitan areas within the health service area which percentage is equal to the percentage of residents of the area who reside in nonmetropolitan areas, and

"(III) if the health systems agency serves an area in which there is located one or more hospitals or other health care facilities of the Veterans' Administration, include, as an ex officio member, an individual whom the Chief Medical Director of the Veterans' Administration shall have designated for such purpose, and if the agency serves an area in which there is located one or more qualified health maintenance organizations (within the meaning of section 1310), include at least one member who is representative of such organizations.

"(iv) If, in the exercise of its functions, a governing body or executive committee appoints a subcommittee of its members or an advisory group, it shall, to the extent practicable, make its appointments to any such subcommittee or group in such a manner as to provide the representation on such subcommittee or group described in this subparagraph.

"(4) INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.—No individual who, as a member or employee of a health systems agency, shall, by reason of his performance of any duty, function, or activity required of, or authorized to be undertaken by, the agency under this title, be liable for the payment of damages under any law of the United States or any State (or political subdivision thereof) if he has acted within the scope of such duty, function, or activity, has exercised due care, and has acted, with respect to that performance, without malice toward any person affected by it.

"(5) Private Contributions.—No health systems agency may accept any funds or contributions of services or facilities from any individual or private entity which has a financial fiduciary, or other direct interest in the development, expansion, or support of health resources unless, in the case of an entity, it is an organization described in section 509(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and is not directly engaged in the provision of health care in the health service area of the agency. For purposes of this paragraph, an entity shall not be considered to have such an interest solely on the basis of its providing (directly or indirectly) health care for its employees.

"(6) OTHER REQUIREMENTS.—Each health system agency shall—

"(A) make such reports, in such form and containing such information, concerning its structure, operations, performance of functions, and other matters as the Secretary may from time to time require, and keep such records and afford such access thereto as the Secretary may find necessary to verify such reports;

"(B) provide for such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures as the Secretary may require to assure proper disbursement of, and accounting for, amounts received from the Secretary under this title and section 1640; and

"(C) permit the Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or their representatives, to have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records pertinent to the disposition of amounts received from the Secretary under this title and section 1640.

"(c) SUBAREA COUNCILS.—A health systems agency may establish subarea advisory councils representing parts of the agencies' health service area to advise the governing body of the agency on the performance of its functions. The composition of a subarea advisory council shall conform to the requirements of subsection (b) (3) (C).

"FUNCTIONS OF HEALTH SYSTEMS AGENCIES"

"SEC. 1513. (a) For the purpose of—

"(1) improving the health of residents of a health service area,

"(2) increasing the accessibility (including overcoming geographic, architectural, and transportation barriers), acceptability, continuity, and quality of the health services provided them,

"(3) restraining increases in the cost of providing them health services, and

"(4) preventing unnecessary duplication of health resources, each health systems agency shall have as its primary responsibility the provision of effective health planning for its health service area and the promotion of the development within the area of health services, manpower, and facilities which meet identified needs, reduce documented inefficiencies, and implement the health plans of the agency. To meet its primary responsibility, a health systems agency shall carry out the functions described in subsections (b) through (g) of this section.

"(b) In providing health planning and resources development for its health service area, a health systems agency shall perform the following functions:

"(1) The agency shall assemble and analyze data concerning—

"(A) the status (and its determinants) of the health of the residents of its health service area,

"(B) the status of the health care delivery system in the area and the use of that system by the residents of the area,

"(C) the effect the area's health care delivery system has on the health of the residents of the area,

"(D) the number, type, and location of the area's health resources, including health services, manpower, and facilities.

"(E) the patterns of utilization of the area's health resources, and

"(F) the environmental and occupational exposure factors affecting immediate and long-term health conditions.

In carrying out this paragraph, the agency shall to the maximum extent practicable use existing data (including data developed under Federal health programs) and coordinate its activities with the cooperative system provided for under section 306(e).

"(2) The agency shall, after appropriate consideration of the recommended national guidelines for health planning policy issued by the Secretary under section 1501, the priorities set forth in section 1502, and the data developed pursuant to paragraph (1), establish, annually review, and amend as necessary a health systems plan (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "HSP") which shall be a detailed statement of goals (A) describing a healthful environment and health systems in the area which, when developed, will assure that quality health services will be available and accessible in a manner which assures continuity of care, at reasonable cost, for all residents of the area; (B) which are responsive to the unique needs and resources of the area; and (C) which take into account and is consistent with the national guidelines for health planning policy issued by the Secretary under section 1501 respecting supply, distribution, and organization of health resources and services. Before establishing an HSP, a health systems agency shall conduct a public hearing on the proposed HSP and shall give interested persons an opportunity to submit their views orally and in writing. Not less than thirty days prior to such hearing, the agency shall publish in at least two newspapers of general circulation throughout its health service area a notice of its consideration of the proposed HSP, the time and place of the hearing, the place at which interested persons may consult the HSP in advance of the hearing, and the place and period during which to submit written comments to the agency on the HSP.

"(3) The agency shall establish, annually review, and amend as necessary an annual implementation plan (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "AIP") which describes objectives which will achieve the goals of the HSP and priorities among the objectives. In establishing the AIP, the agency shall give priority to those objectives which will maximally improve the health of the residents of the area, as determined on the basis of the relation of the cost of attaining such objectives to their benefits, and which are fitted to the special needs of the area.

"(4) The agency shall develop and publish specific plans and projects for achieving the objectives established in the AIP.

"(c) A health system agency shall implement its HSP and AIP, and in implementing the plans it shall perform at least the following functions:

"Sec. 1521. (a) For the purpose of the performance within each State of the health planning and development functions prescribed by section 1523, the Secretary shall enter into and renew agreements (described in subsection (b)) for the designation of a State health planning and development agency for each State other than a State for which the Secretary may not under subsection (d) enter into, continue in effect, or renew such an agreement.

"(b) (1) A designation agreement under subsection (a) is an agreement with the Governor of a State for the designation of an agency (selected by the Governor) of the government of that State as the State health planning and development agency (hereinafter in this part referred to as the 'State Agency') to administer the State administrative program prescribed by section 1522 and to carry out the State's health planning and development functions prescribed by section 1523. The Secretary may not enter into such an agreement with the Governor of a State unless—

"(B) The period of an agreement described in subparagraph (A) may not exceed twenty-four months. During such period the Secretary may require that the designated State Agency perform only such of the functions of a State Agency prescribed by section 1523 as he determines it is capable of performing. The number and type of such functions shall, during such period, be progressively increased as the designated State Agency becomes capable of added responsibility, so that by the end of such period the designated State Agency may be considered for designation under paragraph (3).

"(C) Any agreement with a Governor of a State entered into under subparagraph (A) may be terminated by the Governor upon ninety days' notice to the Secretary or by the Secretary upon ninety days' notice to the Governor.

"(B) by the Secretary, at such time and upon such notice to the Governor as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe, if the Secretary determines that the designated State Agency is not complying with or effectively carrying out the provisions of such agreement.

An agreement under this paragraph shall contain such provisions as the Secretary may require to assure that the requirements of this part respecting State Agencies are complied with.

"(4) An agreement entered into under paragraph (3) for the designation of a State Agency may be renewed by the Secretary for a period not to exceed twelve months if he determines that it has fulfilled, in a satisfactory manner, the responsibilities of a State Agency during the period of the agreement to be renewed and if the applicable State administrative program continues to meet the requirements of section 1522.

"(c) If a designation agreement with the Governor of a State entered into under subsection (b) (2) or (b) (3) is terminated before the date prescribed for its expiration, the Secretary shall, upon application and in accordance with subsection (b) (2), or (b) (3) (as the Secretary determines appropriate), enter into another agreement with the Governor for the designation of a State Agency.

"(d) If, upon the expiration of the fourth fiscal year which begins after the calendar year in which the National Health Policy, Planning, and Resources Development Act of 1974 is enacted, an agreement under this section for the designation of a State Agency for a State is not in effect, the Secretary may not make any allotment, grant, loan, or loan guarantee, or enter into any contract, under this Act, the Community Mental Health Centers Act, or the Comprehensive Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Act of 1970 for the development, expansion, or support of health resources in such State until such time as such an agreement is in effect.

"PART B—ALLOTMENTS

"ALLOTMENTS

"Sec. 1610. (a) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall, in accordance with regulations, make from sums appropriated for such fiscal year under section 1513 allotments among the States on the basis of the population, the financial need, and need for medical facilities projects described in section 1601 of the respective States. The population of the States shall be determined on the basis of the latest figure certified by the Secretary of Commerce.

"(b) (1) The allotment to any State (other than Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands) for any fiscal year shall be not less than $1,000,000; and the allotment to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands for any fiscal year shall be not less than $500,000 each.

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), if the amount appropriated under section 1613 for any fiscal year is less than the amount required to provide allotments in accordance with paragraph (1), the amount of the allotment to any State for such fiscal year shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount prescribed for such State by paragraph (1) as the amount appropriated for such fiscal year bears to the amount of appropriations needed to make allotments to all the States in accordance with paragraph (1).

"(c) Any amount allotted to a State for a fiscal year under subsection (a) and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available to such State, for the purpose for which made, for the next two fiscal years (and for such years only), in addition to the amounts allotted to such State for such purposes for such next two fiscal years; except that any such amount which is unobligated at the end of the first of such next two years and which the Secretary determines will remain unobligated at the close of the second of such next two years may be reallocated by the Secretary, to be available for the purposes for which made until the close of the second of such next two years, to other States which have need therefor, on such basis as the Secretary deems equitable and consistent with the purposes of this title. Any amount so reallocated to a State shall be in addition to the amounts allotted and available to the State for the same period.

"PAYMENTS FROM ALLOTMENTS

"Sec. 1611. (a) If with respect to any medical facility project approved under section 1604 the State Agency certifies (upon the basis of inspection by it) to the Secretary that, in accordance with approved plans and specifications, work has been performed upon the project or purchases have been made for it and that payment from the applicable allotment of the State in which the project is located is due for the project, the Secretary shall, except as provided in subsection (b), make such payment to the State.

"(b) The Secretary is authorized to not make payments to a State pursuant to subsection (a) in the following circumstances:

"(1) If such State is not authorized by law to make payments for an approved medical facility project from the payment to be made by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a), or if the State so requests, the Secretary shall make the payment from the State allotment directly to the applicant for such project.

"(2) If the Secretary, after investigation or otherwise, has reason to believe that any act (or failure to act) has occurred requiring action pursuant to section 1612, payment by the Secretary may, after he has given the State Agency notice and opportunity for hearing pursuant to such section, be withheld, in whole or in part, pending corrective action or action based on such hearing.

In no event may the total of payments made under subsection (a) with respect to any project exceed an amount equal to the Federal share of such project.

"(c) In case an amendment to an approved application is approved as provided in section 1604 or the estimated cost of a project is revised upward, any additional payment with respect thereto may be made from the applicable allotment of the State for the fiscal year in which such amendment or revision is approved.

"(d) In any fiscal year—

"(1) not more than 20 per centum of the amount of a State's allotment available for obligation in that fiscal year may be obligated for projects in the State for construction of new facilities for the provision of inpatient health care to persons residing in areas of the State which have experienced recent rapid population growth; and

"(2) not less than 25 per centum of the amount of a State's allotment available for obligation in that fiscal year shall be obligated for projects for outpatient facilities which will serve medically underserved populations.

In the administration of this part, the Secretary shall seek to assure that in each fiscal year at least one half of the amount obligated for projects pursuant to paragraph (2) shall be obligated for projects which will serve rural medically underserved populations.

"WITHHOLDING OF PAYMENTS AND OTHER COMPLIANCE ACTIONS

"Sec. 1612. (a) Whenever the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State Agency concerned finds—

"(1) that the State Agency is not complying substantially with the provisions required by section 1603 to be included in its State medical facilities plan,

"(2) that any assurance required to be given in an application filed under section 1604 is not being or cannot be carried out,

"(3) that there is a substantial failure to carry out plans and specifications approved by the Secretary under section 1604, the Secretary shall take the action authorized by subsection (b) unless, in the case of compliance with assurances, the Secretary requires compliance by other means authorized by law.

"(b) (1) Upon a finding described in subsection (a) and after notice to the State Agency concerned, the Secretary may—

"(A) withhold from all projects within the State with respect to which the finding was made further payments from the State's allotment under section 1610, or

"(B) withhold from the specific projects with respect to which the finding was made further payments from the applicable State allotment under section 1610.

"(2) Payments may be withheld, in whole or in part, under paragraph (1)—

"(A) until the basis for the finding upon which the withholding was made no longer exists, or

"(B) if corrective action to make such finding inapplicable cannot be made, until the State concerned repays or arranges for the repayment of Federal funds paid under this part for projects which because of the finding are not entitled to such funds.

"(c) The Secretary shall investigate and ascertain, on a periodic basis, with respect to each entity which is receiving financial assistance under this title or which has received financial assistance under title VI of this title, the extent of compliance by such entity with the assurances required to be made at the time such assistance was received. If the Secretary finds that such an entity has failed to comply with any such assurance, the Secretary shall take the action authorized by subsection (b) or take any other action authorized by law (including an action for specific performance brought by the Attorney General upon request of the Secretary) which will effect compliance by the entity with such assurances. An appropriate action to effectuate compliance with any such assurance may be brought by a person other than the Secretary only if a complaint has been filed by such person with the Secretary and the Secretary has dismissed such complaint or the Attorney General has not brought a civil action for compliance with such assurance within 6 months after the date on which the complaint was filed with the Secretary.

"Sec. 1613. Except as provided in section 1625(d), there are authorized to be appropriated for allotments under section 1510, $125,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $130,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $135,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977.

"(B) in the case of a project (other than a project described in subparagraph (A)) to be assisted from an allotment made under Part B, the proportion of the cost of such project to be paid by the Federal Government may not exceed 66½ unless the project is located in an area determined by the Secretary to be an urban or rural poverty area, in which case the proportion of the cost of such project to be paid by the Federal Government may be 100 per centum, and

"(C) in the case of a project (other than a project described in subparagraph (A)) to be assisted with a loan or loan guarantee made under part C, the principal amount of the loan directly made or guaranteed for such project, when added to any other assistance provided the project under this title, may not exceed 90 per centum of the cost of such project unless the project is located in an area determined by the Secretary to be an urban or rural poverty area, in which case the principal amount, when added to other assistance under this title, may cover up to 100 per centum of the cost of the project.

The report of the Secretary under this section may include such recommendations as he considers appropriate for termination or consolidation of any such reporting requirements.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2994) to amend the Public Health Service Act to assure the development of a national health policy and of effective State and area health planning and resources development programs, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate bill and the House amendment. The differences between the Senate bill, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

HEALTH PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT Short Title

The Senate bill provides that the Act may be cited as the "National Health Planning and Development and Health Facilities Assistance Act of 1974", (section 1).

The House amendment provides that the Act may be cited as the "National Health Policy, Planning, and Resources Development Act of 1974", (section 1).

The conference substitute provides that the Act may be cited as the "National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974", (section 1).

Findings

The House amendment specifies Congressional findings, for which there are no corresponding findings in the Senate bill, respecting health care costs, the role of providers, the public's knowledge regarding proper personal health care and use of services, and the result of assistance available to date for health care. The House amendment further states a purpose, not included in the

December 19, 1974

Senate bill, to the effect that the general purpose of the Act is facilitating the development of recommendations for a national health policy, of State and regional health planning, and of resources which will further the national health policy, (sections 2(a) and 1403).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment, (section 2(a)).

National health priorities

Both the Senate bill and House amendment specify Congressional findings respecting national health priorities. These are identical except that:

(1) The third Senate priority refers to the development of medical group practices, health maintenance organizations and other organized systems, while the House amendment refers only to medical group practices.

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

(2) The fourth priority in the Senate bill refers to the training and increased use of physician extenders, while the corresponding priority in the House amendment refers to physicians' assistants, especially nurse clinicians. The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

(3) The eighth priority in the Senate bill referring to the promotion of activities for the prevention of disease is not included in the House amendment. The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (Senate section 1402, House section 1403, conference substitute section 1502).

National Guidelines for Health Planning and National Health Policy

Formulation: The Senate bill requires the Secretary, within one year of enactment, to issue guidelines concerning national health planning policy. The guidelines are to include standards respecting the appropriate supply, distribution, and organization of health resources, and a statement of national health planning goals (sections 1401 and 1403).

The House amendment requires the Secretary to establish a National Council for Health Policy which is to develop and recommend a national health policy including a statement of recommended national health goals and recommended guidelines for health resources and services (sections 1401 and 1402).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill except that the Secretary is to issue guidelines within 18 months of enactment and is to revise them periodically as necessary (section 1501).

National Advisory Council on Health Planning and Development and National Council for Health Policy. Establishment of Council: The Senate bill establishes in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare a National Advisory Council on Health Planning and Development (section 1403(a)).

The House amendment requires the Secretary to establish a National Council for Health Policy (section 1401(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill and establishes a National Council on Health Planning and Development (section 1503(a)).

Composition of Council: The Senate bill requires that the National Advisory Council on Health Planning and Development have:

(1) Twelve members, nine of whom are to be voting members,
(2) Not less than four non providers among the voting members,

(3) Not more than three Federal Government employees among the voting members,
(4) Not more than five of the voting members from the same political party, and

(5) Three non-voting ex-officio members including the Chief Medical Director of the Veterans' Administration, the Assistant Secretary for Health and Environment of the Department of Defense, and the Assistant Secretary for Health of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (section 1403(b)(1)).

The House amendment requires that the National Council for Health Policy have:

(1) Fifteen members,
(2) Not less than five non provider members,

(3) Not more than three Federal Government employees, and

(4) Not more than eight members from the same political party (section 1401(b)(1)).

The conference substitute requires the National Council on Health Planning and Development to have:

(1) Fifteen members, twelve of whom are to be voting members,
(2) Not less than five non provider members,

(3) Not more than three Federal Government employees among the voting members,
(4) Equal representation among the twelve voting members from each major political party, and

(5) Three non voting ex-officio members including the Chief Medical Director of the Veterans' Administration, the Assistant Secretary for Health and Environment of the Department of Defense, and the Assistant Secretary for Health of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (section 1503(b)(1)).

Functions of Council: The Senate bill specifies as the function of the National Advisory Council on Health Planning and Development advising, consulting with, and making recommendations to the Secretary with respect to the development of national guidelines for health planning (section 1403(a)).

The House amendment specifies as the functions of the National Council for Health Policy:

(1) Developing and recommending a national health policy,
(2) Recommending guidelines for appropriate supply, distribution, and organization of health resources and services,

(3) Conducting various studies and analyses,
(4) Assessing health status,

(5) Evaluating the implications of advances in biomedical research, health services research, and medical technology for the delivery system, and
(6) Analyzing factors causing inflation and determining means for cost containment (section 1402(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill except that the Council is also to advise, consult with, and make recommendations to the Secretary with respect to activities under new titles XV and XVI generally (section 1503(6)).

In evaluating the implications of new medical technology, the National Advisory Council is to assess the impact of devoting resources to such technology upon other health care programs, and the potential for the equitable distribution of that technology among all Americans.

Council's Responsibilities for Consulting: The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which requires the Council to include specialty societies representing medical and other health care providers among the groups and entities with which it consults in carrying out its functions (section 1402(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1301(c)), except that requirement applies to the Secretary rather than the Council.

Reports: The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which requires the Council to submit annually to the President, the Congress, and the public a comprehensive report specifying the results of its activities, section 1402(b).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Area Planning Agencies

Agency Name: The Senate bill refers to area health planning and development agencies as "health planning agencies".

The House amendment refers to such agencies as "health systems agencies".

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

Designation Criteria: General: The Senate bill requires health service areas to be geographic regions appropriate for the effective planning and development of health services, determined on the basis of population and the availability of resources to provide all necessary health services (section 1411(a)(1)).

The House amendment requires health service areas to be rational geographic regions with a comprehensive range of health services available and of a "character suitable for the effective planning and development of health services" (section 1411(a)(1)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill, (section 1511(a)(1)).

The Senate bill further contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which gives the Secretary specific authority to prescribe regulations respecting requirements for health service areas (section 1411(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment. Because of the Conferees' desire to select most Health Systems Agencies in 1975, the area designation process in the bill is designed to be self-executing. Therefore, no implementing regulations are necessary and the designation process should begin immediately after enactment.

Geographical Jurisdiction of Agencies: Name: The Senate bill refers to health planning areas as "health areas" (section 1411).

The House amendment refers to such areas as "health service areas" (section 1411).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1511).

Designation Criteria: Population: The House amendment contains requirements for the maximum and minimum populations of health service areas which are not included in the Senate bill. These specify a maximum population of three million people except that the population may exceed three million if the area includes an SMSA with a population of more than 3 million (section 1411(a)(3)(A)), and a minimum population of 500,000 except that the population may go down to 200,000 in "unusual circumstances" and below 200,000 in "highly unusual circumstances" (section 1411(a)(3)(B)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1511(a)(3)).

Other Designation Criteria: The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which requires that the boundaries of health service areas be coordinated, if feasible, with the boundaries of PSRO's, existing regional planning areas, and State planning and administrative areas (section 1411(a)(4)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1511(a)(4)).

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that health service area boundaries may cross a State boundary only if it is determined that such an area is more appropriate for effective planning and development (section 1411(a)(3)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

The Senate bill specifies that health service area boundaries may not cross those of an SMSA unless the Secretary waives such requirement (section 1411(a)(4)).

The House amendment specifies that each SMSA is to be entirely contained within the boundaries of one health service area, except

December 19, 1974

If the Governor of each State in which an SMSA is located determines, with the Secretary's approval, otherwise (section 1411(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1511(a)).

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that, notwithstanding any other requirement, the boundaries of health service areas are to follow those of existing 314 (b) comprehensive health planning agencies unless the Governor of the appropriate State finds that another area is more appropriate and waives this requirement (section 1411(a) (5)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill except that existing 314(b) areas are to be designated as health service areas only if they meet all of the other requirements for designation (section 1511 (c)).

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which requires the boundaries of a health service area to be established so that, in the planning and development of health services to be offered within the area, any economic or geographic barrier to the receipt of such services in nonmetropolitan areas is taken into account. The boundaries of health service areas are also to be established so as to recognize the differences in health planning and health services development needs between nonmetropolitan and metropolitan areas (section 1411(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1511(a)).

Designation Process: The Senate bill authorizes the Secretary to prescribe regulations for the designation of health service areas and requires that:

(1) Within 120 days of enactment, the Secretary notify the Governors of the States of the initiation of proceedings to establish health service areas,

(2) Within 120 days of the date on which such notice is given, the Secretary publish in the Federal Register the boundary designations submitted to him,

(3) Opportunity to be provided by the Secretary for interested persons to comment on submitted boundaries and any boundaries proposed by the Secretary for areas not covered by the boundaries submitted by the Governor, and

(4) Health service areas established within one year of the date of enactment of the Act (section 1411(b)).

The House amendment requires that:

(1) Within 30 days of enactment, the Secretary notify the Governors of the States of the initiation of the area designation process, and

(2) Within 150 days of the date on which such notice is given, the Secretary publish the designations submitted as a notice in the Federal Register (section 1411(b)).

The conference substitute requires that:

(1) Within 30 days of enactment, the Secretary notify the Governors of the States of the initiation of the area designation process, (2) Within 210 days of enactment, the Secretary publish the designations submitted as a notice in the Federal Register, and (3) Within one year of the date of enactment, health service areas be established (section 1511(b)).

Revision of Boundaries: The Senate bill specifies that boundary revisions can be initiated by the Secretary, Governor, or designated health systems agency; however, boundaries are to be revised only if the Secretary determines that a boundary no longer meets the specified requirements (section 1411(b)).

The House amendment is similar to the provision of the Senate bill except that only the Governor is given authority to initiate boundary revisions (section 1411(b)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1511(b)).

Agency Structure: Eligible Entities: The Senate bill specifies that a health system agency may be either a public entity or a non-profit private corporation (section 1412(a)).

The House amendment is similar to the Senate provision except that it specifies that public entities which may be designated as health systems agencies are to be:

(1) Public regional planning bodies which either have a governing board composed of a majority of elected officials of units of general local government or are authorized by State law (in effect before the date of enactment) to carry out health planning and review functions such as those described in section 1413, and which have planning areas identical to the applicable health service areas, or

(2) Single units of general local government if the area of jurisdiction of such units is identical to the applicable health service area (section 1412(b)(1)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1512(b)(1)).

The Senate bill further specifies that if a health systems agency is a public entity (other than an existing 314(b) agency) it must have a separate governing body for health planning (section 1412(b)(1)(B)).

The House amendment specifies that, if the agency is a public entity, there shall be an advisory health council which shall advise the governing body of the agency. The composition of such council shall conform to the requirements applicable to governing bodies of private agencies. If the governing body of a public health systems agency makes decisions which conflict with the recommendations of its advisory health council, the advisory health council recommendations are to be made public, and as appropriate, reported to the Secretary, the SHCC, or the State agency (section 1412 (b)(5)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill except that the waiver for existing, public 314(b) agencies is not included (section 1512(b)(3)(A)). The conferees noted their desire that the Secretary consider designating as health systems agencies which have served as 314(b) agencies even if their funding came from sources other than 314(b) such as under the programs authorized by the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965.

In addition, the Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which states that a health systems agency may not be an educational institution or operate such an institution (section 1412 (b)(1)(C)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1512(b)(1)).

The Senate bill, finally, contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which states that if a health systems agency is a private entity it may engage only in the activities of health systems agencies listed in the Act (section 1412(b)(1)(A)).

The conference substitute specifies that a private health systems agency may only engage in health planning and development functions without limiting this to only the functions specifically listed (section 1512(b) (1)(A)).

Governing Body: Responsibilities: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which requires the governing body to be responsible for the approval of all actions taken respecting proposed uses of Federal funds and the need for new and existing institutional health services and facilities (section 1412(b)(4)(B)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1512(b)).

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which requires that a health systems agency in making its records and data available to the public conform to confidentiality requirements prescribed by the Secretary to protect the confidentiality of matter comparable to matter described in 5 U.S.C. 552(b). A similar requirement is applicable to State Agencies (sections 1412(b)(3)(B) and 1432(b)(9)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

The Senate bill specifies that a quorum of the governing body (or executive committee) shall be not less than one-half of its members; and that the governing body (and executive committee) shall act by vote of a majority of its members present and voting at a meeting called upon adequate notice and at which a quorum is present (section 1412 (b)(4)(B)).

The House amendment specifies that a quorum for a governing body (and executive committee) shall be a majority of the membership (section 1412(b)(3)(B)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1512(b)).

Composition: The Senate bill requires a majority of consumers (not to exceed 60 percent) who are not and have not within the twelve months preceding appointment been providers and who are not governmental representatives (section 1412(b)(4)(C)).

The House amendment requires one-half plus one consumers who are not providers (section 1412(b)(3)(C)).

The conference substitute reflects a compromise requiring a majority of consumers (not to exceed 60 percent) with the remainder being providers.

The Senate bill specifies that the remainder of the members are to be governmental representatives and providers including a designated VA representative if a VA facility is located within the health service area and at least one health maintenance organization representative if there is an HMO in the area (section 1412(b)(4)).

The House amendment requires that the remainder of the members be providers and further specifies that the governing body shall include governmental representatives either as consumers or providers (section 1412(b)(3)(C)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill regarding VA and HMO representatives; however, governmental representatives shall be included as either consumers or providers (section 1512(b)(3) (C)).

The Senate bill contains a provision which requires that executive committees and sub-area councils and subcommittees and advisory groups, to the extent practicable, meet composition requirements (section 1412(b) (4)(C)) and (section 1412(c)).

The House amendment specifies that executive committees and subarea councils must meet composition requirements (section 1412 (b)(3)(C) and section 1412(c)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which requires that the membership of the governing body and executive committee (if any) of an agency shall include a percentage of individuals who reside in nonmetropolitan areas equal to the percentage of residents of the area who reside in nonmetropolitan areas (section 1412(b)(3)(C)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1512(b)(3)(C)).

The House amendment also contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which requires that not less than one-third of the provider members shall be "direct" providers of health care (section 1412(b) (3)(C)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1512(b)(3)(C)).

Statement of Liability: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which states that a member or employee of a health systems agency is not liable for damage under Federal or State law for performance of the functions or duties of the agency authorized or required under the Act (section 1412(5)).

December 19, 1974

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1412(b)(4)).

Staff: Separation of Functions: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which requires separate staffs for planning and development, but only one staff director (section 1412(b)(3)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill except that the word "separate" and the requirement for only one staff director are dropped (section 1412(b)(2)).

Consultants and Contract Services: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifically authorizes health systems agencies to employ consultants and contract for the provision of services where necessary to perform its functions (section 1412(b)(3)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1412(b)(2)(B)).

Agency Designation Process: Time Requirement: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which requires the Secretary to enter into designation agreements (conditional or final) within 18 months of the date of enactment (section 1415(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1515(a)). The Secretary should make every attempt to secure an approvable application for the designation of a health systems agency for each health service area within 18 months of enactment. To the extent it is impossible to designate an agency, because there is no eligible applicant, the Secretary should make every effort to promote such an application at the earliest time.

Consultation/Approval: The Senate bill specifies that the Secretary must consult with the Governors and other State and local officials in designating health systems agencies (section 1415(b)(4)(C) and section 1415(c)(2)).

The House amendment requires the Governors' approval for the designation of health systems agencies (section 1415(b)(4) (C) and section 1415(c)(2)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Termination by Secretary of Final Designation: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which states that the Secretary must provide an agency with an opportunity for a hearing in accordance with 5 U.S.C. 554 (formal hearing) (section 1415(c)(1)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment. The conferees concluded that a formal hearing prior to terminating an agreement with either a health systems agency or a State Agency is unduly cumbersome. The conferees intend that, in terminating designation of a health systems agency or a State Agency, the Secretary shall by regulation assure that the agency is afforded due process and is provided with notice and opportunity for hearing that it is not complying with or effectively carrying out the provisions of such agreement.

Agency Functions: Names of Plans: The Senate bill specifies that the health planning agencies are to annually establish Long-Range Goal Plans (LGP) and Short-Term Priorities Plans (SPP) (section 1413(b)).

The House amendment specifies that the health systems agencies are to annually establish Health Systems Plans (HSP) and Annual Implementation Plans (AIP) (section 1413(b)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1513(b)(3)).

Review by Secretary: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which authorizes the Secretary to review plans (must consult with appropriate SHCC) and require modifications if a plan is not consistent with the purposes of this title (section 1413(b)(2)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

Procedure for Establishment: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that the agencies are required to hold public hearings on plans (after 30 days' notice) and give interested persons opportunities to comment (section 1432(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill but the requirement applies only to the health systems plan (section 1513(b) (2)). It is anticipated that adequate notice and opportunity for comment will be required prior to the adoption of the annual implementation plan and other planning documents.

Financial Assistance for Implementation of Plans: The Senate bill contains a provision that there be no dollar limit on grants or contracts made from an agency's Development Fund but that assistance for any project or program be limited to three years (section 1413(c)(3)).

The House amendment specifies that no grant or contract may exceed $75,000 per year. Assistance is to be limited to two years for any one project or program (section 1413(c)(3)).

The conference substitute in the form of a compromise:

(1) requires that there be a two-year limit on the period of assistance, and

(2) specifies that there be no limit on the dollar amount of assistance (section 1513(c) (3)).

The conferees noted their expectation, however, that those instances in which a grant or contract awarded under this provision would exceed $100,000 would be relatively rare. However, it is hoped that those programs which, in the judgment of the local health systems agency, merit continued support, and conform to the goals of the health systems plan, will be given appropriate priority.

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which specifies that no grant or contract may be made for support of established programs or the delivery of health services (section 1413(c)(3)).

The conference substitute as a compromise specifies that no grant or contract may be made for the delivery of health services (as defined in regulations (section 1513(c) (3)).

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which specifies that no grant may be made to an agency for its Area Health Services Development Fund unless the agency, as determined under review by the Secretary, is organized and operated as required and is performing its functions in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary (section 1540(a)(3)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House bill.

The Senate bill authorizes to be appropriated for the Agency Development Fund:

	Million
Fiscal year 1975.....	$25
Fiscal year 1976.....	75
Fiscal year 1977.....	120

(Section 1417(d).)

The House amendment authorizes to be appropriated for the Agency Development Fund:

	Million
Fiscal year 1975.....	$25
Fiscal year 1976.....	100
Fiscal year 1977.....	150

(Section 1540(d).)

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Approval of Proposed Uses of Federal Funds: The Senate bill specifies that the health programs agencies are to review and approve or disapprove proposed uses of Federal funds under the PHS Act, the Community Mental Health Centers Act, and the Alcoholism Act except funds under titles IV, VII, and VIII of the PHS Act for other than support of the delivery of health services (section 1413(e)).

The House amendment is the same except that an agency's review and approval or disapproval does not apply to funds under titles IV, VII, and VIII of the PHS Act except when they support the delivery of health services or to funds under the Development Disabilities Act (section 1413(e)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill with the added requirement that applications for funds under titles IV, VII, and VIII for the development of health resources intended to be used within the health service area be subject to review (section 1513(e)(1)).

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which requires health systems agencies to review and approve or disapprove proposed uses of Federal formula grant funds within the health service area (section 1413(f)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that agencies must comment on each application and forward recommendations to the Secretary and the State Agency (section 1413(e)(2)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that the review function applies to loans and loan guarantees in addition to grants and contracts (section 1413(e)(1)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1513(e)(1)).

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which specifies that a health systems agency may only review and comment on proposed uses of Federal funds for programs or projects located within certain Indian areas. Health systems agencies are to provide Indian organizations with information respecting the availability of Federal funds (section 1413 (e)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1513(a)(1)).

The House amendment, unlike the Senate bill, also authorizes the Secretary to make health planning and development grants to Indian tribes.

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Review of Existing Services and Facilities: The Senate bill specifies that each health systems agency shall review on a periodic basis all institutional health services offered and health care facilities and health maintenance organizations located in the health service area and shall make recommendations to the State Agency; this review is not required with respect to services or facilities subject to review under section 1122 of the Social Security Act or subject to a certificate-of-need program enacted by a State prior to the enactment of this section which the Secretary determines substantially meets the requirement of such subsection 1122, or subject to a certificate-of-need issued under this title. If the State Agency determines that a service or facility is not needed, the health systems agency shall work with the provider of the service or with the facility, the State Agency, and other appropriate persons for the improvement or elimination (as the State Agency and health systems agency determine appropriate) of such service or facility (section 1413(h)).

December 19, 1974

The House amendment specifies that a health systems agency shall review on a periodic basis all institutional health services offered in the health service area and make recommendations to the State Agency respecting the appropriateness in the area of such services (section 1413(g)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1513(a)).

Formula for Agency Planning Grants: Basic Formula: The Senate bill specifies that each health systems agency is to receive $.50 per capita with no maximum dollar amount specified (section 1416(b)(1)).

The House amendment specifies that each health systems agency is to receive $.50 per capita with a maximum grant of $1.5 million (section 1416(b)(1)).

The conference substitute as a compromise specifies a maximum of $3.75 million (section 1516(b)(1)).

Conditions Applicable to Non-Federal Matching Monies. Allowable Private Contributions: The Senate bill specifies that a health systems agency may not accept contributions for matching purpose from any individual or private entity having a financial, fiduciary, or other direct interests in the development, expansion, or support of health resources (section 1416(b)(2)(B)).

The House amendment specifies that private contributions shall be limited to five percent of non-Federal funds by any one private contributor (section 1416(b)(2)(B)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1516(b)(2)(B)). By including this provision, the conferees hope to preclude, to the greatest extent possible, conflict of interest inherent in accepting funds from providers of health care where interests may in any way be affected by decisions or recommendations made by a health systems agency.

Allowable Public Contributions: The Senate bill places no limitations on public contributions.

The House amendment limits public contributions to one-third of non-Federal funds by any one public contributor (section 1416(b)(2)(B)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Conditions as to Use of Contributions: The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which specifies that contributions used for matching purposes cannot have conditions as to their use (section 1416(b)(2)(B)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1516(b)(3)(B)).

Minimum Grant: The Senate bill specifies a minimum planning grant of $220,000 (section 1416(b)(3)).

The House amendment specifies a minimum planning grant of $175,000 (section 1416(b)(3)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1516(b)(3)).

Receipt of Private Contributions: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that an agency may not receive any contribution from any individual or private entity having direct interest in the development, expansion, or support of health resources (section 1412(b)(6)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1512(b)(5)). The conferees noted that this provision would not prohibit agencies from receiving contributions or funds from charitable foundations and organizations or employers offering health benefits plans, unless the activities of those foundations or organizations within the health service area served by the health systems agency would be affected by recommendations or decisions made by the health systems agency.

State Planning and Development

Designation of State Agency: Termination by the Secretary of Final Designation: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that the Secretary must provide an agency with an opportunity for a hearing in accordance with 5 U.S.C. 554 (formal hearing) (section 1421(b)(3)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

Consequence of No Designation Agreement: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, that specifies if no agreement is in effect upon expiration of the fourth fiscal year, beginning after the calendar year of enactment, no funds under the PHS Act, the Community Mental Health Centers Act, and the Alcoholism Act may be made available for programs in the States (section 1421(d)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1521(d)).

State Administrative Program: Reporting by Providers: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that providers in a State are required by the State administrative program to make statistical and other reports to the State Agency (section 1422(b)(7)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1522(b)(7)).

Staff: The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which specifies that the director of the planning staff of the State Agency be appointed with the advice and consent of the SHCC and that the Secretary may prescribe staff size and qualifications (section 1422(b)).

The conference substitute as a compromise specifies that the Secretary may prescribe staff size and qualifications and drops the requirement that the director of the planning staff of the State Agency be appointed with the advice and consent of the SHCC (section 1522(b)(4)).

Hearing Requirement: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, requiring hearing procedures to be consistent with State administrative law (section 1422(b)(13)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1522(b)(13)). The conferees placed their emphasis on the requirement that the hearing mechanism be independent of the State Agency.

State Agency Functions: Serve as Designated Planning Agency Under Section 1122 of the Social Security Act. The Senate bill specifies that the State Agency performs this function only if the State makes an agreement under section 1122 (section 1423(a)(3)(A)).

The House amendment contains no reference to such an agreement (section 1423(a)(3)(A)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1523(a)(4)(A)).

Certificate of Need Program for New Institutional Services: The Senate bill specifies that a certificate-of-need program is required even if the State Agency serves as the designated planning agency under section 1122 (section 1423(a)(3)).

The House amendment provides that such a program is required if the State Agency does not serve as the section 1122 designated planning agency (section 1423(a)(3)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1523(a)(4)(B)).

The Senate bill provides that such a program is to require review and determination before services are offered or developed or substantial expenditures are made and is to provide that only services found to be needed may be offered (section 1423(a)(3)).

The House amendment provides that the State Agency is to make findings as to need after consideration of health systems agency recommendations. Such findings are required whether or not the State is serving as the section 1122 designated planning agency or has a certificate-of-need program (section 1423(a)(4)).

The conference substitute includes both provisions (section 1523(a)(4) and (5)).

The Senate bill specifies that a State certificate-of-need program is not required until the expiration of the first regular session of the legislature which begins after the date of enactment (section 1423(b)(2)).

The House amendment specifies that a State certificate of need program is not required until the expiration of the first regular session of the legislature which begins after the date of the first designation of a State Agency (final designation) and at which authorizing legislation may be enacted (section 1423(b)(2)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1523(d)).

Review of Existing Services: The Senate bill specifies that a State Agency is to review existing institutional health services and health care facilities and health maintenance organizations and make findings as to continued need; except that review and findings are not to apply to services or facilities subject to review under section 1122 or subject to a certificate of need program enacted by a State prior to the enactment of this section which the Secretary determines substantially meets the requirements of section 1122 or subject to a certificate of need issued under the program required for new services and facilities (section 1423(a)(4)).

The House amendment specifies that a State Agency is to review institutional health services being offered respecting their appropriateness and make public its findings for the purpose of informing the providers of such services what voluntary remedial measures may be advisable (section 1423(a)(5)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment except that the State Agency is simply to make public its findings (section 1523(a)(6)).

The conferees have adopted the substance of the House amendment and wish to stress that the purpose of the findings by the State Agency is to inform the public and providers of health services as to the appropriateness of particular services and what, if any, voluntary remedial actions are advisable.

Preparation, Review, Revision of the Preliminary State Health Plan: The Senate bill requires a State Agency to prepare and submit to the SHCC for its approval a preliminary long-range State health plan made up of the LGP's of the health planning agencies in the State and a preliminary short-term State health plan made up of the SPP's of the health planning agencies in the State. Preliminary plans may contain revisions of LGPs and SPPs as the State Agency may find necessary for coordination or effectiveness (section 1423(a)(1)).

The House amendment contains no corresponding provision respecting a preliminary State health plan but a State Agency is to assist the SHCC in preparation, review, and revision of a State health plan (section 1423(a)(2)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill except that a State Agency is required to prepare only a single State health plan rather than both a long-range and short-term plan (section 1523(a)(2)).

Rate Review: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that the Secretary may enter into an agreement with a State agency to regulate and establish rates for health services and provide financial assistance for performance of this function. The Senate bill authorizes $10 million for fiscal 1976, $15 million for fiscal 1976, and $20 million for fiscal 1977 for this purpose (section 1424).

The conference substitute provides that the Secretary may make grants for the purpose of demonstrating the effectiveness of rate regulation to a maximum of six States who are regulating, or have indicated their intent to regulate, rates prior to the end of six months after the date of enactment (section 1526). States which are assisted are to meet the various requirements of the Senate provision and are to report annually to the Secretary on the effectiveness of their programs. The Secretary is then to report annually to the Congress on the effectiveness of such rate regulation. Authorization of appropriation for this purpose is given in the amounts of $4 million for fiscal 1975, $5 million for fiscal 1976, and $6 million for fiscal 1977. It is generally anticipated by the conferees that the Secretary will seek to assist a heterogeneous group of States in regulating rates, including large and small States, urban and rural States, and States experiencing high and low medical care costs.

Hill-Burton Agency: The Senate bill specifies that the State Agency is required to serve as the Hill-Burton agency (section 627(12)).

The House amendment specifies that the State Agency may serve as the Hill-Burton agency but another agency of State government may, upon the request of the Governor and under an agreement with the State Agency satisfactory to the Secretary, perform such functions (section 1423(a)(6)(b)(1)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1523(b)(1)).

Extension of Section 1122 Policy to Private Health Insurers

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which requires States which participate in section 1122 of the Social Security Act, in lieu of having a certificate of need program, to extend 1122 policy to private health insurers operating within the State (section 1421(d)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Grants to State Agencies: Types: The Senate bill specifies that allotments are required to be made to State Agencies on the basis of population and per capita income except that no State is to receive an allotment for a fiscal year which is less than 1 percent of the appropriation for that year. The Federal share for any State Agency for purposes of this subsection shall not exceed 90 percent of the cost of the performance of such functions as the Secretary may determine. The Secretary may not make payments to a State Agency unless he determines that such payments will not supplant State funds and that the Agency will not reduce non-Federal funds (section 1426).

The House amendment specifies that the Secretary may make grants to State Agencies to assist them in meeting their costs of operation. No grant is to exceed 75 percent of the agency's costs (section 1425).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment except that the requirement for maintenance of effort is retained (section 1525(c)).

Authorizations

The Senate bill contains the following authorizations:

[In millions]
Fiscal year 1975.....	$25
Fiscal year 1976.....	25
Fiscal year 1977.....	25

The House amendment specifies the following authorizations:

[In millions]
Fiscal year 1975.....	$25
Fiscal year 1976.....	35
Fiscal year 1977.....	50

The conference substitute provides for the following compromise:

[In millions]
Fiscal year 1975.....	$25
Fiscal year 1976.....	30
Fiscal year 1977.....	35

(section 1525(c))

Statewide Health Coordination Council: General Requirements: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which requires that a health systems agency with a health service area that falls within the boundaries of one or more States must participate in the SHCC for each State (section 1425(b)(1)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1524(b)(1)(A)).

In addition, the Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, that each health systems agency must assume its share of the costs of operation of the SHCC (section 1425(b)(2)(A)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

Lastly, the Senate bill specifies that agencies must make available their plans for integration into the State health plan and make revisions as required (section 1425(b)(3)).

The House amendment has no corresponding provision, but the SHCC in preparing the State health plan may revise HSP's to achieve appropriate coordination or effectiveness (section 1424(c)(2)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill but adds to the Senate provision the House specification that the SHCC in preparing the State health plan may revise HSP's to achieve appropriate coordination or effectiveness (section 1524, 1524(c)(2)).

Composition: General Requirements: The Senate bill specifies that a majority of the members shall be consumers who are not providers or governmental representatives (section 1425(c)(1)(C)).

The House amendment is the same as the Senate bill except that governmental representatives may also be consumer members (section 1424(b)(1)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1524(b)(1)).

The Senate bill further contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, that if two or more VA medical facilities are located in a State, the SHCC shall include in addition to the appointed members, a VA representative as an ex officio member (section 1425(c)(1)(A)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate amendment (section 1524(b)(1)).

The House amendment, finally, contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, that not less than one third of the members of a SHCC who are providers of health care shall be "direct providers" of health care (section 1424(b)(1)(C)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1524(b)(1)).

Local Agency Representation: The Senate bill specifies that at least 60 percent of the membership shall be representatives of health systems agencies (section 1425(c)(1)(B)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1524(b)(1)).

Further, the House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, that of the health systems agency representatives, one half shall be consumers and one half shall be providers (section 1424(b)(1)(A)).

The conference substitute requires that at least one half of each HSA's representatives on the SHCC be consumers (section 1524(b)(1)).

Lastly, the Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, that if the governing body of a local agency includes a member representative of health maintenance organizations, the SHCC shall include a member representative of HMO's (section 1425(c)(1)(A)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

Governor's Representatives: The Senate bill specifies that the number of members appointed by the Governor (other than members from the health systems agencies) may not exceed 40 percent of the total membership (section 1425(c)(1)(B)).

The House amendment specifies that the number of members appointed by the Governor may not exceed one third of the total membership (section 1424(b)(1)(B)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1524(b)(1)).

Functions: State Health Plan: The Senate bill specifies that the SHCC, taking into account the preliminary State health plan, is to prepare, review, and revise as necessary a short-term State health plan which is to be made up of the SPP's of the health systems agencies within the State and a long-range State health plan made up of the LGP's of the health systems agencies within the State (section 1425(e)(1)).

The House amendment specifies that the SHCC is to prepare, review, and revise as necessary a State health plan which shall be made up of the HSP's of the health systems agencies within the State (section 1424(c)(2)).

The conference substitute requires only a single State health plan (section (c)(2)).

Further, the Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which requires the SHCC when preparing and/or revising a State health plan to conduct a public hearing on the plan as proposed, publish a notice of its consideration of the proposed plan, and give people an opportunity to submit comments on the plan (section 1432(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1524(c)(2)).

Review of Local Agency Plans: The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, that the SHCC is to review annually and coordinate the HSP and AIP of each health systems agency within the State and report to the Secretary its comments on such plans (section 1424(c)(1)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1524(c)).

Definition of Provider of Health Care

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, that a distinction be made between a "direct provider" and an "indirect provider" of health care. A direct provider is an individual whose primary current activity is the provision of health care to individual or the administration of health care facilities and who, as required by State law, has received professional training and is licensed or certified. Indirect providers are individuals who have certain fiduciary positions or financial interest, who are members of immediate families, or who are engaged in issuing health insurance (section 1431(c)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment but lists examples of direct providers (section 1531(3)).

Centers for Health Planning

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, that directs the Secretary to assist (by grant or contract) entities in meeting the costs of planning and developing new centers, and operating existing and new centers, for multidisciplinary health planning development and assistance. At least five centers are to be in operation by June 30, 1976. Further, the House amendment authorizes $5 million for fiscal year 1975, $8 million for fiscal year 1976, and $10 million for fiscal year 1977 (section 1434).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1534).

National Health Planning Information Center

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, that directs the Secretary to establish a national health planning information center to support the health planning and resources development programs of health systems agencies, State Agencies, and other entities, and to provide information (section 1433(c)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1533(c)).

Certain Uniform Systems

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, requiring the Secretary to establish within one year of the date of enactment the following: a uniform system for calculating the aggregate cost of operation and the aggregate volume of services provided by health service institutions; a uniform system for cost accounting and calculating the volume of such services; a uniform system for calculating rates to be charged to health insurers and other health institutions payors by health service institutions; a classification system for health service institutions; and a uniform system for the reporting of costs and volume of services and rates by health service institutions (section 1433(c)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill with minor modifications (section 1533(d)).

Review by the Secretary: Local Agencies: The Senate bill specifies that the Secretary is authorized to review the structure, operation, and performance of the functions of the health systems agencies (section 1434(c)).

The House amendment is the same except that such review is required to be made by the Secretary (section 1435(c)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1535(c)).

State Agencies: The Senate bill further specifies that the Secretary is authorized to review the structure, operation, and performance of the functions of State Agencies (section 1434(d)).

The House amendment is the same except that such review is required to be made by the Secretary (section 1435(d)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1535(d)).

Waiver Authority

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, that at the request of the Governor of a State applying for a waiver, the Secretary shall waive requirements for establishment of health service areas and health systems agencies, if he finds that a State applying for assistance under the planning title or the Hill-Burton title—

- (1) has no county or municipal public health institutions or departments, and
- (2) has, prior to the date of enactment, maintained a health planning system which substantially complies with the purposes of this title.

The Senate bill further has a provision, not included in the House amendment, that a State receiving a waiver and otherwise meeting the requirements of the planning title shall be eligible for assistance authorized by the planning title (section 1436).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1536).

This section is directed at any state which has successfully operated a statewide health planning system and which continues to maintain a health planning system which substantially complies with the purposes of this Act. It is intended to provide for meaningful participation within the statewide health planning system by providers, consumers, government officials, and private nonprofit planning agencies, and to encourage the continuation of those relationships or procedures where agencies in the private sector are performing satisfactorily.

HILL-BURTON PROGRAM Title Amended

The Senate bill amends title VI of the PHS Act with a new text for the Hill-Burton program (section 201).

The House amendment adds a new title XV to the PHS Act containing a new text for the Hill-Burton program (section 4).

The conference substitute adds a new title XVI to the PHS Act containing a new text for the Hill-Burton program (section 4). The new title number is used because a new title has been added to the PHS Act by another public law since the House amendment was written.

Assistance Authorized

The Senate bill authorizes allotments to States for grants, and project grants and loans and loan guarantees (with interest subsidies) to be made by the Secretary. Grants by the Secretary are to be made to public and non-profit private entities for construction and modernization of outpatient facilities and modernization of health facilities which will serve medically underserved populations. The amount of any such grant is not to exceed 75 percent of the cost of the project unless the project is in an urban or rural poverty area, in which case the grant may cover 100 percent of such costs (sections 600, 610, and 612).

The House amendment authorizes similar allotments to the States and allots to the States the principal of loans and loan guarantees (with interest subsidies), rather than having such loans and loan guarantees administered by the Secretary. In addition the House amendment specifies that not more than one-third of a State's allotment for grants may be used for construction of new facilities for inpatient services (parts B and C).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment except that:

- (1) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to public entities for projects which will eliminate or prevent imminent safety hazards or avoid noncompliance with State or voluntary licensure or accreditation standards. The amount of such projects is not to exceed 75 percent of the cost of the project unless it is in an urban or rural poverty area, in which case the amount may cover up to 100 percent of the cost.
- (2) No more than 20 percent of any State's allotment for grants is to be used for new construction of inpatient facilities (section 1611(d)(1)).

Funds for project grants to public entities to accomplish the purposes of part D by the Secretary are to be provided through a 22 percent earmark of any appropriations under authorizations of appropriations for allotments to States.

Projects Authorized

The Senate bill authorizes assistance for: (1) Construction and modernization of public or other non-profit outpatient facilities, and

- (2) Modernization of public or other non-profit health facilities which will serve medically underserved populations or populations which, without the modernization of such facilities, would be designated medically underserved populations, as may be necessary, in conjunction with existing facilities, to furnish adequate health care service (section 600).

The House amendment authorizes assistance for:

- (1) Modernization of medical facilities;
- (2) Construction of new outpatient medical facilities;
- (3) Construction of new inpatient medical facilities in areas which have experienced rapid recent population growth (as defined in regulations of the Secretary); and
- (4) Conversion of existing medical facilities for the provision of new health services (section 1501).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment except that not less than 25 percent of any State's allotment is to be used for the construction of outpatient facilities serving medically underserved populations, and the Secretary is to seek to assure that half of these funds are used in rural areas and half in urban areas (section 1601 and section 1611(d)(2)).

General Regulations

Definition of Medical Facility: The Senate bill defines the term health facility to mean a facility which provides to patients the services of licensed physicians and a reasonably full range of diagnostic and treatment services, or a rehabilitation facility (section 627(3)).

The House amendment defines the term medical facility to mean a hospital, public health center, outpatient medical facility, rehabilitation facility, facility for long-term care, or other facility for the provision of health care to ambulatory patients (section 1534(13)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

Priorities: The Senate bill and the House amendment each contain a provision requiring the Secretary to establish priorities among projects to be assisted. The priorities in the two provisions are somewhat different and the conference substitute compromises by combining all of the priorities in both provisions (section 1602(a)(1)).

The Senate bill contains a provision, which is not included in the House amendment, requiring the Secretary by regulation to prescribe the manner in which assisted entities are to comply with required assurances and the means by which they will demonstrate compliance. Reports are required and there is a specific provision barring any waiver from the reporting requirement (section 620(f)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1602(a)(6)).

Requirements Respecting Provision of Services: Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provide that the Secretary's regulations are to require the State plan to provide for adequate facilities to furnish needed health services for persons unable to pay (Senate section 620(e) and House section (a)(5)).

In addition, the House amendment specifies that the regulations are to require that the State plan provide adequate facilities for all persons residing in the State. Further, the Secretary may by regulation require that a State Agency secure from an applicant for assistance satisfactory assurances respecting the provision of services to all residents and respecting the provision of a reasonable volume of services to persons unable to pay for those services (section 1502(b)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1602(b)).

State Plan

Scope of the State Plan: The Senate bill requires approval of a State plan as a condition to the receipt of allotments. In addition, a project to be assisted under an allotment must be included within the State plan and an application therefor must be submitted through the State Agency (section 603(a)).

December 19, 1974

The House amendment requires approval of a State plan as a condition to the receipt of allotments and loans and loan guarantees. Projects to be assisted through allotments or loans or loan guarantees must be included within the State plan and an application therefor must be submitted through the State Agency (section 1504).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1603).

Role of the Statewide Health Coordinating Council: The Senate bill requires that the State plan must be approved by the Statewide Health Coordinating Council as consistent with the State health plan developed under title XIV (section 602(a)(3)).

The House amendment contains no corresponding provision, but requires the State plan to be consistent with the State health plan developed under title XIV (section 1503(a)(3)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1603(a)(3)).

Project Approval

Findings as to Need: The Senate bill requires findings as to need as a condition to receipt of assistance through allotments (section 603(b)(2)).

The House amendment requires findings as to need as a condition to receipt of assistance under loans and loan guarantees as well as allotments (section 1504(b)(1)(A)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1604(b)).

Assurances Respecting Adequate Financial Support for Projects Serving Urban or Rural Poverty Areas: The Senate bill specifies that Federal assistance provided outpatient facilities (or individuals served by such facilities) may be considered as financial support in determining if reasonable assurance can be given that adequate financial support will be available for the projects' maintenance and operation (section 603(b)(5)).

The House amendment contains no corresponding provision.

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1604(b)(1)(E)).

Special Requirement for Outpatient Facility Projects: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which provides that reasonable assurance must be given that the services of a general hospital will be available to patients of an outpatient facility who need hospital care, in the case of any project for an outpatient facility (sections 603(b)(8), 613(b)(8)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1604(b)(1)(E)).

Special Provisions for Outpatient Facility Projects: The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which provides that for a modernization project for an outpatient facility which will provide general purpose health services, which is not part of a hospital, which will serve a medically underserved population and for which not more than $20,000 is sought under allotments or loans:

- (1) The Secretary may waive requirements respecting modernization and equipment standards, and title to the project site, and
- (2) The Federal share may not exceed 100 percent of the first $6,000 and two-thirds of the next $21,000 of the project costs (sections 1504(b)(2) and 1534(2)(A)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1604(b)(2)).

Assurances Respecting Persons to be Served: The Senate bill requires that applications must contain reasonable assurances that project facilities will be made available to all persons residing or employed in the areas served by the facilities (sections 603(b)(10) and 614(b)(9)).

The House amendment is identical except that no assurance is required with respect to persons employed in an area to be served by a project (section 1504(c)(A)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1604(b)(1)(J)).

Allotments

Formula for Allotments: The Senate bill provides that allotments are to be made by the States on the basis of the existing Hill-Burton formula for allotments for construction projects (section 601(a)).

The House amendment provides that allotments are to be made among the States on the basis of the population, the financial need, and the need for medical facilities projects of the respective States (sections 1510(a) and 1521(a)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1610(a)).

Reallotment: The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which authorizes the Secretary to reallot unobligated allotments at the end of the second fiscal year after the allotment is made (sections 1510(c) and 1521(b)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment (section 1610(c)).

Loans and Loan Guarantees

Interest Rates: The Senate bill provides that the interest rate on a loan shall be the current prevailing rate of interest minus the lesser of (1) one-half of such rate, or (2) 4½ percent (section 614(a)(1)).

The House amendment provides that the interest rate on a loan shall be the current prevailing rate of interest minus 3 percent (section 1522(b)(2)(D)).

The conference substitute contains a compromise applying the Senate provision in poverty areas and the House provision in other areas.

Interest Subsidies: The Senate bill provides that the Secretary is to pay on behalf of the holder of a guaranteed loan an interest subsidy which will reduce the interest rate payable on the loan to the lesser of (1) one-half the current prevailing rate of interest, or (2) 4½ percent (section 614(b)(2)).

The House amendment provides that the Secretary shall pay on behalf of the holder of the guaranteed loan an interest subsidy which shall reduce by 3 percent the effective rate of interest payable on such loan (section 1520(b)(2)).

The conference substitute contains a compromise applying the Senate provision in poverty areas and the House provision in other areas.

Ceiling on Loans and Loan Guarantee: The Senate bill provides that a loan or a loan guarantee may not exceed 90 percent of the costs of a project unless the project is in an urban or rural poverty area, in which case the loan or loan guarantee may cover 100 percent of such costs (section 611(b)).

The House amendment is the same except that no increase is permitted with respect to projects in urban or rural poverty areas (section 1534(2)(C)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Withholding of Payments and Other Actions

Special Office: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which directs the Secretary to establish a permanent office in HEW to review compliance with the requirements applicable to the receipt of assistance under the Hill-Burton program (section 621(c)(1)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill but excludes the requirement for the establishment of a permanent office in HEW (section 1612).

Action by the Secretary and Others: The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which specifies that, if the Secretary finds an entity has failed to comply with assurances, he shall either withhold payments to such entity or effect compliance by other means authorized by existing law. It further provides that actions to enforce compliance may be brought by a person other than the Secretary, if the Secretary has either dismissed a complaint made to him by such person or has failed to act on such complaint within six months after the date on which it was filed with him (section 621(c)(2)(3)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill (section 1612).

Judicial Review

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which provides that any entity which will be adversely affected by an action taken by the Secretary to enforce the requirements applicable to receipt of assistance may seek review in the U.S. Court of Appeals of such action (section 622).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Waiver of Recovery Requirement

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which provides that the Secretary may waive the right of the United States, to recover assistance provided for a project, if:

- (1) The amount which could be recovered is applied to the development, expansion, or support of another health facility and such other health facility has been approved by the Statewide Health Coordinating Council as consistent with the applicable State health plan, or
- (2) The Secretary determines there is good cause for such waiver. Any such waiver may only apply to up to 90 percent of the cost of a project and only with respect to actions occurring either within one year before the date of enactment or after the date of enactment (section 623(b)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Records, Audits and Financial Statements: The Senate bill provides that entities which receive assistance are to keep records respecting such assistance and that the Secretary and the Comptroller General are authorized to have access to these records for the purpose of audit. Further, the bill requires that assisted entities are to file certain financial statements annually (section 624).

The House amendment provides only that assisted entities are to file certain financial statements annually (section 1535).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Technical Assistance

The Senate bill contains a provision, not included in the House amendment, which directs the Secretary to provide technical and other nonfinancial assistance to entities to assist them in developing applications for assistance. The Secretary is also required to inform eligible entities of the availability of assistance (section 626).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Federal Hospital Council

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which continues the existing Federal Hospital Council. The provision specifies that the Council is to approve the Secretary's general regulations under new title XV. The amendment further provides that if the Secretary disapproves a State plan, the Council, upon the request of the State Agency, shall review the decision of the Secretary and may approve the plan (sections 1503(b), 1532).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill but requires that the National Council on Health Planning and Development established in title XIV shall advise the Secretary with respect to programs under new title XVI.

Definitions

Construction: The Senate bill defines the term "construction" so as to include the cost of off-site improvements and the cost of the acquisition of land (section 627(1)).

December 19, 1974

The House amendment defines the term "construction" to exclude the cost of off-site improvements and, except with respect to public health centers, the cost of the acquisition of land (section 1534(9)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

Cost: The Senate bill defines the term "cost" to include any amount found by the Secretary to be attributable to expansion of the bed capacity of any facility (section 627(6)).

The House amendment contains no comparable exclusion (section 1534(10)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment with respect to new construction and the Senate bill with respect to modernization.

Title: The Senate bill defines the term "title" to mean an estate or interest which assures use and possession for a period of (1) not less than 20 years in the case of a grant, or (2) in the case of a loan or loan guarantee, the term of repayment of the loan made or guaranteed (section 627(9)).

The House amendment defines the term "title" to mean an estate or interest which assures use and possession for a period of not less than 25 years (section 1534(12)).

The conference substitute conforms to the Senate bill.

Federal Share: The Senate bill provides that, in the case of a project assisted under an allotment, the Federal share should be not more than the lesser of (1) two-thirds or (2) the State allotment percentage (if the percentage is less than 50 percent, the percentage shall be deemed to be 50 percent). The Senate bill also provides that in the case of a project in a rural or urban poverty area the Federal share may be 100 percent (section 627(11)).

The House amendment provides that in the case of a project to be assisted under an allotment the Federal share may not exceed two-thirds (section 1534(2)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment but retains the Senate provision allowing a 100 percent Federal share in poverty areas.

Authorizations of Appropriations

The Senate bill authorizes for allotments and project grants for fiscal year 1975, $125 million; fiscal year 1976, $125 million; and fiscal year 1977, $125 million. The Senate bill further provides that one-half of the sums appropriated are to be used for allotments and one-half are to be used for project grants. The bill further authorizes such sums for loans and interest subsidies as may be necessary for fiscal years 1975, 1976, and 1977 (section 625).

The House amendment authorizes for allotments for fiscal year 1975, $125 million; fiscal year 1976, $150 million; and fiscal year 1977, $175 million. The House amendment also authorizes $40 million in the aggregate for fiscal years 1975, 1976, and 1977 for capitalization of the loan and loan guarantees fund (sections 1513, 1522(e)(2)).

The conference substitute authorizes for allotments and project grants for fiscal year 1975, $125 million; fiscal year 1976, $130 million; and fiscal year 1977, $125 million. The conference substitute authorizes such sums as may be necessary for capitalization of the loan and loan guarantee fund. Twenty-two percent of any funds appropriated are to be used by the Secretary for project grants (section 1613).

TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, which provides that any State which in fiscal year 1975 or the next year has funds available for obligation from its allotments under part A of title VI of the PHS Act may in such year use for the proper and efficient administration during such year of its State plan approved under such part an amount of such funds which does not exceed 4 per centum of such funds or $100,000 whichever is less (section 5(b)).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment. The bill, as amended, includes authorizations for appropriations under existing sections 314(a), 314(b), 304, and existing title IX so as to insure a smooth transition to the new program. The conferees noted their expectation that the Secretary will impose conditions on grants made under this authority to insure that funds will be used to effect the transition rather than merely to continue the old programs. The conferees have not included an authorization for appropriations for fiscal 1975 under title VI and therefore do not contemplate that appropriations will be made under that authority pursuant to a continuing resolution.

ADVISORY COMMITTEES

The House amendment contains a provision, not included in the Senate bill, concerning advisory committees. Under the House amendment advisory committees established by or pursuant to the PHS Act, Developmental Disabilities Act, Community Mental Health Centers Act, and the Alcoholism Act are to terminate at such time as may be specifically prescribed by an Act of Congress enacted after the date of enactment (this waives application of the Federal Advisory Committee Act). The House amendment further provides that the Secretary of HEW is to report to the committees within one year after the date of enactment on the purpose and use of each such advisory committee and his recommendations respecting the termination of each such advisory committee (section 6).

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment.

RADIATION HEALTH AND SAFETY

The Senate bill provides that the PHS Act provisions respecting radiation safety are amended to add the following:

(1) A requirement that the Secretary of HEW issue criteria and standards for accreditation of schools with programs for training radiologic technicians, medical and dental practitioners, dental hygienists and dental assistants;

(2) A requirement that the Secretary of HEW issue criteria and standards for licensure of radiologic technologists;

(3) A requirement that the Secretary of HEW review and approve voluntary certification programs and license individuals certified under approved programs;

(4) A requirement that either the State adopt the Secretary's standards for accreditation or the Federal standards become applicable to the State. An adequate State program must be adopted in two years (or pursuant to the Secretary's extension, in four years);

(5) A requirement similar to item 4 for licensure of radiologic technologists;

(6) Authority for (A) grants to States or designated professional organizations to plan, develop or establish programs under this provision (two-thirds in the first year, one-third in the second year), and (B) grants to educational institutions;

(7) A requirement for annual review by HEW of accreditation and licensure programs;

(8) Prohibition on application of "potentially hazardous radiation" by unlicensed personnel effective three (or five) years after date of enactment; and

(9) Authority for district courts to restrain violations and to impose civil penalties of up to $1,000 per violation (section 403).

The House amendment contains no corresponding provision.

The conference substitute conforms to the House amendment except that conferees noted their intention to examine the subject in hearings during the next year.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1975

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, two appropriation items must be handled before adjournment; one of them is the final action on the continuing resolution and the other item is final action on the conference report on the urgent supplemental.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1178) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1975, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 3, after line 2, insert: "Assistance to Portugal and Portuguese colonies, $10,000,000;"

Page 3, line 4, strike out "and".

Page 3, line 6, strike out "and" and insert: "and";

Page 3, after line 6, insert: "Assistance to Palestinian Refugees, $10,000,000;"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of what transpired with respect to this bill.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I will say to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Gross) that we passed the continuing resolution, as the gentleman knows, and it went to the other body, and the other body added two amendments. One amendment is assistance to Portugal and Portuguese colonies, $10 million. I am sure the gentleman knows that we have an interest in the Azores and overflight rights.

December 19, 1974

The second amendment adopted by the other body provides $10 million for Palestinian refugees. This program has been authorized and has been in operation since about 1949. The sum provided in the other body is $10 million.

Otherwise the bill is in the identical form in which it was when it passed the House of Representatives yesterday.

Mr. GROSS. The $10 million for Palestinian refugees would be in addition to moneys already appropriated, would it not?

Mr. MAHON. It would, and it would go to a United Nations agency. As the gentleman knows, we have had a program for the Palestinian refugees for many years administered by the United Nations.

Mr. GROSS. The $10 million for Portugal, when was it discovered along the way that we ought to give $10 million to Portugal and an additional $10 million for the Palestinian refugees? Who decided this? Is it another of Secretary of State Kissinger's commitments that has just come to light?

Mr. MAHON. There was an authorization for aid to Portugal in the sum of $25 million, and the other body did not provide for the $25 million, but did appropriate $10 million. The President and the Secretary of State and the administration are very much concerned about the aid for Portugal. As I understand it from conversations with members of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, it was approved by a majority of the members of that committee.

Mr. GROSS. Was there any discussion in the conference when the $10 million was added as to the stability of the present Government of Portugal; whether the $10 million will, in a matter of a few days or a few weeks be handed over to the Communists who are threatening to take over Portugal?

Mr. MAHON. This would be for the period of the authorization and the authorization would extend for the fiscal year 1975.

Mr. GROSS. I wish that some committee other than the conference committee had provided some justification for the additional $20 million that goes into this bill for the purposes the gentleman has stated.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GROSS. Of course I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAHON. The matter was considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the amount was authorized by the House and Senate, and this is an appropriation of a portion of the money, less than half of the portion which was authorized for aid to Portugal. The gentleman knows of the very great significance over the years that Portugal has been to the United States for the planes that fly the Atlantic Ocean and land in the Azores.

Mr. GROSS. Those were the only amendments?

Mr. MAHON. Just the two amendments. The bill is identical otherwise.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate amendments just concurred in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend my own remarks and include certain tables and extraneous matter in regard to the appropriation work of the Congress and in regard to the appropriation matters being considered by the House tonight.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Department of Commerce
Economic Development Administration
Job opportunities program

Amendment No. 1: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which provides $125,000,000 to be derived by transfer from funds appropriated in this act for the Department of Labor, Temporary Employment Assistance. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees are in agreement that further consideration will be given to this matter with the convening of the Ninety-Fourth Congress.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 1180, MAKING URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1180) making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement. (For conference report and statement see prior proceedings of today's RECORD.)

AMENDMENT IN DISAGREEMENT

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment: on page 5, after line 18, insert:

December 19, 1974

CHAPTER V

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION
JOB OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM

For Job Opportunities Program assistance as authorized by title III of the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974, $250,000,000, to remain available until December 31, 1975: Provided, That this appropriation shall become available only upon enactment into law of H.R. 16596 or similar legislation by the Ninety-third Congress.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. MAHON

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAHON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

CHAPTER V

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION
JOB OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM

For Job Opportunities Program assistance as authorized by title III of the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974, $125,000,000, to be derived by transfer from funds appropriated in this Act to the Department of Labor under the heading "Temporary Employment Assistance", to remain available until December 31, 1975: Provided, That this appropriation shall become available only upon enactment into law of H.R. 16596 or similar legislation by the Ninety-third Congress.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the House that we passed yesterday, as the Members know, the urgent supplemental appropriation bill. It provided $1 billion for public service jobs and $3 billion for extended unemployment compensation and coverage. The other body added $250 million for the job opportunity program of the Economic Development Administration. In the conference it was agreed that we would not increase the overall total of money provided in the bill which was sent to the other body by the House but that we would authorize the transfer of $125 million from the $1 billion provided for public service jobs.

The conferees were unanimous in adopting this position. In other words, they made no change in the total appropriated in the bill but there is some change by way of permitting this sum of $125 million to be transferred in connection with the Economic Development Administration.

Mr. CEDERBERG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CEDERBERG. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say the minority concurs in the conference report. It was a unanimous report. I hope we can expedite the proceedings here.

Mr. MAHON. I thank the distinguished ranking minority member of the committee.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION OF THE FISCAL YEAR 1975 BUDGET

Mr. Speaker, it is customary at adjournment time for the Committee on Appropriations to report to the House on the appropriations business of the session. I shall not take the time of the House, due to the heavy legislative schedule, and under leave to extend shall insert such a statement.

APPROPRIATION BILLS REDUCED IN EXCESS OF $6.1 BILLION

Mr. Speaker, Congress, in its actions on 15 appropriation bills has reduced budget requests for fiscal year 1975 in excess of $6.1 billion.

OVERALL CONGRESSIONAL ACTION REDUCES SPENDING BY ABOUT $800 MILLION

Completed congressional action at this point in the session has resulted in an overall spending reduction of about $800 million.

The $6.1 billion congressional reduction of the budget in appropriation bills excludes the Foreign Assistance Appropriation and includes the effect of Conference action on the Agriculture-Environmental and Consumer Protection, Military Construction, and the 1975 Supplemental Appropriation bills. Through these actions, Congress has reduced the budget through the appropriation process in each of the last 22 years.

HOUSE AND SENATE ACTION ON APPROPRIATIONS BILLS

House-approved appropriation bills for fiscal year 1975 were under the budget by $4.8 billion. Senate-approved appropriation bills for fiscal 1975 were under the budget by $6.2 billion. The larger Senate reduction—a reversal of past Senate practice—of $1.4 billion was primarily in the Defense Appropriation Bill. In final congressional action 12 bills were reduced $6,576,100,000 and three bills were increased by $428,229,500 by the Congress. The largest item of increase was $400.5 million for education programs in the Supplemental Appropriation Bill. In a moment I shall include a table showing certain comparisons by bill.

PRIORITY SETTING IN APPROPRIATION BILLS
The total figures on congressional action on appropriation bills reflect literally thousands of changes in the budget, both increases and decreases. Thus it is easy to see that the Congress did set priorities through the appropriation process.

TOTAL SPENDING FOR FISCAL 1975

The President's February 4 estimate of $304.4 billion was revised upwards to $305.4 billion on May 30, and further increased to $305.8 billion on November 26. The November 26 reestimate was transmitted in a message which also included 6 different types of proposals to reduce spending by $4.6 billion. In the unlikely event that all the proposals are accepted, 1975 expenditures are estimated to be $302.2 billion.

The detail of the items revising the above estimates and proposed reductions follow:

[In billions]

1975 budget outlay estimate of February 4, 1974..... $304.4

Revisions reflected in Mid-session Budget Review of May 30:

Revisions reflected in President's message of November 26, 1974:

Reestimates:
Interest on the debt..... +1.5
Unemployment benefits..... +1.3

Deferral of use of funds previously provided..... -0.3

Subtotal, reduction proposals..... -4.6

1975 budget outlay estimate of November 26, 1974..... 302.2

IMPACT OF CONGRESSIONAL ACTIONS ON SPENDING

Mr. Speaker, the spending reduction that will occur because of the reductions in appropriation bills is $3.7 billion. This is partially offset by spending increases resulting from legislative action on non-appropriation matters in the amount of $2.2 billion. The major nonappropriation increases are as follows:

[In millions]

Unemployment benefits extension..... $667
Veterans educational benefits—extend delimiting period..... 618

December 19, 1974

[In millions]
Veterans educational benefits increase..... $613
Child nutrition and school lunch..... 120
Civil Service minimum retirement..... 157
Veterans disability benefits increase..... 134.8
Veterans pension increase..... 104.1
Railroad retirement benefits..... 121

Congressional inaction on budgeted legislative proposals would result in additional spending of $667 million. Thus, the total impact of congressional action on the budget is a reduction of about $800 million.

REESTIMATE OF UNIFIED BUDGET DEFICIT
As I noted earlier, the spending estimate of $302.2 billion assumes approval of all the spending reductions proposed billion, which could bring the unified in the President's message of November 26 (H. Doc. 93-398). The message points out that without approval of these proposals the deficit in the unified budget is projected at $13.8 billion. Of course, the real debt, when borrowing from surplus trust funds is excluded, would be $22.6 billion. A table showing this in more detail follows my remarks.

The message also pointed out that if tax proposals, including a 5 percent surtax, are not enacted there will be a loss of $1 billion. In addition, it was stated in the message that income from offshore oil lease sales may be $3 billion less than anticipated. These two items would result in reduced receipts totaling about $4 deficit to almost $18 billion, or a real or Federal debt of $26.8 billion.

A WORD OF CAUTION

It is clear from the figures I have cited that the budget is subject to constant, sometimes sharp change, even without considering the actions of Congress. As a result of economic conditions and otherwise, interest payments on the debt and the swing in revenues have caused a much greater change in the budget than the $800 million net decrease in total spending estimates during the year.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I include the comparative table I referred to earlier together with a table reflecting the budget surplus and deficit situation since fiscal year 1968:

Note: The Budget for 1975, as submitted Feb. 4, 1974, tentatively estimated total new budget authority for 1975 at $361,684,000,000 gross ($322,141,000,000 net of some $39,543,000,000 inter-fund and intergovernmental transactions and certain so-called proprietary receipts handled as offsets for budget purposes only). Of this total, an estimated $163,692,000,000 does not require current action by Congress; it involves permanent appropriations such as interest and various trust funds already provided in basic law. Virtually all of the remaining $197,992,000,000 is for consideration at this Session in the appropriation bills. About $9,024,000,000 of the $197,992,000,000 was shown in the January budget as being "for later transmittal" for supplemental requirements under present law, new legislation, and allowances for contingencies and civilian pay raises.

TESTING OF COMPUTER SYSTEMS

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to provide the House with a progress report on the activities of the Appropriations Committee and others in testing computer systems and other procedures. We believe these tools are necessary to meet the very rigorous requirements imposed upon us by the Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-344).

Even prior to the passage of that act, Mr. Speaker, we had begun a study in connection with the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970—the so-called LRA. Title II of that act requires that a budgetary and fiscal information system be constructed for the use of the Congress and other parts of the Federal Government. The General Accounting Office, the Office of Management and Budget, the Department of Treasury were charged under Title II of the LRA to develop and maintain such a budgetary and fiscal information system. As chairman of the Appropriations Committee I felt that it would be helpful to assist these organizations in laying the groundwork for this development. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the General Accounting Office has issued several reports on their progress in this task and each and every one speaks to the importance of having available to the Congress budgetary and fiscal data. These reports also allude to the importance of procedures for tracking and keeping status on the appropriations process and other spending authorizations as they proceed through the Congress.

We decided, therefore, to cooperate as closely as we could with the Comptroller General, acting as the agent for the Congress, and his staff as steps were being taken to outline the requirements for this system. One of the first tasks begun was to undertake the development of more useful classifications of Government activities upon which to base budget justifications. Over the years, budget justifications for various programs have grown extremely detailed and specific—as required by members of the Appropriations and other committees in order to properly evaluate these activities and to make the crucial judgments that must be made about funding and other resource requirements. Many Government activities have become quite diverse and some have enlarged in scope. Some programs with similar objectives or goals are operated in different parts of the Federal bureaucracy: housing, research and development, economic and community development are but a few examples. A more standard classification of these programs may show unnecessary duplication, or cases where programs can be combined to operate more effectively in the public interest. General Accounting Office staff, therefore, have been working with several subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations to explore possibilities that meaningful groupings of these Government programs and activities might be organized. Thus far, the GAO has been conducting this classification work on appropriation accounts and programs only in limited areas.

During my testimony last year before the Rules Committee concerning the then impending Budget Control legislation that had been recommended by the Joint Study Committee on Budget Control, I announced our intention to begin a study on the running budget. This is an effort, Mr. Speaker, to develop techniques to make long range estimates of outlay expenditures on the so-called mandated earned rights programs such as: Social security, unemployment insurance compensation, civil service retirement, veterans benefits, and so forth. Since these programs and others similar to them comprise about 40 percent of governmental outlays in any one fiscal year and continue to grow at a rapid pace, I feel it is important to improve our capabilities to estimate the future year effects of these programs on the Budget and the national economy. To conduct this study we have enlisted the aid of the General Accounting Office and the Congressional Research Service. Staff reorganizations and new responsibilities placed upon the General Accounting Office because of the Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 have severely impeded their participation in this study. I am pleased to report, however, that the Congressional Research Service has been successful in developing some long range forecasting techniques that show a great deal of promise. We hope that the GAO, CRS, and Office of Management and Budget will continue to share in the development of the running budget procedure.

Another of our ongoing activities deserves mention here, Mr. Speaker. This past July, Chairman WAYNE HAYS and I agreed to begin experimenting with the use of the computer operated by the Committee on House Administration with assistance provided by the House Information Systems staff. We also enlisted the aid of staff from the General Accounting Office and I asked Mr. Staats, the Comptroller General, to assist us. Thus far, these offices have provided an initial capability of handling, by computer techniques, the Federal budget as it is presented by the President each year. We have also developed a computerized data base of fiscal year 1975 budget data to which we gain access through remote computer terminals. The House Information Systems groups, the GAO and Appropriations Committee staff are currently developing procedures to utilize this computer terminal system for the production of report tables that are placed into the appropriation bill reports that accompany each of our bills each year as they are considered by the House. These reports provide information on the current year enactment of budget authority, the President's request for new funding and actions taken by the House and Senate. Our objective in these efforts is to use the computer to assist us in producing and maintaining these comparative statements of budget authority for each of the 13 appropriation subcommittees and the bills they report each session beginning with the 94th Congress.

Although these efforts require much additional developmental work, we have already begun another parallel activity relating to budget control. We feel, Mr. Speaker, that the computerization of the budget data necessary to produce our report tables will also be useful in keeping track of the targets set by the House and Senate Budget Committees as required under the Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974. We have held discussions with staff of the House Budget Committee and others and hope that our joint efforts will result in further development of these analytical and mechanical capabilities.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Chairman HAYS and his staff for the very fine assistance and technical expertise they have contributed to these activities. In addition I want to thank the Comptroller General, for the efforts of his staff in collaborating with those that are working on these projects.

The final task I want to report on, Mr. Speaker, involves the use of computer terminals to assist us in the very complicated process of tracking the various actions under title X of Public Law 93-344. This is the Impoundment Control section of the law, the one that involves proposals from the President for the rescission or deferral of spending. We are using the computers to provide a useful source of information for Members and their offices and others on the status of rescission and deferral actions. Although still in a developmental stage we have begun to use some outputs from this system and have provided examples to interested parties in both the House and Senate.

Mr. Speaker, the task of guardianship of the Federal purse strings is an awesome one. It grows more complicated with each passing day, with each new program that is authorized, with each new problem which is identified and which the Government seeks to apply a solution either through legislation or rearranging on-going programs. In any case, these always lead to new spending requirements. It is in deciding on how the spending will be done that the real task of setting national priorities is carried out. The task will never become easy. We feel that the analytical and computer techniques that I have enumerated will reduce the magnitude of the task.

If computers can help us deal with the increasing complexities of the budget in a timely and orderly manner then their value will be important indeed. I am hopeful the efforts I have outlined here today will bring us closer to achieving those goals. At the very least we have taken a firm first step.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on House Joint Resolution 1180, just agreed to, and that I may insert certain extraneous and tabular material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? There was no objection.

FORMER CONGRESSMAN FRANCIS EUGENE WORLEY

(Mr. MAHON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all my Texas colleagues, I find it my sad duty to report to the House the passing on December 17, this week, of Judge Francis Eugene Worley, formerly a Member of Congress from Texas and chief judge of the U.S. Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Judge Worley was known to one and all as "Gene." I include the following biographical data in regard to the career of this distinguished west Texan:

Worley, Francis Eugene, a Representative from Texas; born in Lone Wolf, Kiowa County, Okla., October 10, 1908; moved to Shamrock, Tex., in 1922; attended the public schools, the Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College at College Station in 1927 and 1928, and the law school of the University of Texas at Austin 1930-1935; was admitted to the bar in 1935 and commenced practice in Shamrock, Tex.; member of the State house of representatives from 1935 to 1940, when he resigned, having been elected to Congress; served as a lieutenant commander in the United States Navy from December 1941 to August 1942, while a Member of Congress; elected as a Democrat to the Seventy-seventh and to the four succeeding Congresses and served from January 3, 1941, until his resignation, effective April 3, 1950; appointed an associate judge of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, Washington, D.C., and served from April 4, 1950, to May 4, 1959; appointed chief judge May 4, 1959 and retired June 26, 1972.

Mr. Speaker, Gene Worley was elected to Congress in 1940 and he was reelected for four additional terms. He left Congress to accept appointment as a member of the U.S. Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, being appointed by President Truman on March 9, 1950. He was appointed chief judge by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1959 and served on the court until 1972 when he assumed senior judge status.

Mr. Speaker, I have held the Worleys in great esteem and affection throughout the years. Judge Worley and I represented adjoining districts throughout his congressional tenure, and we were warm political and personal friends.

Judge Worley was one of the most delightful and able men I have ever encountered. He was much beloved by his west Texas constituents, and he was much beloved by his innumerable friends in the Washington area.

Mr. Speaker, I join with others in paying tribute to the memory of Gene Worley and expressing deepest sympathy to his lovely wife, Ann, and to all the family.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I join my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. MAHON), in mourning the passing of our wonderful friend, Judge Francis Eugene Worley, who was a great jurist, a great lawyer, a great legislator, and a fine and wonderful family man.

We all miss him. We will miss him very much and we extend our sympathies and our condolences to his lovely wife, Ann, and to his fine children.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may revise and extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD on the life, character, and public service of the late Judge Francis Eugene Worley.

December 19, 1974

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EMERGENCY UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 17597) to provide a program of emergency unemployment compensation, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 11, strike out line 3 and insert: "of" but only with respect to compensation that would not have been payable if the State law's provisions as to the State "on" and "off" indicators omitted the 120 percent factor as provided for by Public Law 93-368 and by section 106 of this Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the acting chairman whether or not the amendment is germane and to explain the amendment.

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAUMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ULLMAN. The extended and emergency unemployment insurance bill, passed by both the House and the Senate, contains a provision permitting State laws to substitute for a 2-year period 4 percent for the current 4.5-percent insured unemployment rate as a national "on" indicator for paying extended benefits. The bill also allows State laws to waive the 120-percent factor in State "on" indicators.

As an inducement for State legislatures to adopt the first of these options—the reduction in the National "on" indicator to 4 percent—the bill also provides that extended benefits payable as a result of choosing this option would be 100 percent reimbursed to the State funds from the Federal trust fund in the same manner as the bill's emergency benefits. As you know, the costs of extended benefits are normally borne 50 percent by the State funds and 50 percent by the Federal trust fund. The intent of the bill is to refrain from imposing upon State funds any unusual or extraordinary costs attributable solely to the expressed will of the Congress with respect to the national "on" indicator for paying extended benefits. It was not intended that the States' obligation to bear 50 percent of the cost of paying extended benefits be shifted to the Federal Government when its extended benefits would have been or could have been payable in any case and without regard to the reduction in the national "on" indicator.

Taken together, however, the provisions open a potential "loophole" in which a State, by taking the option with respect to the national "on" indicator but not the option to waive the 120-percent factor in the State "on" indicator could shift to the Federal trust fund its normal obligation to finance one-half the cost of extended benefits and nullify Congressional intent in this area. Admittedly, this is extremely unlikely to happen in the first year of the program, but it is a definite possibility in the second year when unemployment can be expected to decline.

The amendment added by the Senate to the otherwise identical version of the bill passed by the House merely closes this potential "loophole" and makes it clear that extended benefits will be reimbursed 100 percent only when attributable solely to the reduction in the national "on" indicator. It assures equity among the States by foreclosing the possibility that one or two States, by manipulation, could obtain an unfair advantage over other States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHNEEBELI. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Oregon with respect to H.R. 17597 as amended by the other body.

The amendment simply closes what might be considered a "loophole" and does not alter the intent of our committee in developing this legislation.

As passed by the House, the bill included a provision lowering the national "trigger" permitting States to pay extended unemployment compensation benefits when the insured jobless rate reached 4 percent, instead of 4.5 percent. The measure also permitted States to waive the so-called 120-percent factor in paying extended benefits.

To encourage State legislatures to adapt their laws with respect to the lower national "trigger," the House bill provided that any extended benefits which would be paid because of the change in the "trigger" would be reimbursed 100 percent to State funds from the Federal Unemployment Compensation Trust Fund, in the same way as the emergency benefits' costs provided in the legislation would be reimbursed.

The intent was to avoid imposing on the States any unusual costs resulting from congressional action with respect to the national "trigger" for paying extended benefits. There was no intention to shift to the Federal Government the States' obligation to bear 50 percent of the cost of extended benefits when those benefits would have been payable anyway, regardless of the lowering of the national "trigger."

The provisions would have opened a possible "loophole," however, allowing a State to adopt the new national "trigger," but not to waive the 120-percent factor, and in so doing to shift to the Federal Trust Fund its obligation to finance half the cost of the extended benefits. In the other body, this "loophole" would be closed. The amendment should assure that extended benefits' costs would be reimbursed fully only when they were attributable solely to lowering of the national "trigger."

In all other respects, Mr. Speaker, H.R. 17597 as passed by the other body is identical to the bill which we passed on December 12, 1974. Therefore, I urge the House to agree to this amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Any such extension shall be for a period of not more than 1 year, and not more than 2 extensions shall be granted with respect to any property.

"(4) TERMINATION OF GRACE PERIOD IN CERTAIN CASES.—Any foreclosure property shall cease to be such on the first day (occurring on or after the day on which the real estate investment trust acquired the property) on which—

December 19, 1974

"(A) a lease is entered into with respect to such property which, by its terms, will give rise to income which is not described in subsection (c)(3) (other than subparagraph (F) of such subsection), or any amount is received or accrued, directly or indirectly, pursuant to a lease entered into on or after such day which is not described in such subsection.

"(5) TAXPAYER MUST MAKE ELECTION.—Property shall be treated as foreclosure property for purposes of this part only if the real estate investment trust so elects (in the manner provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) on or before the due date (including any extensions of time) for filing its return of tax under this chapter for the taxable year in which such trust acquires such property. Any such election shall be irrevocable."

"(4) INCOME FROM FORECLOSURE PROPERTY.—

"(A) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There is hereby imposed for each taxable year on the net income from foreclosure property of every real estate investment trust a tax determined by applying section 11 to such income as if such income constituted the taxable income of a corporation taxable under section 11. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the surtax exemption shall be zero.

"(B) NET INCOME FROM FORECLOSURE PROPERTY.—For purposes of this part, the term 'net income from foreclosure property' means the excess of—

"(1) gain from the sale or other disposition of foreclosure property described in section 1221(1) and the gross income for the taxable year derived from foreclosure property (as defined in section 856(e)), but only to the extent such gross income is not described in subparagraph (A), (B), (C), (D), or (E) of section 856(c)(3), over

"(2) the deductions allowed by this chapter which are directly connected with the production of the income referred to in clause (1)."

"(d) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

"(1) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 856(c) (relating to limitations) are each amended by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (D), by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (E), and by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) income and gain derived from foreclosure property (as defined in subsection (e))."

"(2) Section 857(a)(1) (relating to requirements applicable to real estate investment trusts) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) the deduction for dividends paid during the taxable year (as defined in section 561, but determined without regard to capital gains dividends) equals or exceeds the sum of—

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 421) to amend the Tariff Schedules of the United States to permit the importation of upholstered furniture, upholsterer's regulated needles, and upholsterer's pins free of duty, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 421) to amend the tariff schedules relating to the duty-free importation of upholstered furniture, upholsterer's regulated needles and pins, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute amendment. The committee of conference has agreed to a substitute for both the Senate amendment and the House bill.

The differences between the text of the House bill, the Senate amendment thereto, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by reason of agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting, clarifying, and other technical changes.

The bill as passed by the House amends the Tariff Schedules relating to the duty-free importation of upholsterer's regulated needles and pins. The Senate amendment and section 1 of the conference substitute make no change in this provision of the House bill.

The House bill contains no provisions corresponding to the following provisions of the Senate amendment.

CLERICAL AMENDMENT

Section 2 of the Senate amendment contains a clerical amendment relating to references to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

The conference substitute adopts this provision of the Senate amendment.

ONE-YEAR EXTENSION OF AMORTIZATION PROVISIONS

Section 3 of the Senate amendment extends for one additional year through December 31, 1975, four 5-year amortization provisions. These four provisions are: (1) rehabilitation of low and moderate income housing; (2) pollution control facilities; (3) railroad rolling stock; and (4) certain coal mine safety equipment.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 4 of the Senate amendment.

ACCUMULATED VACATION PAY

Section 4 of the Senate amendment provides for a permanent solution for the treatment of accrued vacation pay. The Congress has been continuing the temporary treatment in this area pending a permanent solution. The last extension expired in 1973. This treatment allows an employer to take a deduction in the case of accrued vacation pay which, except for contingencies (such as termination of employment before vacation time arrives), has already been earned by the employee. However, to prevent a doubling up of deductions in the case of an employer who is newly going on to the accrual pay system, this provision of the bill provides that the employer may not currently take a deduction for contingent amounts which accrued in years prior to the year in which he elected this treatment. This amount is held in suspense and is available as a deduction in subsequent years only to the extent that the end of the year liability for accrued vacation pay (on the new basis) is less than the beginning amount held in the suspense account.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 4 of the Senate amendment.

EXTENSION OF REAL ESTATE DEPRECIATION RECAPTURE RULES ON FEDERALLY, STATE AND LOCALLY-ASSISTED HOUSING PROJECTS

Section 5 of the Senate amendment repeals the provision of present law (Revenue Act of 1971) requiring the application of the class life system to real property. Present law provides that after 1973 the class life system (sometimes referred to as the asset depreciation range or ADR provision) is to apply to real estate. The Treasury has not as yet devised a satisfactory class life system for real estate. The Senate amendment provides that the ADR system is not to apply to real estate until such time as the Treasury Department develops regulations on a class life system for real estate.

Section 5 of the Senate amendment also extends the real estate recapture rules on certain housing projects. The effect of the recapture rules is to tax the gain from such sales as ordinary income (rather than capital gain) to the extent of the deductions taken under accelerated depreciation in excess of straight-line depreciation. In the case of Federal, State, and locally assisted housing projects (which are limited as to the rate of return on the investment, such as the FHA 221(d)(3) and the FHA 236 programs) where the construction or acquisition occurs before January 1, 1975, there is to be full recapture during the first 20 months of holding and this is decreased by one percent a month thereafter (with no recapture at the end of 10 years). In the case of most housing, there is full recapture during the first 100 months after which there is a decrease of the amount recaptured by one percent a month (with no recapture after 16 2/3 years). These general recapture rules apply to the governmentally assisted housing in the case of construction and acquisitions in 1975 and later years. The Senate amendment extends for one more year, until January 1, 1976, the shorter recapture period for the governmentally assisted housing projects.

The conference substitute adopts section 5 of the Senate amendment.

REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS: TREATMENT OF FORECLOSURE PROPERTY

Section 6 of the Senate amendment deals with some of the tax problems of real estate investment trusts. Under present law, a real estate investment trust (REIT), if it derives most of its income from real estate investments (and meets certain other requirements), is not taxed on its distributed income but instead is allowed "pass through" tax treatment whereby the income is taxed to the shareholders and not the trust. A series of revisions had been proposed for the tax treatment of real estate investment trusts to take account of current practices and economic problems faced by the industry. The Senate amendment deals only with the most pressing current problems of the industry, those relating to the tax treatment of foreclosure property. The Senate amendment, in general, provides that a REIT is not to be denied the "pass through" treatment because of income it receives from foreclosure property. In general, under the Senate amendment the REIT will be taxed as a corporation on the income from the foreclosure property and will have a period of time to sell the foreclosure property or convert it into qualified property.

Section 6 of the Senate amendment also takes into account the difficulty a REIT faces as a result of the provision of present law prohibiting it from holding any property for sale to customers. In this regard, the Senate provision modifies the rule to a limited extent to allow a REIT to hold foreclosure property for sale.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 6 of the Senate amendment.

INCREASE IN INTEREST CHARGED AND PAID IN CONNECTION WITH DEFICIENCIES, ETC.

Section 7 of the Senate amendment increases the interest rate paid by taxpayers on tax deficiencies, and by the government on tax overpayments, from 6 percent to 9 percent per year effective for obligations outstanding on July 1, 1975. In addition to updating the tax interest at this time, the amendment provides a procedure whereby the interest rate in the future will be kept up to date with changes in the money market rates. It provides that the tax interest rate is to be adjusted as the prime rate quoted by commercial banks to large business changes. The government interest rate is to be 90 percent of this prime rate but to be at the nearest whole interest rate and not to be changed more than once every two years.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 7 of the Senate amendment.

INTEREST ON CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS

Section 8 of the Senate amendment deals with the tax treatment of student loan funding programs. Present law exempts interest paid on most State and local governmental obligations from Federal income tax. The provision adds a new category to the list of obligations, the interest from which is exempt from Federal income tax. The category added is qualified scholarship funding bonds where the student loan programs are financed, at the request of governmental authorities even though the bonds do not constitute a State or local government bond. In addition, the provision makes it clear that student loan incentive payments made by the Commissioner of Education under the Emergency Insured Student Loan Act of 1969 are not to result in the treatment of the obligations as arbitrage bonds and in this manner disqualify the financing of these student loan programs for tax-exempt status.

The conference substitute does not include the provisions of section 8 of the Senate amendment. The managers have been advised by the Treasury Department that new regulations under section 103(a) will be promulgated shortly. These regulations will provide for the exemption of interest on obligations issued to finance student loan programs where such obligations are authorized pursuant to State law and are issued by nonprofit higher educational authorities at the request of a State or local governmental unit.

The managers understand that in certain cases even if these obligations qualify under section 103 they nevertheless would not be exempt because they would be treated as arbitrage bonds (under sec. 103(d) of the Code). These obligations are treated as arbitrage bonds if the interest to be paid by students on their loans together with any incentive payments represent a yield that may be materially higher than the yield on the bonds issued to finance the student loan program. Many of these obligations may be treated as arbitrage bonds because certain student loan incentive payments made by the Commissioner of Education (HEW) to cover the expenses of the student loan program are taken into account in computing the yield (and other amounts appropriated under State law may be so taken into account). The temporary regulations provide that the yield on the proceeds from the acquired program obligations may not exceed the yield produced over the term of the obligations issued to finance student loans by more than 1 1/2 percent or such higher percentage as is shown to be necessary to cover administrative expenses.

The managers further understand that when final Treasury regulations are issued under section 103(d) they will provide that student loan incentive payments made by the Commissioner of Education under the Emergency Insured Student Loan Act of 1969 or amounts appropriated under State law to cover the expenses of the student loan program are not to be taken into account for purposes of determining the yield under section 103(d). However, any incentive payments are to reduce any stated percentage limitation (or any higher allowance for costs) which may otherwise be permitted under Treasury regulations for such programs.

INTEREST ON CERTAIN DEPOSITS, ETC., IN THE UNITED STATES

Section 9 of the Senate amendment deals with the exclusion from gross income of interest on U.S. bank deposits held by nonresident aliens. Under present law, interest received by nonresident aliens from deposits with banks, with savings and loan institutions or other similar associations, and from amounts held by an insurance company under an agreement to pay interest is exempt from the 30-percent withholding tax on income or gain not effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States. This provision, however, expires as of December 31, 1975. The Senate amendment extends the termination of this provision for one additional year to December 31, 1976.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 9 of Senate amendment.

EXCLUSION OF INTEREST ON CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS ISSUED PRIOR TO 1971

Section 10 of the Senate amendment provides that (1) where companies had issues of indebtedness outstanding on the date of the enactment of the interest equalization tax, (2) which were guaranteed by U.S. persons, (3) which were treated under that Act as debt obligations of a foreign obligor, (4) the obligation does not have a maturity date exceeding 15 years as of June 30, 1974, and (5) the obligation has been purchased by one or more underwriters with the purpose of distribution through resale, then the interest on the obligations is to be treated as foreign source income and as a result exempt from the 30-percent withholding tax in the case of interest payments to nonresident aliens. In addition, these obligations are to be exempt from U.S. estate tax when held by nonresident aliens. Since the interest equalization tax (under which these obligations were exempted from withholding tax) is no longer in effect, the only way finance subsidiaries can continue to avoid payment of the withholding tax is for their U.S. parent company to assume these obligations. However, this would cause the finance subsidiaries to realize income from the discharge of indebtedness. For this reason, these types of obligations were made exempt from the 30-percent withholding tax.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 10 of the Senate amendment.

TAX ON CERTAIN INCOME OF POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

Section 11 of the Senate amendment provides that political parties or committees (and separate campaign funds) are to be taxed on investment income and on income from a trade or business, but not on campaign contributions they receive. In addition, tion, a $100 minimum is to be provided before any tax is payable on investment or business income. Generally, the political parties and committees are to be taxed as corporations but the surtax exemption is not to be allowed and the dividends received deduction is not to be available.

December 19, 1974

Generally, newsletter committees (and separate funds) are to be treated for tax purposes in the same manner as political campaign committees. That is, contributions received by the newsletter committees are not to be taxable to the individual or committee nor are the funds spent for a newsletter to be deductible. However, to the extent of any investment income or business income in the case of these funds, tax is to be imposed. Should funds be withdrawn from newsletter funds for personal purposes, however, tax is to be imposed at that time.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 11 of the Senate amendment, with an amendment to clarify the provision regarding separate segregated campaign funds established by exempt organizations to conform to State laws. In such a case, where appropriate under the safeguards of the laws of the relevant State, a separate segregated fund is permitted to have dues monies transferred to it by the exempt organization to be used for political campaign purposes, without those funds being treated as expenditures made by that exempt organization.

EXTENSION OF EXISTING CREDIT AND DEDUCTION PROVISIONS FOR POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO CONTRIBUTIONS FOR NEWSLETTERS; 2-YEAR RULE FOR ANNOUNCING CANDIDACY

Section 12 of the Senate amendment extends the existing credit and deduction provisions for political contributions to contributions to newsletter funds.

Under the provisions of the Senate amendment, the limited credit or deduction allowed under present law for campaign contributions to individual candidates (and parties and committees) would be available only if a person has announced that he is a candidate for office in the year of the contribution. The provisions allow this credit or deduction in the year before a person announces his candidacy.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 12 of the Senate amendment.

INCREASE IN POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS CREDIT AND DEDUCTIONS

Section 13 of the Senate amendment increases the maximum credit and deduction for contributions to candidates for public office. The maximum credit is increased from $12.50 ($25 in the case of a joint return) to $25 ($50 in the case of a joint return). The maximum deduction is increased from $50 ($100 in the case of a joint return) to $100 ($200 in the case of a joint return).

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 13 of the Senate amendment.

TRANSFER OF APPRECIATED PROPERTY TO POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

Under section 14 of the Senate amendment, appreciated property transferred by a taxpayer to a political party or committee, if occurring after May 7, 1974, is to be taxed to the donor at the time of the transfer. A ruling already issued by the Internal Revenue Service taxes appreciation in property given before that date to the political party or committee receiving the property. However, this ruling is not to apply before August 2, 1973.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 14 of the Senate amendment.

GIFT TAX NOT TO APPLY TO CONTRIBUTIONS TO POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS

Section 15 of the Senate amendment provides that gift taxes are not to apply to contributions to political parties or committees.

The conference substitute adopts the provisions of section 15 of the Senate amendment.

EXEMPTION OF INTEREST ON CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL OBLIGATIONS

Section 16 of the Senate amendment exempts from Federal taxation the interest on obligations issued by the American Falls Reservoir District to finance and construct a dam and related facilities to replace the existing American Falls Dam of the Minidoka project, Idaho-Wyoming, pursuant to a contract with the Secretary of Interior under authority contained in the Act of December 28, 1973 (87 Stat. 904).

The conference substitute does not adopt the provisions of section 16 of the Senate amendment. The conferees were informed that there are several electric power companies and regional power systems that face this type of situation in which tax-exempt bonds may not be issued to finance electric generating facilities for an area that extends beyond two contiguous counties. The conferees believed that they would not be taking a constructive step now to enact this provision when a generalized approach is the proper course of action to follow. Therefore, the conferees have agreed that their respective committees will re-examine the present situation to provide a more general solution.

The action by the conferees should not be construed as a determination of the merits of the project or the issue of the exemption from taxation. However, the mention in the Internal Revenue Code of special situations is not favored. Moreover, the matter was not the subject of hearings in either the Senate or the House of Representatives. On the other hand, we understand the sense of urgency that prompted the offering of an amendment. We are informed that a delay of weeks now could mean a delay of one year in the construction schedule. As a result, whatever position it believes it should take, we urge the Internal Revenue Service to act expeditiously.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIR

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that all the Members of the House have been invited to attend the swearing in of Vice President designate Nelson A. Rockefeller, to be held in the Senate Chamber at 10 p.m. tonight.

Members should enter the Senate Chamber through the south door at the end of the corridor leading from this Chamber to the Senate. The Chair desires further to announce that we will continue the business of the House.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

The SPEAKER. As far as the Chair is concerned, it does not make any difference.

AUTHORIZING ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL TO PERMIT CERTAIN TEMPORARY AND PERMANENT CONSTRUCTION WORK ON CAPITOL GROUNDS

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate Joint Resolution (S.J. Res. 262) authorizing the Architect of the Capitol to permit certain temporary and permanent construction work on the Capitol Grounds in connection with the erection of an addition to a building on privately owned property adjacent to the Capitol Grounds.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have just a brief explanation of where this building is and what this is all about and the cost of the project.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, for 7,300 days or for 20 years, I have had the privilege of serving in this great body, and this is the last time I will have the distinct privilege and satisfaction of yielding to my able friend and neighbor from Iowa—Mr. GROSS.

I will be happy to explain this Senate joint resolution. This resolution will not cost the Government a penny. It was requested by the Architect of the Capitol to hold the Government free and harmless because the International Brotherhood of Teamsters is building an addition on to their headquarters building just north of the Capitol, and if they should disturb the sidewalk or any Government property in front of the building, the Government would be protected.

December 19, 1974

This is a resolution our friend from Iowa can support because it calls for no Federal expenditures.

Mr. GROSS. It calls for no Federal expenditures?

Mr. GRAY. None whatsoever.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman will not be offended if I refer to him as Santa Claus?

Mr. GRAY. I will accept that in the spirit of Christmas.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. Res. 262

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. (a) The Architect of the Capitol is hereby authorized to permit (1) the performance within the United States Capitol Grounds of excavation, temporary construction, or other work, that may be necessary for the construction of an addition to the national headquarters building, and other related facilities, of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers on D Street Northwest between New Jersey Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest commencing at the westerly end of the existing headquarters building and extending westward to a point approximately thirty-five feet from the intersection of New Jersey Avenue and D Street Northwest, in the District of Columbia; and (2) the use of Capitol Grounds property located north of the street curb on D Street Northwest between New Jersey Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest, for purposes of ingress and egress to and from the building site during such construction. No permanent construction shall extend into the United States Capitol Grounds except as otherwise provided in subsection (b) of this section.

(b) The Architect of the Capitol is hereby authorized to permit the following improvements of a permanent nature to be made on Capitol Grounds property located north of the street curb at D Street Northwest between New Jersey Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest:

(1) the extension of existing sewers and the building of new manholes under the northern sidewalk of D Street Northwest between New Jersey Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest, to accommodate service laterals from the proposed new building addition, and the installation of necessary laterals;

(2) the installation of service laterals from existing water mains under the northern sidewalk of D Street Northwest between New Jersey Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest, as may be required for the proposed new building addition;

(3) the removal and replacement of existing sidewalks located on Capitol Grounds property north of the curbline on D Street Northwest between New Jersey Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest, including the removal and replacement of a driveway into an existing parking lot, to serve building facilities after construction of the proposed new building addition;

(4) the planting of additional trees between the street curb and the new sidewalk along D Street Northwest between New Jersey Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest, of a number and kind prescribed and selected by the Architect of the Capitol;

(5) the regrading and resodding of the remaining area between the street curb and the new sidewalk north on the curbline on D Street Northwest between New Jersey Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest; and

(6) the plugging and filling of any portion of abandoned sewer and the repair and/or alteration of any active sewer which extend into the Capitol Grounds on D Street Northwest between New Jersey Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest and which are encountered or damaged during excavation for, and construction of, the proposed new building addition.

SEC. 2. The United States shall not incur any expense or liability whatsoever, under or by reason of this joint resolution, or be liable under any claim of any nature or kind that may arise from anything that may be connected with or grow out of this joint resolution.

SEC. 3. No work shall be performed within the Capitol Grounds pursuant to this joint resolution until the Architect of the Capitol shall have been furnished with such assurances as he may deem necessary that all areas within such grounds, disturbed by reason of such construction, shall, except as otherwise provided in this joint resolution, be restored to their original condition without expense to the United States; and all work within the Capitol Grounds herein authorized shall be performed under conditions satisfactory to the Architect of the Capitol.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANK M. SCARLETT FEDERAL BUILDING IN BRUNSWICK, GA.

Mr. GINN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2807) to name the Federal building, U.S. post office, U.S. courthouse, in Brunswick, Ga., as the "Frank M. Scarlett Federal Building."

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

S. 2807

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Federal building, United States post office, United States courthouse, at 801 Gloucester Street, Brunswick, Georgia, shall hereafter be known and designated as the "Frank M. Scarlett Federal Building." Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, record, or other paper of the United States to such building shall be held to be a reference to the "Frank M. Scarlett Federal Building."

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAKING IN ORDER REPORTS FOR COMMITTEE ON RULES AND AUTHORIZING SPEAKER TO DECLARE RECESSES

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 1520) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

H. Res. 1520

Resolved, That it shall be in order at any time during the balance of this session to consider reports from the Committee on Rules as provided in clause 23, rule XI, except that the provision requiring a two-thirds vote to consider said reports is hereby suspended during that period; and it shall also be in order during the balance of the session for the Speaker to declare recesses subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTI), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution actually provides that the Speaker may provide a recess at any time during the balance of this session. It also would permit the Committee on Rules to bring a resolution from the committee to the floor immediately and call it up and pass it with a simple majority, simply suspending the requirement for a two-thirds majority, without a 24-hour layover, for the balance of this session.

Those are the two very simple things that are accomplished if this resolution is passed.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the passage of the resolution.

Mr. LATTI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from California has adequately explained this rule. We are trying to adjourn this Congress. Without this resolution that might be impossible. We have in this resolution the suspension of a two-thirds vote required to take up the rule on the same day it is reported. This would waive that rule and also permit the Speaker to call a recess subject to the call of the chair.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTI. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BAUMAN. Is this not the identical waiver of rules that was turned down on Monday when we voted on the resolution which contained this very same power?

Mr. LATTI. If the gentleman will yield, I will say this is exactly the same resolution that was rejected by the House on Monday. But this happens to be Thursday, and we are nearing adjournment of this Congress.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LATTI. Yes, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAUMAN. The gentleman recalls that I and others made reference to last December, when this power was used to block the energy bill. Has the leadership on this side received any sort of assurance that this power will not be abused if we pass this resolution?

December 19, 1974

Mr. LATTI. I will say to the gentleman that I would not have voted for this resolution if I thought the power would be abused.

I refuse to yield further, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 276, nays 58, not voting 100, as follows:

HOOVER INSTITUTION ON WAR, REVOLUTION, AND PEACE

Mr. NEDZI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 17580) to recognize the 50 years of extraordinary and selfless public service of Herbert Hoover, including his many great humanitarian endeavors, his chairmanship of two Commissions of the Organization of the Executive Branch, and his service as 31st President of the United States, and in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth on August 10, 1974, by providing grants to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 17580

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) in order to establish an appropriate memorial to the late President Herbert Hoover, the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to make grants, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace, Stanford University, Stanford, California.

(b) No grant may be made under this Act for any fiscal year unless—

(1) the Secretary determines that the total of such grants for that year will not exceed the total amount of gifts, bequests, and devises of money, securities, and other property, made after the date of enactment of this Act, for that year for the benefit of the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace; and

(2) the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace furnishes to the Secretary such information at such times and in such manner as he may require.

(c) Grants made under this Act may be used for the construction of a new educational building to be used by the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace, and for the equipment of such building.

Sec. 2. (a) The Congress finds that, if a facility constructed with the aid of any grant under this Act is used as an educational facility for twenty years following completion of such construction, the public benefit accruing to the United States from such use will equal in value the amount of such grant or grants. The period of twenty years after completion of such construction shall, therefore, be deemed to be the period of Federal interest in such facility for the purposes of this Act.

(b) If, within twenty years after completion of construction of an educational facility which has been constructed in part with a grant or grants under this Act—

(1) the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace (or its successor in title or possession) ceases or fails to be a nonprofit institution; or

(2) the facility ceases to be used as an educational facility, unless the Secretary determines that there is good cause for releasing the institution from its obligation, the United States shall be entitled to recover from such institution (or successor) an amount which bears to the then value of the facility the same ratio as the amount of such Federal grant or grants bore to the development cost of the facility (as determined by the Secretary) financed with the aid of such grant or grants. Such value shall be determined by agreement of the parties or by action brought in the United States district court for the district in which such facility is situated.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), no facility constructed with assistance under this Act shall ever be used for religious worship or a sectarian activity or for a school or department of divinity.

Sec. 3. The Comptroller General of the United States, or any of his duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace that are pertinent to the grant received.

Sec. 4. The Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace shall, annually, prepare and furnish to the President and the Congress a report on the expenditure of funds received by the Institution in the previous fiscal year during the period for which grants are made under this Act.

Sec. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for making grants in accordance with this Act amounts not to exceed $7,000,000. Funds appropriated pursuant to this Act shall be available without fiscal year limitation, for the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending five years after such date.

Sec. 6. Grants made pursuant to this Act shall be the sole Federal memorial to the late President Herbert Hoover.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. NEDZI) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. NEDZI).

Mr. NEDZI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, Herbert Hoover devoted a major portion of his adult life to Government service, philanthropy and humanitarian endeavors. Prior to becoming the 31st President, he was Secretary of Commerce, administered food relief during the Boxer rebellion, organized the Commission for Relief in Belgium, served as World War I Food Administrator and was delegate to the Paris Peace Conference. Following his term as President, he headed an economic commission to Germany and was chairman of two highly successful bipartisan commissions on reorganization of the executive branch of Government.

H.R. 17580 would authorize the Secretary of Treasury to make grants to the Hoover Institution, a part of Stanford University, for the construction of a new memorial building to be used by the institution and for the equipment of such building. These grants would be made over a 5-year period in amounts matching private gifts made to the institution for any purpose in a given year. In no event would the aggregate amount of the Federal grants exceed $7 million.

The bill contains a recapture provision by which the United States would be entitled to recover from the institution or its successor an amount which bears to the then-value of the facility the same ratio as the amount of Federal grants bore to the total construction cost, if within 20 years after construction either of these two situations occur: if the institution ceases to be a nonprofit enterprise or the facility ceases to be used for educational purposes unless the Secretary determines that there is good cause for releasing the institution from this obligation.

The bill expressly prohibits the use of this facility for religious worship, sectarian activity, or for a department of divinity.

The facility to be constructed with the aid of such grants to be the sole Federal memorial to Herbert Hoover. Since the building would be located on Stanford University land and would be a part of the institution, the Federal Government would have no maintenance responsibility.

The Comptroller General would have access to any papers or records of the institution that are pertinent to any grants made. Further, the institution would be requested to furnish an annual report to the President and the Congress relative to the expenditure of grant funds received.

The Senate bill authorized the grants not to exceed $5 million for these purposes. The Committee on House Administration has endorsed an amendment to increase this authorization to $7 million, to reflect inflation since the Senate bill was drafted more than 2 years ago. The institution has advised that construction could not begin before 15 months after enactment and that total construction costs are expected to exceed $7 million by a substantial amount. Accordingly, the institution has pledged to make up the deficit itself; presumably this can be done with private gifts.

The Hoover Institution was founded by Herbert Hoover in 1919. It has come to be renowned as an educational and research organization.

Favorable reports on the bill have been received from the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Office of Management and Budget. The committee agrees that these Federal grants would make possible a fitting memorial to former President Hoover. While the institution is obviously well established and on sound footing, the bill's matching and recapture provisions will insure maximum private participation and the appropriate use of the facility once constructed.

It is altogether appropriate that President Hoover be memorialized by Federal participation in the construction at the institution which he founded over a half century ago and which has become a renowned international study center. Accordingly, I urge favorable consideration of H.R. 17580.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the able gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Gross).

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. I understand it would provide $7 million for seed money, probably for the construction of a building at

December 19, 1974

Stanford University to bear the name of Herbert Hoover. I am convinced that if Herbert Hoover were alive today, the situation being what it is in this country financially, with inflation eating the eyeballs out of this country, that he would say that this could be postponed to a better day. That is what ought to happen.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DELLENBACK).

Mr. DELLENBACK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this is the third time this week that the House has discussed memorials to former Presidents. Yesterday, the House approved a $30 million Truman Memorial Scholarship program. Earlier this year another authorization and appropriation was made for Eisenhower College. And today my hope is that we will overwhelmingly approve a memorial for former President Hoover.

Each Member probably has different ideas about what a Presidential memorial should be. Let me briefly share mine:

First, I believe a memorial should ideally represent something unique—a one-of-its-kind—and not something that can be found in any number of places.

Second, I believe a memorial should ideally benefit individuals in some concrete way—and I mean more than something only to be looked at or to take pictures of.

Third, I believe a memorial should ideally contribute to the advancement of our national heritage and culture.

Fourth, I believe a memorial should ideally require only a one-time Federal expenditure—which amount should be reasonable in light of similar memorials—so that the Government is not held responsible for open-ended, recurring financial obligations.

The proposed Hoover memorial qualifies on each of these points. We are proposing to match private funds with Federal dollars to help construction and equip a new educational building at the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace.

The Hoover Institution is unique. It was founded in 1919 by Herbert Hoover himself. It has become one of the world's great centers of research on the political, economic, and social problems of man in the 20th century. Over 1¼ million bound volumes, 2,400 journals, and 3,500 archival collections of documents and personal papers are housed in the existing two buildings at the Hoover Institution. Last year, more than 1,100 scholars from 38 States and 27 foreign countries spent a few weeks or months at the institution. It has certainly proven successful in its commitment to carry out Mrs. Hoover's wishes that the work of the institution "promote peace" and "be of benefit to the American people and to mankind." The proposed new structure will allow the Hoover Institution to expand its valuable services to many others.

Mr. Speaker, this proposal has been carefully considered in both Houses. It passed the Senate last year. It will not cost the Federal Government anything this year and probably nothing next year as well. Once construction is underway, Federal dollars will match private contributions, but in no event will the Federal contribution exceed a total of $7 million. And that can be appropriated over 5 years. So we are not talking here about a big "budget busting" or "deficit spending" item. It is one of the most reasonable proposals for a Presidential memorial we are likely to see.

In summary, I have heard no substantive argument against this proposal which convinces me that we should either delay or disapprove this proposal. It has the endorsement of the administration and the leadership on both sides of the aisle in the House and in the Senate. It has the full concurrence of the Hoover family. I urge that we give this proposal our overwhelming, bipartisan approval.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. GUBSER).

Mr. GUBSER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

This is the season for rejoicing. Christmas is almost here. Adjournment is with us. We will soon be back with our families, and as much as I have enjoyed hearing my stentorian tones echo through this Chamber the last 22 years, this is the last speech my colleagues are going to hear from me.

I want to thank the Speaker. I want to thank the minority leader. I want to thank everybody, the majority, and all the people who worked so diligently for this House, for being so kind to me for 22 years, and for putting up with me. I only ask one last favor: I hope the Members unanimously support the bill before us.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further request for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NEDZI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON).

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Those who were present during the discussion of the Truman memorial bill will recall the support we received from the other side, particularly from the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DELLENBACK) and, through his leadership many of his colleagues.

I would like to say that while a vote for this modest sum of money for an educational purpose would not necessarily constitute an endorsement of all of the economic policies of President Hoover, it would certainly reflect on my part at least a tremendous respect for his leadership during World War I and shortly following the war in bringing food and clothing to millions of people in Europe—and for that matter, Russia. During my tenure in the food for peace program of the 1960's, I studied his achievement, and it was remarkable.

I believe he actually set the pace for the kind of organized effort the world is going to have to mount today, given the spectre of hunger that stalks humanity.

I think in recognition of this, as well as of the interest and support demonstrated by so many of our friends on the other side of the aisle for President Truman's memorial we can wholeheartedly reciprocate by voting affirmatively on this bill.

Mr. NEDZI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further request for time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. NEDZI) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill H.R. 17580.

The question was taken.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Iowa will look around the room, he will see that a quorum is present.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I am going to do it anyway.

Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order a quorum is not present.

I suggest the Speaker look around.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. Two hundred twenty-four Members are present, a quorum.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. NEDZI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 1418) to recognize the 50 years of extraordinary and selfless public service of Herbert Hoover, including his many great humanitarian endeavors, his chairmanship of two commissions of the organization of the executive branch, and his service as 31st President of the United States, and in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth on August 10, 1974, by providing grants to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1418

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) in order to establish an appropriate memorial to the late President Herbert Hoover, the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to make grants, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace, Stanford University, Stanford, California.

(b) No grant may be made under this Act for any fiscal year unless—

(1) the Secretary determines that the total of such grants for that year will not exceed the total amount of gifts, bequests, and devises of money, securities, and other property, made after the date of enactment of this Act, for that year for the benefit of the

December 19, 1974

Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace; and

(2) the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace furnishes to the Secretary such information at such times and in such manner as he may require.

(c) Grants made under this Act may be used for the construction of a new educational building to be used by the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace, and for the equipment of such building.

Sec. 2. (a) The Congress finds that, if a facility constructed with the aid of any grant under this Act is used as an educational facility for twenty years following completion of such construction, the public benefit accruing to the United States from such use will equal in value the amount of such grant or grants. The period of twenty years after completion of such construction shall, therefore, be deemed to be the period of Federal interest in such facility for the purposes of this Act.

(b) If, within twenty years after completion of construction of an educational facility which has been constructed in part with a grant or grants under this Act—

(1) the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace (or its successor in title or possession) ceases or fails to be a nonprofit institution, or

(2) the facility ceases to be used as an educational facility, unless the Secretary determines that there is good cause for releasing the institution from its obligation, the United States shall be entitled to recover from such institution (or successor) an amount which bears to the then value of the facility the same ratio as the amount of such Federal grant or grants bore to the development cost of the facility (as determined by the Secretary) financed with the aid of such grant or grants. Such value shall be determined by agreement of the parties or by action brought in the United States district court for the district in which such facility is situated.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), no facility constructed with assistance under this Act shall ever be used for religious worship or a sectarian activity or for a school or department of divinity.

Sec. 3. The Comptroller General of the United States, or any of his duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace that are pertinent to the grant received.

Sec. 4. The Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace shall, annually, prepare and furnish to the President and the Congress a report on the expenditure of funds received by the institution in the previous fiscal year during the period for which grants are made under this Act.

Sec. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for making grants in accordance with this Act amounts not to exceed $5,000,000. Funds appropriated pursuant to this Act shall be available without fiscal year limitation, for the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending five years after such date.

Sec. 6. Grants made pursuant to this Act shall be the sole Federal memorial to the late President Herbert Hoover.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. NEDZI

Mr. NEDZI. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Nedzi moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of S. 1418 and insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H.R. 17580, as passed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "To recognize the 50 years of extraordinary and selfless public service of Herbert Hoover, including his many great humanitarian endeavors, his chairmanship of two Commissions of the Organization of the Executive Branch, and his service as 31st President of the United States, and in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth on August 10, 1974, by providing grants to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 17580) was laid on the table.

AMENDING TITLE 18 OF THE UNITED STATES CODE CONCERNING LOTTERIES

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 1492 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. Res. 1492

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6668) to amend title 18 of the United States Code to permit the transportation, mailing, and broadcasting of advertising, information, and materials concerning lotteries authorized by law and conducted by a State, and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to commit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California (Mr. SISK) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1492 provides for an open rule with 1 hour of general debate on H.R. 6668, a bill to amend title 18 of the United States Code to permit the transportation, mailing, and broadcasting of advertising, information, and materials concerning lotteries authorized by law and conducted by a State.

H.R. 6668 permits the broadcasting of advertising, lists of prizes, or information concerning a State-conducted lottery by a radio or television station licensed to operate in a State conducting a lottery under the authority of State law. The bill also permits the mailing of newspapers published in the State containing advertisements, lists of prizes, or information concerning a State-conducted lottery and permits the transportation or mailing of tickets and other materials concerning a State-conducted lottery within the State to addresses within the State.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of House Resolution 1492 in order that we may discuss and debate H.R. 6668.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I support this rule.

As previously explained, House Resolution 1492 provides for 1 hour of general debate on H.R. 6668—the State lotteries bill, and that the bill will be open to all germane amendments.

The purpose of H.R. 6668 is to amend existing law to permit the broadcasting of advertising, lists of prizes, or information concerning a State-conducted lottery, by radio or TV station licensed to a location in a State conducting a lottery under State law. The bill would also allow the mailing of newspapers published in the State containing advertisements, lists of prizes, or information concerning a State-conducted lottery. Also permitted is transportation or mailing of tickets and other material concerning a State lottery within the State to addresses within the State.

At present, there are 13 States which have State lotteries. They are Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island. Twenty-five States have authorized lotteries conducted by someone other than a State government. They are: Arizona, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Tennessee, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin. At least 11 of these States have a licensing requirement.

The committee report states that it is not possible to predict what impact or change these provisions will have in terms of cost to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 17409, REDUCING CRIME BY SPEEDY TRIALS

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 1494 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. Res. 1494

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 17409) to assist in reducing crime and the danger of recidivism by requiring speedy trials and by strengthening the supervision over persons released pending trial, and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule by titles instead of by sections. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit. After the passage of H.R. 17409, the Committee on the Judiciary shall be discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 754, and it shall then be in order in the House to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the said Senate bill and insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H.R. 17409 as passed by the House.

December 19, 1974

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida is recognized for 1 hour.

MR. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the able gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTI), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1494 provides for an open rule with 1 hour of general debate on H.R. 17409, the Speedy Trial Act of 1974.

House Resolution 1494 provides that the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule by titles instead of by sections. House Resolution 1494 also provides that after the passage of House Resolution 17409, the Committee on the Judiciary shall be discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 754, and it shall then be in order in the House to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of S. 754 and insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in House Resolution 17409 as passed by the House.

House Resolution 17409 provides that all defendants charged with criminal offenses be brought to trial within 100 days of arrest or service of a summons, subject to certain exclusions for necessary delay. The time limits are divided into three segments; the period between arrest and filing of an indictment or information would be 30 days, the period between indictment and arraignment, 10 days, and the period between arraignment and trial, 60 days. These time standards do not become effective until the fifth year after enactment and an intervening 4-year, phase-in period is provided in order to give the courts adequate time to increase their resources and to determine how best to alleviate problems in each district.

H.R. 17409 creates, on a demonstration basis in 10 judicial districts, pretrial service agencies to supervise, control, and provide supportive services for defendants released on bail. The Chief Justice of the United States will choose the 10 districts. At the direction of the court in the 10 districts, the agencies are to collect and verify information pertaining to eligibility of defendants for release, supervision, and control of released persons. All information collected by the agencies is to be used for the determination of bail.

H.R. 17409 provides that, in the interests of a speedy trial, no continuance shall be granted for reasons of general court congestion, or lack of diligent preparation, or failure to obtain available witnesses on the part of the attorney for the Government.

MR. SPEAKER, passage of this bill will implement and revitalize the sixth amendment right to a speedy trial. I urge the adoption of House Resolution 1494 in order that we may discuss, debate, and pass H.R. 17409.

MR. SPEAKER, this legislation is recommended by the House Select Committee on Crime. After extensive hearings, it was unanimously reported out by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and his subcommittee, and by the Judiciary Committee.

It is very meritorious legislation. I am sure the House would want to adopt it, and I urge adoption of the rule so that the House can debate and, I hope, adopt this speedy trial bill brought out by the Judiciary Committee.

MR. LATTI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the House the need for a change in our rules. I think we ought to do away with glorified titles of legislation and designate them by numbers only, because once again we not only have a bill mistitled, but I think it is misleading.

I think we ought to take a look at it before we act on it, because instead of calling this the Speedy Trial Act of 1974, it probably should be referred to as the "Let the Criminal Go Act of 1974."

What are we talking about in this legislation? We are talking about letting criminals go who are not brought to trial within a period of 100 days, with prejudice—with prejudice. That means we cannot retry them. I do not think the American people want this type of legislation. They do not want these criminals out in society to redo their crimes. To call this a Speedy Trial Act of 1974, I think, does this House an injustice.

When this legislation comes up, I certainly hope, and I have heard some rumors to the effect that an amendment will be adopted which will provide that if we let these criminals go, they are going to go without prejudice, meaning that they can be retried.

I also hasten to state that the Attorney General of the United States is opposed to this legislation. He submitted a letter dated December 9, 1974, that I am going to submit for the RECORD so that the Members can read it in its entirety. He is the chief legal officer of the United States, and he is opposed to this legislation.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D.C., December 9, 1974.

HON. RAY J. MADDEN,
Chairman, Committee on Rules, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I would like to express to you the strenuous and urgent opposition of the Department of Justice to H.R. 17409, the "Speedy Trial Act of 1974." As you know, the Senate version of this bill (S. 754) passed the Senate on July 29, 1974, and the House Judiciary Committee favorably reported out an amended version, H.R. 17409, on November 27, 1974.

The Department of Justice has supported and will continue to support all meaningful proposals to achieve speedy justice. We have, however, opposed both S. 754 and H.R. 17409 because of this Department's sincere apprehension over the potential adverse impact of this legislation on the criminal justice system. I urge the Rules Committee to consider the following reasons for our opposition to the legislation:

(1) Under Rule 50(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure all district courts now have "speedy trial" plans including rules relating to time limits within which procedures prior to trial, the trial itself, and sentencing must take place. According to the Administrative Office of U.S. Courts, Rule 50(b) is working.

(2) Mandatory dismissal of criminal cases not tried within 60 days can only serve to injure the public by releasing persons charged with crime without an adjudication. This injures the public not only because the persons may pose a danger to the public welfare, but also because it undermines the public's confidence in the criminal justice system to see persons charged with crimes released without trial.

(3) There are no provisions in the bill for additional judges, prosecutors or public defenders. No new judgeships have been created in more than four years although the Judicial Conference in September of 1972 recommended the creation of 51 judgeship positions in 32 separate districts.

(4) The bill, because of its complicated structure and vague terminology (e.g., "complex cases," "ends of justice") will result in numerous interpretation hearings and appeals, further clogging the courts.

(5) Short time limits in the bill and the burdens placed upon the Government to justify continuances of the time limits will discourage U.S. Attorneys from bringing complicated cases—white collar criminals may go uncharged and the tendency will be to prosecute only the most serious crimes.

(6) Our system of criminal justice presently depends on the guilty pleas. Under this bill, criminals who would ordinarily plead guilty may insist on jury trial to take advantage of the automatic dismissal after sixty days. The system would be overwhelmed and wholesale dismissals would follow.

Although we continue to oppose this bill, we support the following amendments:

(1) Amendment to delete the provisions making dismissal under the bill a bar to further prosecutions. Deletion of this language would still result in dismissal of cases for failure to meet time limits but would permit charges to be brought under a new information or indictment. Under this amendment a judge could still dismiss with prejudice for denial of Sixth Amendment rights to speedy trial or dismissal with prejudice where he believes circumstances warrant a dismissal.

(2) Amendments adding thirty days to the time permitted between arrest and indictment and between arraignment and the beginning of trial. The shorter time limits now in the bill are unreasonably short and could result in an undue number of dismissals. The longer time limits would still allow less than six months total time for the processing of a case, excluding allowable delays now provided for in the bill.

(3) Amendment establishing a "Readiness Rule" whereby dismissal will occur where undue delay is attributable to the federal prosecutor. The prosecutor would be required to be ready for trial within sixty days of arraignment of the defendant; if the government is not ready, a day certain would be set for trial and the case would be dismissed if the government was not ready at that time. This rule is already working in the 2nd Circuit.

The House version differs in material respects from the Senate version. Most notably, H.R. 17409 provides for the dismissal of cases with prejudice for failure to meet the time limits for indictment or for trial of defendants, this sanction to be in effect after the fourth year following enactment. S. 754 has no prejudicial dismissal provision but rather provides for a seven year phase in period, with dismissal without prejudice after the fourth year and a dismissal without prejudice with a special burden on the government for prosecution after the sixth year following enactment. The House version contains a "Judicial Emergency" section (Section 3174) whereby time limits between indictment and trial may be suspended for one year in the event of an emergency, whereas the Senate version has no such provision. The Senate version contains a provision establishing appropriated pilot planning districts which has been deleted in the House version. Other differences between the two bills concern time periods for filing indictments, planning process administration, and pretrial service administration.

The Department of Justice recently invited comments from U.S. Attorneys on S. 754, the Senate-passed version of the Speedy Trial Act of 1974. Responses were received from all 94 districts and the U.S. Attorneys unanimously expressed their opposition to enactment. I am enclosing a copy of their comments.

I believe this matter should be deferred until the next Congress when time and circumstances will permit an orderly resolution of these most important issues. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

WM. B. SAXBE,
Attorney General.

This just is not another piece of legislation to be hurriedly passed in the closing days of this session. Your wife, your sister, your child, or even you, may be subjected to the horrors which might come about by the passage of this legislation called the Speedy Trial Act of 1974.

MR. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

MR. LATTI. I will be happy to yield to my friend from Iowa.

MR. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is making an excellent statement.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

MR. GROSS. I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

THE SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Without objection, a call of the House is ordered.

There was no objection.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Members failed to respond.

[Roll No. 718]

THE SPEAKER. On this rollcall 260 Members have recorded their presence by electronic device, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PROVIDING FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 17409, REDUCING CRIME BY SPEEDY TRIALS

THE SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER).

MR. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire has the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTI) concluded?

MR. LATTI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON).

MR. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to point out to the Members of the House before they vote on the rule on this very important matter that it is an open rule. With respect to the letter which my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Ohio read from, signed by the Attorney General, Mr. Saxbe, objecting to this legislation, he stated that—

The Department of Justice supports an amendment to Section 3162 of H.R. 17409 deleting the bar to further prosecution following dismissal under that section.

He then went on to say:

Adoption of this amendment by the Congress would resolve the most significant difficulty in this legislation, and would enable the Department to effectively administer the provisions of H.R. 17409.

I merely wish to advise the Members of the House that the gentleman from Maine, a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, is prepared to offer an amendment that in effect would give the trial judge discretion to dismiss one of these cases either with or without prejudice, thereby, it seems to me, curing the principal objection set forth in the letter by the Attorney General. I think it is important that the House should have that information. I hope the Members will support the adoption of the resolution.

MR. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I am told that the committee will accept the amendment, although the gentleman from California or others may wish to comment on that.

MR. DENNIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

MR. LATTI. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

MR. DENNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding from talking to the authors of the bill that the only objection is that on the adoption of the rule that further debate on the bill and opportunity for amendment will be deferred until tomorrow.

Am I correctly advised on that, if the gentleman knows?

MR. LATTI. As far as I know, that is correct.

MR. DENNIS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield still further, the reason I am interested in this is I have an amendment also to present to the bill in addition to that discussed by the gentleman from Illinois. My amendment does not go to the principle of the bill, but it would extend the time limit, and it is offered mostly in the interest, in my judgment, of defendants, and people who are trying to act as attorneys for defendants, and who may have several cases in court, and in my judgment under this bill the time pressure will be so severe that they cannot take care of them.

I want to have ample opportunity to present that amendment tomorrow and discuss it. I am not opposed to the rule as long as that happens.

I thank the gentleman.

MR. LATTI. I would like to say in response to what the gentleman just said, I am unalterably opposed to this rule unless we have a statement by the author of this bill—I am prepared to yield to him at this time—as to whether he will accept those amendments.

I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

MR. CONYERS. I will say to my friend on the Committee on Rules, and more recently on our Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTI), that I would hesitate to try to commit myself to an extension of the time period that has been suggested by the gentleman from Indiana. I would like to have, as he indicated, ample time for us to discuss his amendment and examine it. I think it would be improper for us to try to dispose of that tonight under consideration of the rule.

December 19, 1974

Mr. LATTI. Let me ask the gentleman specifically on the matter of discussing these indictments with or without prejudice.

Mr. CONYERS. The matter we have gone through numerous times, as the gentleman knows. The American Bar Association has endorsed dismissal with prejudice since 1967, but this subcommittee, because of the pressures that have been raised by the distinguished gentleman and others, is prepared, with some reluctance I must say, to yield to that amendment. We would like to have ample discussion to make clear to the Members what we are doing and why, because since this bill does not take operational effect until 1980, there may be time during the planning provisions of the Speedy Trial Act for us to consider it.

So my answer is, reluctantly, yes, we will accept the amendment.

Mr. LATTI. I thank the gentleman. Mr. WIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTI. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WIGGINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

This bill generated controversy in the committee. It again centered around the dismissal-with-prejudice bit. The bill as reported out with prejudice language requires a dismissal with prejudice if the time limits extended under the bill are not met. If that language remains in the bill, the bill should be defeated, in my opinion. There is agreement on both sides that the dismissal-with-prejudice language will be removed. If that language is in fact removed, as I expect it to be, then perhaps 90 percent of the legitimate objection to the bill will have been resolved and the bill on balance becomes worthy of the Members' support.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, tonight the rule should be adopted, and any reservation in the Members' minds concerning the propriety of a dismissal with or without prejudice should not prevent them from voting affirmatively on the rule. We will resolve that matter tomorrow.

Mr. LATTI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. DEVINE).

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule on this legislation. The legislation is of such importance that I do not think we should try to get into it during the atmosphere we have when we are trying to wind up the 93d Congress. This is something I think we should have studied consideration on to have proper consideration of amendments.

The Members know the inclination of the courts these days is to become completely preoccupied with the rights of the wrongdoers to the exclusion of the rights of the honest, hard-working, tax-paying citizens of the United States who are the victims of crime. This is another indication of the do-gooders, the bleeding hearts, the hand-wringers, the deepbreathers, showing their concern for the poor, downtrodden, oppressed criminal.

Let us legislate in an atmosphere of calm and quiet emotions, defeat this rule, and get at it in the 94th Congress.

Mr. LATTI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. DU PONT).

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. Speaker, did I hear the gentleman from Michigan say this bill will not take effect until 1980?

Mr. CONYERS. If the gentleman will yield, I thank the gentleman for raising that question. They call this the Speedy Trial Act of 1974. In fact, it is the Speedy Trial Act of 1980.

Mr. DU PONT. Will the gentleman tell me, if it is not going to take effect until 1980, why it is so important to pass this legislation at 10 o'clock on the last night of the last session in 1974?

Mr. CONYERS. Because we have been trying to consider a Speedy Trial Act since 1967. It has been examined for 3 years and we are trying to start it off 1 year, as soon as we can, so we will not be waiting until 1981 or 1982 for the Speedy Trial Act.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say with all the majority the gentleman is going to have on his side in the next Congress he ought to be able to get it through then.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

(Mr. O'NEILL asked and was given permission to speak out of order.)

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield and I ask permission to speak out of order so I may announce the legislative program, and later I will ask unanimous consent that when we adjourn tonight, we adjourn to meet at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

This is the legislation which we have remaining, and tomorrow we will have:

H.R. 17409, speedy trials, under an open rule, with 1 hour of debate;

H.R. 10710, the trade bill conference report;

H.R. 17045, the social services conference report;

H.R. 421, upholstery needles conference report;

H.R. 6668, State lotteries, under an open rule, with 1 hour of debate;

H.R. 14449, Office of Economic Opportunity conference report;

H.R. 620, additional Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs conference report;

H.R. 14791, wild and scenic rivers conference report;

S. 2994, health planning conference report;

H.R. 13296, maritime authorization conference report;

Then we will have under suspensions:

S. 3289, Kaniksu National Forest; and H.R. 17346, historic properties.

Actually that is a very small schedule, and of course we must say we had not anticipated this rule would take as much time or we would not have brought it up.

In view of the fact that the Members want to get off to the Senate, we will take no longer with this.

REQUEST FOR ADJOURNMENT TO 9 O'CLOCK ON FRIDAY, DECEMBER 20

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 221, nays 69, answered "present" 2, not voting 142, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 17045, SOCIAL SERVICES AMENDMENTS OF 1974

Mr. ULLMAN submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 17045) to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the States:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 93-1643)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the States, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Social Services Amendments of 1974".

PART A—SOCIAL SERVICES AMENDMENTS

SEC. 2. The Social Security Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE XX—GRANTS TO STATES FOR SERVICES

"APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZED

"Sec. 2001. For the purpose of encouraging each State, as far as practicable under the conditions in that State, to furnish services directed at the goal of—

(1) achieving or maintaining economic self-support to prevent, reduce, or eliminate dependency,

(2) achieving or maintaining self-sufficiency, including reduction or prevention of dependency,

(3) preventing or remedying neglect, abuse, or exploitation of children and adults unable to protect their own interests, or preserving, rehabilitating, or reuniting families,

(4) preventing or reducing inappropriate institutional care by providing for community-based care, home-based care, or other forms of less intensive care, or

(5) securing referral or admission for institutional care when other forms of care are not appropriate, or providing services to individuals in institutions, there is authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States under section 2002.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"Sec. 2002. (a) (1) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary shall, subject to the provisions of this section and section 2003, pay to each State, for each quarter, an amount equal to 90 per centum of the total expenditures during that quarter for the provision of family planning services and 75 per centum of the total expenditures during that quarter for the provision of other services directed at the goal of—

(A) achieving or maintaining economic self-support to prevent, reduce, or eliminate dependency,

(B) achieving or maintaining self-sufficiency, including reduction or prevention of dependency,

(C) preventing or remedying neglect, abuse, or exploitation of children and adults unable to protect their own interests, or preserving, rehabilitating, or reuniting families,

(D) preventing or reducing inappropriate institutional care by providing for community-based care, home-based care, or other forms of less intensive care, or

(E) securing referral or admission for institutional care when other forms of care are not appropriate, or providing services to individuals in institutions, including expenditures for administration (including planning and evaluation) and personnel training and retraining directly related to the provision of those services (including both short- and long-term training at educational institutions through grants to such institutions or by direct financial assistance to students enrolled in such institutions). Services that are directed at these goals include, but are not limited to, child care services, protective services for children and adults, services for children and adults in foster care, services related to the management and maintenance of the home, day care services for adults, transportation services, training and related services, employment services, information, referral, and counseling services, the preparation and delivery of meals, health support services, and appropriate combinations of services designed to meet the special needs of children, the aged, the mentally retarded, the blind, the emotionally disturbed, the physically handicapped, and alcoholics and drug addicts.

"(2) (A) No payment with respect to any expenditures other than expenditures for personnel training or retraining directly related to the provision of services may be made under this section to any State for any fiscal year in excess of an amount which bears the same ratio to $2,500,000,000 as the population of that State bears to the population of the fifty States and the District of Columbia. The Secretary shall promulgate the limitation applicable to each State for each fiscal year under this paragraph prior to the first day of the third month of the preceding fiscal year, as determined on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available from the Department of Commerce.

"(B) Each State with respect to which a limitation is promulgated under subparagraph (A) for any fiscal year shall, at the earliest practicable date after the commencement of such fiscal year (and in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary), certify to the Secretary whether the amount of its limitation is greater or less than the amount needed by the State, for uses to which the limitation applies, for such fiscal year and, if so, the amount by which the amount of such limitation is greater or less than such need.

"(C) If any State certifies, in accordance with subparagraph (B), that the amount of its limitation for any fiscal year is greater than its need for such year, then the amount of the limitation of such State for such year shall be reduced by the excess of its limitation amount over its need, and the amount of such reduction shall be available for allotment as provided in subparagraph (D).

"(D) Of the amounts made available, pursuant to subparagraph (C), for allotment for any fiscal year, the Secretary (1) shall allot to the jurisdiction of Puerto Rico $15,000,000, to the jurisdiction of Guam $500,000, and to the jurisdiction of the Virgin Islands $500,000, which shall be available to each such jurisdiction in addition to amounts available under section 1108 for purposes of matching the expenditures of such jurisdictions for services pursuant to sections 3(a) (4) and (5), 403(a) (3), 1003(a) (3) and (4), 1403(a) (3) and (4), and 1603(a) (4) and (5): Provided, That if the amounts made available, pursuant to subparagraph (C), are insufficient to meet the requirements of this clause, then such amounts as are available shall be allotted to each of the three jurisdictions in proportion to their respective populations.

"(3) No payment may be made under this section to any State with respect to any expenditure for the provision of any service to any individual unless—

"(A) the State's services program planning meets the requirements of section 2004, and

"(B) the final comprehensive annual services plan in effect when the service is provided to the individual includes the provision of that service to a category of individuals which includes that individual in the descriptions required by section 2004(2) (B) and (C) of the services to be provided under the plan and the categories of individuals to whom the services are to be provided.

The Secretary may not deny payment under this section to any State with respect to any expenditure on the ground that it is not an expenditure for the provision of a service or is not an expenditure for the provision of a service directed at a goal described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(4) So much of the aggregate expenditures with respect to which payment is made under this section to any State for any fiscal year as equals 60 per centum of the payment made under this section to the State for that fiscal year must be expended for the provision of services to individuals—

"(A) who are receiving aid under the plan of the State approved under part A of title IV or who are eligible to receive such aid, or

"(B) whose needs are taken into account in determining the needs of an individual who is receiving aid under the plan of the State approved under part A of title IV, or who are eligible to have their needs taken into account in determining the needs of an individual who is receiving or is eligible to receive such aid, or

"(C) with respect to whom supplemental security income benefits under title XVI or State supplementary payments, as defined in section 2007(1), are being paid, or who are eligible to have such benefits or payments paid with respect to them, or

"(D) whose income and resources are taken into account in determining the amount of supplemental security income benefits or State supplementary payments, as defined in section 2007(1), being paid with respect to an individual, or whose income and resources would be taken into account in determining the amount of such benefits or payments to be paid with respect to an individual who is eligible to have such benefits or payments paid with respect to him, or

"(E) who are eligible for medical assistance under the plan of the State approved under title XIX.

"(5) No payment may be made under this section to any State with respect to any expenditure for the provision of any service to any individual—

"(A) who is receiving, or whose needs are taken into account in determining the needs of an individual who is receiving, aid under the plan of the State approved under part A of title IV, or with respect to whom supplemental security income benefits under title XVI or State supplementary payments, as defined in section 2007(1) are being paid, or

"(B) who is a member of a family the monthly gross income of which is less than the lower of—

"(i) 80 per centum of the median income of a family of four in the State, or

"(ii) the median income of a family of four in the fifty States and the District of Columbia, adjusted, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, to take into account the size of the family, if any fee or other charge (other than a voluntary contribution) imposed on the individual for the provision of that service is not consistent with such requirements (including requirements prohibiting the imposition of any such fee or charge) as the Secretary shall prescribe.

programs established pursuant to such plan, conduct such audits of State programs established under the plan approved under this part as may be necessary to assure their conformity with the requirements of this part, and, not less often than annually, conduct a complete audit of the programs established under such plan in each State and determine for the purposes of the penalty provision of section 403(h) whether the actual operation of such programs in each State conforms to the requirements of this part;

"(5) assist States in establishing adequate reporting procedures and maintain records of the operations of programs established pursuant to this part in each State;

"(6) maintain records of all amounts collected and disbursed under programs established pursuant to the provisions of this part and of the costs incurred in collecting such amounts;

"(7) provide technical assistance to the States to help them establish effective systems for collecting child support and establishing paternity;

"(8) receive applications from States for permission to utilize the courts of the United States to enforce court orders for support against absent parents and, upon a finding that (A) another State has not undertaken to enforce the court order of the originating State against the absent parent within a reasonable time, and (B) that utilization of the Federal courts is the only reasonable method of enforcing such order, approve such applications;

"(9) operate the Parent Locator Service established by section 453; and

"(10) not later than June 30 of each year beginning after December 31, 1975, submit to the Congress a report on all activities undertaken pursuant to the provisions of this part.

"(b) The Secretary shall, upon the request of any State having in effect a State plan approved under this part, certify the amount of any child support obligation assigned to such State to the Secretary of the Treasury for collection pursuant to the provisions of section 6305 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. No amount may be certified for collection under this subsection except the amount of the delinquency under a court order for support and upon a showing by the State that such State has made diligent and reasonable efforts to collect such amounts utilizing its own collection mechanisms, and upon an agreement that the State will reimburse the United States for any costs involved in making the collection. The Secretary after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury may, by regulation, establish criteria for accepting amounts for collection and for making certification under this subsection including imposing such limitations on the frequency of making such certifications under this subsection.

"(c) (1) There is hereby established in the Treasury a revolving fund which shall be available to the Secretary without fiscal year limitation, to enable him to pay to the States for distribution in accordance with the provisions of section 457 such amounts as may be collected and paid (subject to paragraph (2)) into such fund under section 6305 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(2) There is hereby appropriated to the fund, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts equal to the amounts collected under section 6305 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, reduced by the amounts credited or refunded as overpayments of the amounts so collected. The amounts appropriated by the preceding section shall be transferred at least quarterly from the general fund of the Treasury to the fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury. Proper adjustments shall be made in the amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of or less than the amounts required to be transferred.

"PARENT LOCATOR SERVICE"

"Sec. 453. (a) The Secretary shall establish and conduct a Parent Locator Service, under the direction of the designee of the Secretary referred to in section 452(a), which shall be used to obtain and transmit to any authorized person (as defined in subsection (c)) information as to the whereabouts of any absent parent when such information is to be used to locate such parent for the purpose of enforcing support obligations against such parent.

"(b) Upon request, filed in accordance with subsection (d) of any authorized person (as defined in subsection (c)) for the most recent address and place of employment of any absent parent, the Secretary shall, notwithstanding any other provision of law, provide through the Parent Locator Service such information to such person, if such information—

"(1) is contained in any files or records maintained by the Secretary or by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare; or

"(2) is not contained in such files or records, but can be obtained by the Secretary, under the authority conferred by subsection (e), from any other department, agency, or instrumentality, or the United States or of any State.

No information shall be disclosed to any person if the disclosure of such information would contravene the national policy or security interests of the United States or the confidentiality of census data. The Secretary shall give priority to requests made by any authorized person described in subsection (c) (1).

"(c) As used in subsection (a), the term 'authorized person' means—

"(1) any agent or attorney of any State having in effect a plan approved under this part, who has the duty or authority under such plans to seek to recover any amounts owed as child support (including, when authorized under the State plan, any official of a political subdivision);

"(2) the court which has authority to issue an order against an absent parent for the support and maintenance of a child, or any agent of such court; and

"(3) the resident parent, legal guardian, attorney, or agent of a child (other than a child receiving aid under part A of this title) (as determined by regulations prescribed by the Secretary) without regard to the existence of a court order against an absent parent who has a duty to support and maintain any such child.

"(d) A request for information under this section shall be filed in such manner and form as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe and shall be accompanied or supported by such documents as the Secretary may determine to be necessary.

"(e) (1) Whenever the Secretary receives a request submitted under subsection (b) which he is reasonably satisfied meets the criteria established by subsections (a), (b), and (c), he shall promptly undertake to provide the information requested from the files and records maintained by any of the departments, agencies, or instrumentalities of the United States or of any State.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever the individual who is the head of any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States receives a request from the Secretary for information authorized to be provided by the Secretary under this section, such individual shall promptly cause a search to be made of the files and records maintained by such department, agency, or instrumentality with a view to determining whether the information requested is contained in any such files or records. If such search discloses the information requested, such individual shall immediately transmit such information to the Secretary, except that if any information is obtained the disclosure of which would contravene national policy or security interests of the United States or the confidentiality of census data, such information shall not be transmitted and such individual shall immediately notify the Secretary. If such search fails to disclose the information requested, such individual shall immediately so notify the Secretary. The costs incurred by any such department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States or of any State in providing such information to the Secretary shall be reimbursed by him. Whenever such services are furnished to an individual specified in subsection (c) (3), a fee shall be charged such individual. The fee so charged shall be used to reimburse the Secretary or his delegate for the expense of providing such services.

"(f) The Secretary, in carrying out his duties and functions under this section, shall enter into arrangements with State agencies administering State plans approved under this part for such State agencies to accept from resident parents, legal guardians, or agents of a child described in subsection (c) (3) and, after determining that the absent parent cannot be located through the procedures under the control of such State agencies, to transmit to the Secretary requests for information with regard to the whereabouts of absent parents and otherwise to cooperate with the Secretary in carrying out the purposes of this section.

"(1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State;

"(5) provide that, in any case in which child support payments are collected for a child with respect to whom an assignment under section 402(a) (26) is effective, such payments shall be made to the State for distribution pursuant to section 457 and shall not be paid directly to the family except that this paragraph shall not apply to such payments (except as provided in section 457 (c)) for any month in which the amount collected is sufficient to make such family ineligible for assistance under the State plan approved under part A;

"(6) provide that (A) the child support collection or paternity determination services established under the plan shall be made available to any individual not otherwise eligible for such services upon application filed by such individual with the State, (B) an application fee for furnishing such services may be imposed, except that the amount of any such application fee shall be reasonable, as determined under regulations of the Secretary, and (C) any costs in excess of the fee so imposed may be collected from such individual by deducting such costs from the amount of any recovery made;

"(7) provide for entering into cooperative arrangements with appropriate courts and law enforcement officials (A) to assist the agency administering the plan, including the entering into of financial arrangements with such courts and officials in order to assure optimum results under such program, and (B) with respect to any other matters of common concern to such courts or officials and the agency administering the plan;

"(A) all sources of information and available records, and

"(C) in securing compliance by an absent parent residing in such State (whether or not permanently) with an order issued by a court of competent jurisdiction against such parent for the support and maintenance of a child or children of such parent with respect to whom aid is being provided under the plan of such other State, and

"(D) in carrying out other functions required under a plan approved under this part;

"(13) provide that the State will comply with such other requirements and standards as the Secretary determines to be necessary to the establishment of an effective program for locating absent parents, establishing paternity, obtaining support orders, and collecting support payments.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES"

"Sec. 455. From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary shall pay to each State for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1975, an amount equal to 75 percent of the total amounts expended by such State during such quarter for the operation of the plan approved under section 454 except that no amount shall be paid to any State on account of furnishing collection services (other than parent locator services) to individuals under section 454(6) during any period beginning after June 30, 1976.

"SUPPORT OBLIGATIONS"

"Sec. 456. (a) The support rights assigned to the State under section 402(a) (26) shall constitute an obligation owed to such State by the individual responsible for providing such support. Such obligation shall be collectible under all applicable State and local processes.

"(1) The amount of such obligation shall be—

"(A) the amount specified in a court order which covers the assigned support rights, or

"(B) if there is no court order, an amount determined by the State in accordance with a formula approved by the Secretary, and

"(2) Any amounts collected from an absent parent under the plan shall reduce, dollar for dollar, the amount of his obligation under paragraphs (1) (A) and (B).

"(b) A debt which is a child support obligation assigned to a State under section 402(a) (26) is not released by a discharge in bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act.

"DISTRIBUTION OF PROCEEDS"

"Sec. 457. (a) The amounts collected as child support by a State pursuant to a plan approved under this part during the 15 months beginning July 1, 1975, shall be distributed as follows:

"(1) 40 percent of the first $50 of such amounts as are collected periodically which represent monthly support payments shall be paid to the family without any decrease in the amount paid as assistance to such family during such month;

"(2) such amounts as are collected periodically which are in excess of any amount paid to the family under paragraph (1) which represent monthly support payments shall be retained by the State to reimburse it for assistance payments to the family during such period (with appropriate reimbursement of the Federal Government to the extent of its participation in the financing);

"(b) The amounts collected as child support by a State pursuant to a plan approved under this part during any fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1976, shall be distributed as follows:

"(1) such amounts as are collected periodically which represent monthly support payments shall be retained by the State to reimburse it for assistance payments to the family during such period (with appropriate reimbursement of the Federal Government to the extent of its participation in the financing);

"(2) such amounts as are in excess of amounts retained by the State under paragraph (1) and are not in excess of the amount required to be paid during such period to the family by a court order shall be paid to the family; and

"(3) such amounts as are in excess of amounts required to be distributed under paragraphs (1) and (2) shall be (A) retained by the State (with appropriate reimbursement of the Federal Government to the extent of its participation in the financing) as reimbursement for any past assistance payments made to the family for which the State has not been reimbursed or (B) if no assistance payments have been made by the State which have not been repaid, such amounts shall be paid to the family.

"(c) Whenever a family for whom child support payments have been collected and distributed under the plan ceases to receive assistance under part A of this title, the State may—

"(1) continue to collect such support payments from the absent parent for a period of not to exceed three months from the month following the month in which such family ceased to receive assistance under part A of this title, and pay all amounts so collected to the family; and

"(2) at the end of such three-month period, if the State is authorized to do so by the individual on whose behalf the collection will be made, continue to collect such support payments from the absent parent and pay the net amount of any amount so collected to the family after deducting any costs incurred in making the collection from the amount of any recovery made.

"INCENTIVE PAYMENT TO LOCALITIES"

"Sec. 458. (a) When a political subdivision of a State makes, for the State of which it is a political subdivision, or one State makes, for another State, the enforcement and collection of the support rights assigned under section 402(a) (26) (either within or outside of such State), there shall be paid to such political subdivision or such other State from amounts which would otherwise represent the Federal share of assistance to the family of the absent parent—

"(1) an amount equal to 25 percent of any amount collected (and required to be distributed as provided in section 457 to reduce or repay assistance payments) which is attributable to the support obligation owed for 12 months; and

"(2) an amount equal to 10 percent of any amount collected (and required to be distributed as provided in section 457 to reduce or repay assistance payments) which is attributable to the support obligation owed for any month after the first twelve months for which such collections are made.

"(b) Where more than one jurisdiction is involved in such enforcement or collection, the amount of the incentive payment determined under paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) shall be allocated among the jurisdictions in a manner to be prescribed by the Secretary.

"CONSENT BY THE UNITED STATES TO GARNISHMENT AND SIMILAR PROCEEDINGS FOR ENFORCEMENT OF CHILD SUPPORT AND ALIMONY OBLIGATIONS"

"Sec. 459. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, effective January 1, 1975, moneys (the entitlement to which is based upon remuneration for employment) due from, or payable by, the United States (including any agency or instrumentality thereof and any wholly owned Federal corporation) to any individual, including members of the armed services, shall be subject, in like manner and to the same extent as if the United States were a private person, to legal process brought for the enforcement, against such individual, of his legal obligations to provide child support or make alimony payments.

"CIVIL ACTIONS TO ENFORCE CHILD SUPPORT OBLIGATIONS"

"Sec. 460. The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction, without regard to any amount in controversy, to hear and determine any civil action certified by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare under section 452(a) (8) of this Act. A civil action under this section may be brought in any judicial district in which the claim arose, the plaintiff resides, or the defendant resides."

"Collection of Child Support Obligations"

"(b) (1) Subchapter A of chapter 64 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to collection of taxes) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 6305. COLLECTION OF CERTAIN LIABILITY."

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon receiving a certification from the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, under section 452(b) of the Social Security Act with respect to any individual, the Secretary or his delegate shall assess and collect the amount certified by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, in the same manner, with the same powers, and (except as provided in this section) subject to the same limitations as if such amount were a tax imposed by subtitle C the collection of which would be jeopardized by delay, except that—

December 19, 1974

"(1) no interest or penalties shall be assessed or collected,

"(2) for such purposes, paragraphs (4), (6), and (8) of section 6334(a) (relating to property exempt from levy) shall not apply,

"(3) there shall be exempt from levy so much of the salary, wages, or other income of an individual as is being withheld therefrom in garnishment pursuant to a judgment entered by a court of competent jurisdiction for the support of his minor children, and

"(4) in the case of the first assessment against an individual or delinquency under a court order against such individual for a particular person or persons, the collection shall be stayed for a period of 60 days immediately following notice and demand as described in section 6303.

"(b) REVIEW OF ASSESSMENTS AND COLLECTIONS.—No court of the United States, whether established under article I or article III of the Constitution, shall have jurisdiction of any action, whether legal or equitable, brought to restrain or review the assessment and collection of amounts by the Secretary or his delegate under subsection (a), nor shall any such assessment and collection be subject to review by the Secretary or his delegate in any proceeding. This subsection does not preclude any legal, equitable, or administrative action against the State by an individual in any State court or before any State agency to determine his liability for any amount assessed against him and collected, or to recover any such amount collected from him, under this section."

(2) The table of sections for such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 6305. Collection of certain liability."

Amendments to Part A of Title IV

(c) (1) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 402(a) of the Social Security Act, in addition to the amounts required to be disregarded under clause (8) (A) of such section, there is imposed the requirement (and the State plan shall be deemed to include the requirement) that for the 15 months beginning July 1, 1975, in making the determination under clause (7), the State agency shall with respect to any month in such year and in addition to the amounts required to be disregarded under clause (8) (A), disregard amounts payable under section 457(a) (1).

(2) Section 402(a) (9) is amended to read as follows:

"(9) provide safeguards which permit the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants or recipients only to (A) public officials who require such information in connection with their official duties, or (B) other persons for purposes directly connected with the administration of aid to families with dependent children."

(3) Section 402(a) (10) is amended by inserting immediately before "be furnished" the following: ", subject to paragraphs (25) and (26)."

(4) Section 402(a) (11) is amended to read as follows:

"(11) provide for prompt notice (including the transmittal of all relevant information) to the State child support collection agency (established pursuant to part D of this title) of the furnishing of aid to families with dependent children with respect to a child who has been deserted or abandoned by a parent (including a child born out of wedlock without regard to whether the paternity of such child has been established);"

(5) Section 402(a) is further amended—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (23);

(B) by inserting immediately before the first word in paragraph (24) the following: "provide that"; and

(C) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (24) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following:

"(25) provide (A) that, as a condition of eligibility under the plan, each applicant for or recipient of aid shall furnish to the State agency his social security account number (or numbers, if he has more than one such number), and (B) that such State agency shall utilize such account numbers, in addition to any other means of identification it may determine to employ in the administration of such plan;

"(26) provide that, as a condition of eligibility for aid, each applicant or recipient will be required—

(6) (A) Section 403 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the amount payable to any State under this part for quarters beginning after December 31, 1976, be reduced by 5 per centum of such amount if such State is found by the Secretary as the result of the annual audit to have failed to have an effective program meeting the requirements of section 402(a) (27) in any fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1976 (but, in the case of the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1976, only considering the second, third, and fourth quarters thereof)."

(B) Section 404 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) No State shall be found, prior to January 1, 1977, to have failed substantially to comply with the requirements of section 402(a) (27) if, in the judgment of the Secretary, such State is making a good faith effort to implement the program required by such section.

"(d) After December 31, 1976, in the case of any State which is found to have failed substantially to comply with the requirements of section 402(a) (27), the reduction in any amount payable to such State required to be imposed under section 403(h) shall be imposed in lieu of any reduction, with respect to such failure, which would otherwise be required to be imposed under this section."

(7) Section 406 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

considered in determining the need of the child or relative claiming aid under the plan of such State approved under this part) of a child who fails to cooperate with any agency or official of the State in obtaining such support payments for such child. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to make an otherwise eligible child for protective payments because of the failure of such parent (or such other individual) to so cooperate."

(8) Section 402(a) (17), (18), (21), and (22), and section 410 of such Act are repealed.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the States, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

December 19, 1974

The social services provisions generally follow the House bill, which provides the conditions for State entitlement to social services funds under a new title XX of the Social Security Act with the following exceptions:

The Senate provisions requiring that three types of services be available to recipients of supplemental security income and that family planning services be offered to each appropriate person receiving aid to families with dependent children were accepted.

The House provision for fees for services for families and individuals with incomes between 80 and 115 percent of the State's median family income was retained with a provision that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is to issue regulations relating to fees for those with incomes below this level and for welfare recipients.

The conferees agreed to the Senate provisions regarding standards for child care with respect to the ratio of adults to children of various ages and making the educational component of child care recommended rather than mandatory. In the case of children under three, the ratio is left to regulations of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

The Senate bill included provision for Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam to share in the $2.5 billion ceiling for Federal expenditures for social services on the basis of their populations in relation to that of the States. Money would be available for them only if it remained unused in the amount available for allotment to the States. There was no comparable provision in the House bill. The conference agreement provides that Puerto Rico may receive up to $15 million for social services (if it is available after the States have received their allotments) and Guam and the Virgin Islands may each receive up to $500,000 under the same circumstances.

The conferees agreed to that part of the Senate amendment which would retain provisions of existing law with respect to separate agencies which have been authorized to administer services to the blind and child welfare services. The House bill contained no explicit provision on this subject.

The conference agreement eliminates many of the requirements in the House bill regarding program reporting, evaluation and audit, permitting the Secretary to require reports concerning the uses of service funds which shall be the basis of his annual report to the Congress. The House provision for a hearing to the State on the issue of failure to comply under the requirements is retained, and the Secretary is given the alternative of terminating payments to the State or imposing a reduction of three percent for each area of activity in which there is substantial non-compliance.

The provisions of the House bill regarding maintenance of effort were retained but clarified so that they applied only to appropriated funds and not to donated funds.

The effective date was advanced from July 1, 1975, to October 1, 1975, with the existing moratorium on regulations remaining in effect until that time.

A Senate provision regarding the funding of social work training made existing law explicit by specifying that States might make such grants to persons in educational institutions and to the institutions.

The Senate amendment providing a tax credit for low-income workers and families was dropped by the conferees.

The conference agreement generally accepts the Senate provisions on child support with the following modifications. It does not require appointment of an Assistant Secretary for child support but does require the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to designate a person in charge of an organizational unit responsible for child support activities. It provides that the Internal Revenue Service shall be used for collection of child support obligations only based on non-compliance with a court order and only after a one-time 60-day notice to a parent of the intent to enforce payments under this procedure. The procedures for child support apply equally to absent fathers and absent mothers. A provision in the Senate amendment for the establishment of regional laboratories to perform the blood-typing work necessary for the purposes of establishing paternity was deleted.

With respect to these amendments (1) the House either recedes or recedes with amendments which are technical, clerical, clarifying, or conforming in nature; or (2) the Senate recedes in order to conform to other action agreed upon by the committee of conference.

Amendment No. 3: Section 2 of the House bill states that the purposes of the bill are to (1) stimulate the economic growth of the United States and to maintain and enlarge foreign markets for the products of United States agriculture, industry, mining, and commerce; and (2) strengthen economic relations with foreign countries through the development of fair and equitable market opportunities and through open and nondiscriminatory world trade. The Senate amendment substitutes for the general purposes stated in the House bill 15 specific purposes which essentially summarize the major provisions of the bill as amended by the Senate. The House recedes, with the following amendment:

The purposes of this Act are, through trade agreements affording mutual benefits,

(1) to foster the economic growth of and full employment in the United States and to strengthen economic relations between the United States and foreign countries through open and nondiscriminatory world trade;

(2) to harmonize, reduce and eliminate barriers to trade on a basis which assures substantially equivalent competitive opportunities for the commerce of the United States;

(3) to establish fairness and equity in international trading relations, including reform of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade;

(4) To provide adequate procedures to safeguard American industry and labor against unfair or injurious import competition, and to assist industries, firms, workers, and communities to adjust to changes in international trade flows;

(5) to open up market opportunities for United States commerce in nonmarket economies; and

(6) to provide fair and reasonable access to products of less developed countries in the United States market;

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment No. 5: The House bill authorized the President, in exercising his trade agreement authority, to proclaim tariff reductions but no such proclamation may reduce any rate of duty (1) by more than 60 percent of the rate existing on July 1, 1973, if such rate is 25 percent ad valorem or less; or (2) by more than 75 percent of the rate existing on July 1, 1973, or to a rate of 10 percent ad valorem, whichever results in a higher rate of duty, if the rate existing on July 1, 1973, is more than 25 percent ad valorem. No rate reduction limitation would apply in the case of any rate of duty of 5 percent ad valorem or less. Senate amendment No. 5 authorizes duty reductions of up to 50 percent of the rate existing on January 1, 1975, if that rate is over 10 percent ad valorem, and no limitations are placed on duty reductions if the existing rate on January 1, 1975, is 10 percent ad valorem or less. Under the conference agreement, no reduction limitations are placed on rates which are 5 percent ad valorem or less on January 1, 1975, and duty reductions of up to 60 percent of the rate existing on January 1, 1975, if that rate is over 5 percent ad valorem, are authorized.

Amendments Nos. 7, 8, and 9: Section 102(a) of the House bill (1) set forth the Congressional finding that barriers to (and other distortions of) international trade (nontariff barriers) are reducing the growth of foreign markets for the products of the United States, diminishing intended mutual benefits of reciprocal trade concessions, and preventing the development of open and nondiscriminatory trade among nations; and (2) urged the President to take all steps to limit or reduce such barriers. Senate amendment No. 7 would add additional findings to the House provisions to the effect that nontariff barriers are adversely affecting the United States economy and are preventing fair and equitable access to supplies, and Senate amendments Nos. 8 and 9 urge the President to take action to harmonize, as well as to eliminate or reduce, such barriers. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 10: Section 102(b) of the House bill authorized the President during the five-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the bill to enter into trade agreements to eliminate or reduce nontariff barriers if he finds that such barriers of any foreign country or the United States are unduly burdening or restraining the foreign trade of the United States. The Senate amendment retains the provisions of section 102(b) of the House bill but further authorizes the President to enter into agreements if he finds that nontariff barriers are adversely affecting the United States economy, and to enter agreements to harmonize (as well as to reduce or eliminate) such barriers or to provide for the prohibition or limitation on the imposition of such barriers. Section 102(c) of the House bill provided that a principal negotiating objective in entering into trade agreements under section 102 is to obtain with respect to each product sector of manufacturing and to the agricultural sector competitive opportunities for United States exports to the developed countries which are equivalent to the opportunities afforded similar foreign products in United States markets, and also required the Special Representative for Trade Negotiations, together with the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce and after consultation with the Advisory Committees established by section 135 of the House bill, to define appropriate sectors of manufacturing.

The Senate amendment deleted the statement of negotiation objectives and the matter relating to the definition of manufacturing sectors from section 102 of the bill and included related provisions in a separate new section (section 104) of the bill. Subsections (d), (e), and (f) of section 102 of the House bill required the President to consult with the Ways and Means and Finance Committees before entering into any trade agreement regarding nontariff barriers and provided that no such agreement, if entered into by the President, which changes domestic law shall enter into force and effect unless (1) the procedure specified in the bill relating to the notification to Congress of his intention to enter into such agreement and the delivery to Congress of a copy of the agreement, proposed implementing actions, if any, and other information, are complied with; and (2) neither House of Congress by resolution disapproves of such agreement before the close of the 90-day period after such delivery. The Senate amendment provided that before the President enters into any negotiations for a trade agreement under section 102, he must report separately to Congress each subject matter area of United States law and administrative practice which he intends to affect under such agreement, and such negotiations may be undertaken with respect to each subject matter area only if negotiation of such area is approved by Congress by resolution pursuant to section 151(b) of the bill. The Senate amendment further requires the President to consult with all appropriate committees of Congress before entering into any such agreement and provides that no agreement (whether or not it would result in any change to domestic law) shall enter into force and effect unless the President appropriately notifies the Congress of his intention to enter into such an agreement, transmits to Congress a copy of the agreement, a draft bill to implement the agreement, and other relevant information, and the implementing bill is enacted into law.

The Senate amendment also authorizes the President to recommend to Congress in any such implementing bill that the benefits and obligations of the nontariff barrier agreement be limited to the signatories to the agreement and that the agreement distinguish between the benefits and obligations applicable to different classes of signatories. Section 102 of the House bill set forth certain restrictions on converting, pursuant to a trade agreement entered into under section 102, nontariff barriers of the United States to tariff rates which afford substantially equivalent protection (such restrictions were considered necessary because of the one House disapproval procedures regarding nontariff barrier agreements contained in the House bill). The Senate amendment deleted these restrictions. Section 102 (g) of the House bill included the American selling price basis of customs evaluation within the definition of barrier for purposes of the section. The Senate amendment included the House definition and defines "distortion" as including any subsidy and defines "international trade" as including trade in both goods and services. The House recedes with respect to Senate amendment No. 10 with amendments which (1) delete the provision under which the President, in addition to the general consultations required with respect to the effect of proposed amendments, must report to Congress with respect to each subject matter area of United States law affected by negotiations and must have further specific approval prior to entering into negotiations which affect specified areas (consumer protection, employee health and safety, labor standards, or environmental standards); and (2) deletes the requirement that an employment impact statement be submitted with each implementing bill.

Amendment No. 11: This Senate amendment adds to the bill a new section 103 which provides that the overall United States negotiating objective under sections 101 (basic trade agreement authority) and 102 (trade agreement authority regarding nontariff barriers) shall be to obtain more open and equitable market access and the harmonization, reduction, or elimination of devices which distort trade or commerce and further provides that, to the maximum extent feasible, the harmonization, reduction, or elimination of agricultural trade barriers and distortions shall be undertaken in conjunction with the harmonization, reduction, or elimination of international trade barriers and distortions. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 12: Senate amendment No. 12 adds a new section 104 to the bill which sets forth a sector negotiation objective for trade agreements entered into under sections 101 and 102 of the bill. Section 104 contains essentially the same provisions as section 102(c) of the House bill except that it applies the sector negotiating objective to agreements entered into under section 101 (basic trade agreement authority) as well as to nontariff barrier agreements, requires negotiations to be conducted on the basis of appropriate product sectors to the extent consistent with maximizing the overall economic benefit to the United States, and requires the President, if he determines that competitive opportunities in any product sector will be significantly affected by a trade agreement, to submit to Congress an analysis of the extent to which the agreement achieves the objective with respect to that sector. The requirement for such an analysis is in lieu of the provisions in section 102(c) of the House bill which requires the President to include, when submitted a nontariff trade barrier agreement to Congress, a sector-by-sector analysis of the extent to which the negotiating objective has been achieved. The House recedes with an amendment, striking the phrase "and consistent with the provisions of section 103," (the overall negotiating objective).

Amendment No. 13: This amendment added a new section 105 to the bill which provides that if the President determines that bilateral trade agreements will effectively promote the economic growth of the United States, then a principal negotiating objective under sections 101 and 102 of the bill shall be to enter into bilateral trade agreements providing for mutually advantageous economic benefits. No similar provision was contained in the House bill. The House recedes with a clarifying amendment, deleting the word "principal" qualifying negotiating objective.

Amendment No. 14: This amendment sets forth as a principal United States negotiating objective under sections 101 and 102 the entering into of trade agreements which promote the economic growth of both developing countries and the United States and the mutual expansion of market opportunities. No similar provision was contained in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment, deleting the word "principal" qualifying negotiating objective.

Amendment No. 15: This amendment provides that a principal negotiating objective under section 102 (trade agreement authority regarding nontariff barriers) shall be to obtain internationally-agreed-upon rules and procedures which shall permit the use of temporary measures to ease adjustments to changes occurring in competitive conditions in the domestic market of parties to an agreement which could result from the expansion of international trade. The amendment provides that any agreement entered into under section 102 may include "safeguard" provisions establishing procedures for:

- (1) notification of affected exporting countries;
- (2) international consultations;
- (3) international review of changes in trade flows;
- (4) such adjustments in trade flows which may be necessary to avoid injury;
- (5) international mediation of disputes;
- (6) appropriate hearings and other public procedures in which interested parties would have the right to participate; and
- (7) exclusion of parties from compensation, obligations, and retaliation under specified conditions. The House bill did not contain similar provisions. The House recedes on the understanding that the criteria pursuant to which any import restrictions may be imposed under a safeguard arrangement must be submitted to the Congress for affirmative approval.

Amendment No. 16: This amendment adds a new section 108 to the House bill which provides that a principal United States negotiating objective under section 102 of the bill shall be to enter into trade agreements with foreign countries and instrumentalities to assure the United States of fair and equitable access at reasonable prices to supplies of articles of commerce which are important to the economic requirements of the United States and for which the United States does not have, or cannot easily develop, the necessary domestic productive capacity to supply its own requirements. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 18 and 19: The House bill provided that tariff reductions proclaimed pursuant to a trade agreement could not be staged in less than 15 annual installments or by annual reductions of a maximum of 3 percent ad valorem, or one-fifteenth, whichever is greater; and that such staging limitations do not apply in cases where the total reduction of duty is 10 percent or less of the rate before reduction. Senate amendments Nos. 18 and 19 require that duty reductions be staged in equal installments over a period of ten years and in cases where duty reductions are less than 20 percent ad valorem, the duty may be reduced by a maximum of 2 percent ad valorem per year. Under the conference agreement, the 10-year staging limitation contained in the Senate amendment is adopted, but annual reductions of up to 3 percent ad valorem or one-tenth of the total, whichever is greater are authorized.

Amendments Nos. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, and 41: Section 121 of the House bill directed the President to take such action as may be necessary to bring trade agreements into conformity with principles of promoting the development of open, nondiscriminatory, and fair world economic systems, including the revision of decisionmaking procedures in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT); the revision of article XIX of GATT into a truly international safeguard mechanism; the extension of GATT articles to conditions of trade not presently covered; the adoption of international fair labor standards and of public petition and confrontation procedures in the GATT; the revision of GATT articles with respect to the treatment of border adjustments for internal taxes; and the revision of balance-of-payments provisions in the GATT. Senate amendments Nos. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37 added to the principles specified in the House provision the following additional trade principles:

- (1) access to supplies, including rules governing export controls, denial of supplies and consultations on supply shortages;
- (2) the extension of GATT to deal with countries which deny goods and thereby injure the international community;
- (3) any revisions necessary to establish regular consultations;
- (4) elimination of special reverse preferences;
- (5) flexible monetary mechanisms;
- (6) code on subsidies and foreign investment incentives;
- (7) agreements on extraterritorial application of national laws; and
- (8) revisions to establish within GATT an international agreement on footwear.

Senate amendment No. 39 added to section 121a provision requiring the President, to the extent feasible, to enter into agreements with foreign countries to establish the principles set forth above with respect to international trade between the United States and such countries. Senate amendment 40 provided that no agreements to implement the principles of section 121 shall take effect unless legislation implementing those principles is enacted by Congress. Senate amendment 41 added to the provision in the House bill authorizing appropriations for payment by the United States of its share of expenses to GATT a proviso that such authorization does not imply approval or disapproval by Congress of all articles of the GATT. The House recedes with respect to all the Senate amendments (with conforming and clarifying amendments in some cases) except amendments Nos. 34 (relating to flexible monetary mechanisms) and 36 (relating to the extraterritorial application of national laws), from which the Senate recedes. Under the conference agreement the phrase "such as" was added before "footwear" in Senate amendment 37.

Amendments Nos. 42 and 43: Section 122 (a) of the House bill provides authority for the President to take certain import restraining actions in order to deal with large and serious United States balance-of-payments deficits, to prevent depreciation of the dollar in foreign exchange markets, and to cooperate in correcting international balance-of-payments disequilibrium. Senate amendment No. 42 amended the House provision to require the President to take such action in order to deal with such deficit and extends the effective period of any presidential action to 180 days (150 days under the House bill) unless such period is extended by Act of Congress. Senate amendment No. 43 permits the President to refrain from taking action under section 122(a) if such action would be contrary to the national interest. The House recedes with an amendment providing for the 150-day effective period contained in the House bill.

Amendments Nos. 45 and 51: Section 122 (b) of the House bill (redesignated as section 122(c) by the Senate) provides authority for the President to take certain action to increase imports in order to deal with a large or persistent United States balance-of-payments surpluses or to prevent significant appreciation of the dollar in foreign exchange markets. Senate amendment No. 45 would change the House version of section 122(b) to authorize the President to deal with large and persistent balance-of-trade surpluses determined on the basis of cost-insurance-freight value of imports and Senate amendment No. 51 requires import liberalizing actions taken under section 122(b) to be of broad and uniform application with respect to product coverage. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 69: Section 123 of the House bill provided authority for the President to promulgate temporary reductions in duty and temporary increases in quantities of articles permitted to be imported for purposes of restraining inflation. Senate amendment No. 69 deleted this section from the bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 80: This amendment amends section 124 of the House bill (section 123 as redesignated by the Senate), which gives the President authority to compensate foreign countries for increases in United States tariffs or other import restrictions when the United States is obligated to pay such compensation for trade restrictions imposed pursuant to an import relief finding under section 203 of this bill. The Senate amendment prohibits the entering into any agreement under section 123 with any foreign country if such country has violated trade concessions of benefit to the United States and such violation has not been adequately offset by action of the United States or by such country. The House recedes with an amendment making the application of the Senate amendment effective at the discretion of the President, rather than mandatory.

Amendment No. 91: This amendment adds to section 126 of the House bill (section 125 as redesignated by the Senate), which sets forth termination and withdrawal authority of the United States with respect to trade agreements, a new subsection (d) which requires the President to withdraw, suspend, or modify trade agreement concessions whenever a foreign country withdraws, suspends, or modifies the application of trade agreement obligations of benefit to the United States without granting adequate compensation. The House recedes with an amendment which makes action by the President under the Senate amendment discretionary rather than mandatory.

Amendments Nos. 104, 105, and 106: Senate amendment No. 104 amends section 127 of the House bill (section 126 as redesignated by the Senate), which applies the principle of nondiscriminatory treatment (most-favored nation principle) to all products of foreign countries to require the President to determine after conclusion of all negotiations entered into under the bill, or at the close of the 5-year period after its effective date (whichever is earlier) whether any major industrial country (defined by Senate amendment No. 106 to mean Canada, the European Economic Community, each nation in such Community, Japan, and any other country designated by the President) has failed to make concessions under trade agreements providing competitive opportunities for United States commerce in that country which are substantially equivalent to competitive opportunities provided by the United States under trade agreements for the commerce of such country in the United States. Senate amendment No. 105 provides that if the President determines that any major industrial country has not made such concessions, he shall (1) proclaim the termination of United States concessions, or refrain from proclaiming such concessions, with respect to that country or articles thereof; and (2) recommend to Congress that any legislation necessary to carry out a trade agreement relating to nontariff barriers shall not apply to such country. The House recedes with respect to Senate amendment No. 104 with an amendment restricting the President's determination of whether a major industrialized country has made concessions providing substantially equivalent competitive opportunities for the commerce of the U.S. to trade agreements entered into under this Act.

The House recedes with respect to Senate amendment No. 105 with an amendment which deletes the President's authority to proclaim the termination of, or to refrain from proclaiming, trade agreement benefits to foreign countries failing to make reciprocal concessions and provides that the President shall recommend to the Congress any legislation necessary to restore the balance of competitive opportunities; and recedes with respect to Senate amendment No. 106.

Amendment No. 109: This amendment amends section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury functions relating to investigations and determinations regarding whether articles are being imported in such quantities and under such circumstances so as to threaten to impair the national security. The amendment requires the Secretary of the Treasury to consult with the Secretaries of Defense and Commerce and other appropriate officers of the United States when making any such investigation. The Senate amendment further provides a procedure for holding public hearings incident to any such investigations (which must be completed within one year). The Secretary of the Treasury is required under the amendment to report his findings and recommendations resulting from any investigation to the President who may (unless he finds that the imports in question are not threatening the national security) take such action, and for such time, as he deems necessary to adjust imports so as to prevent impairment of the national security. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 113: This amendment requires the Tariff Commission (redesignated as the International Trade Commission by the Senate) to provide the President with advice with respect to articles proposed to be included in any trade agreement proposed to be entered into under section 123 (124) of the bill (compensation authority) within 90 days after the date of receipt of the list of such articles by the Commission. Under the House bill, such advice is required to be submitted within 6 months after date of receipt. The House recedes.

Amendment number 126: This amendment provides for the inclusion of representatives of small business, service industries and retailers on the Advisory Committee for Trade Negotiation.

The House recedes.

Amendment No. 128: This amendment authorizes the President, on his own initiative or at the request of interested persons, to establish general policy advisory committees for industry, labor, and agriculture to provide general policy advice on any trade agreement proposed to be entered into under section 101 or 102 of the bill. The amendment requires such committees to be representative of all industry, labor, or agricultural interests (including small business interests and to be organized by the President acting through the Special Representative for Trade Negotiations, and the Secretaries of Commerce, Labor, and Agriculture, as appropriate. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 135: This amendment provides that representatives from each committee established under section 135(c) of the bill (general policy advisory committees and industry, labor, and agricultural sector advisory committees) shall participate directly in any negotiation of any trade agreement under section 101 or 102 to the same extent as any representative of a comparable committee or sector participates in such negotiations on behalf of any foreign country. The Senate recedes, on the understanding that the negotiators shall inform the advisory committees of all relevant information during the negotiations. The conferees believe strongly that, to the extent consistent with the domestic laws, the private sector should fully contribute to the negotiation process.

Amendment number 145: This amendment deleted a provision of the House bill stating that nothing in section 135 is intended to authorize direct participation by individuals in trade agreement negotiations. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 136: This amendment requires the Advisory Committee for Trade Negotiations (established under section 135 (b) of the bill) and each appropriate policy advisory committee and sector advisory committee to meet at the conclusion of each trade agreement entered into under this Act and to provide to the President, the Congress, and to the Special Representative for Trade Negotiations a report on the agreement. Each such report is required to include an advisory opinion as to whether and to what extent the agreement promotes the economic interests of the United States and each report by a sector advisory committee is required to include an advisory opinion as to whether the agreement provides for equity and reciprocity within the sector.

The amendment further provides that the Advisory Committee and each policy advisory committee shall, as soon as practical after the close of the 5-year period after the effective date of the bill, submit to Congress a report including an advisory opinion as to whether and to what extent the trade agreements entered into under this Act, taken as a whole, serve the economic interests of the United States. Each sector advisory committee is required to submit to Congress, within the same time limitation, a report including an advisory opinion on the degree to which trade agreements entered into under this Act which affect the sector, taken as a whole, provide for equity and reciprocity within that sector. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 139: This amendment is a substitute for section 135(f) of the House bill which provided that information received in confidence by the Advisory Committee for Trade Negotiations or any advisory committee shall not be disclosed to other than Federal officers or employees designated by the Special Representative for Trade Negotiations or the Committees on Ways and Means and Finance to receive such information for use in connection with the negotiation of trade agreements. The Senate amendment provides that trade secrets and commercial or financial information submitted in confidence in connection with trade negotiations may not be disclosed for use in connection with such negotiations to other than Federal officers designated by the Special Representatives for Trade Negotiations, members of the Ways and Means and Finance Committees accredited as advisors under section 161(a) of the bill or designated by the chairman of either such committee under section 161(b), and staff members of either such committee designated by such chairman under section 161 (b)(2). The Senate amendment further provides that (1) other private information submitted in confidence to Federal officers, the Advisory Committee for Trade Negotiations, policy advisory committees, and sector advisory committees may not be disclosed except to individuals authorized to receive trade secrets and commercial or financial information and to such Advisory Committee or committees, and (2) information submitted in confidence by Federal officers to such Advisory Committee or committees shall not be disclosed except in accordance with rules issued by the Special Representatives for Trade Negotiations and the Secretaries of Commerce, Labor, and Agriculture, as appropriate. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 150: This amendment provides that the Special Representative for Trade Negotiations shall be compensated at the rate provided for at Level I of the Executive Schedule, and that the two Deputy Special Representatives for Trade Negotiations be compensated at the rate provided for at Level III of the Executive Schedule. Under the House bill, the Special Representative would receive the same compensation as a chief of mission. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 153: This amendment amends section 141 of the House bill (which establishes the Office of the Special Representatives for Trade Negotiations) to authorize the appropriation to such Office of such funds as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out its functions for fiscal year 1976 and each fiscal year thereafter any part of which is within the 5-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the bill. The House bill did not provide an authorization for the Office. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 159, 160, 161, and 162: Section 151 of the bill as passed by the House contained a procedure for congressional disapproval with respect to nontariff barrier trade agreements submitted to Congress, to escape clause actions to retaliation against unfair trade practices, and to extension or continuation of nondiscriminatory tariff treatment. Under this procedure, the President was to transmit a proclamation or agreement to the Congress, after 7 days it was in order to discharge the committee to which a resolution or disapproval had been referred, and, if either House approved the resolution of disapproval within a 90-day period, the agreement or proclamation was not to take effect.

The Senate amendments strike out section 151 of the House bill and insert new sections 151, 152, and 153. Under these amendments, a congressional approval procedure applies to all nontariff barrier trade agreements, to agreements establishing certain principles in international trade (including GATT revisions) which change federal law (including a material change in an administrative rule), and to bilateral trade agreements with non-market countries entered into after the date of the enactment of the bill. Under this procedure, an implementing bill or approval resolution is submitted by the President and introduced in each House (with no amendments permitted), time limits are established for committee consideration, and floor votes. If the bill is not enacted or the resolution is not approved as the case may be, the agreement or revision cannot enter into force.

Under the Senate amendments, provision is also made for two-House disapproval for Presidential import relief which differs from the Commission's recommendation, and for Presidential retaliation on an MFN basis against unjustifiable or unreasonable restrictions. Under these procedures, if both Houses do not adopt a concurrent resolution within the applicable time period, the Presidential action enters into force.

Finally, under the Senate amendments, a one-House disapproval procedure is established (1) for the determination of the Secretary of the Treasury not to apply countervailing duties during a 2-year discretionary period, (2) for extension of benefits under bilateral trade agreements with non-market countries entered into before the date of the enactment of the bill, (3) to all annual reviews of MFN treatment and government credits and guarantees to countries receiving benefits negotiated under title IV of the bill, and (4) to U.S. Government credits and investment guarantees extended after the date of the enactment of the bill. This one-House disapproval procedure is the same as the two-House procedure provided by the Senate amendments except that adoption by majority vote of those present and voting in either House is sufficient to prevent action. The House recedes with clarifying and conforming amendments.

Amendment No. 167: Section 161 of the bill as passed by the House provided for congressional delegates to international conferences, meetings, and negotiation sessions with respect to trade agreements. Five members were to be appointed by the Speaker from the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and five members of the Senate Finance Committee were to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

Under the Senate amendment, the appointment of the House delegates by the Speaker is to be upon the recommendation of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and the appointment of the Senate delegates is to be upon the recommendation of the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

In addition, the Senate amendment provides that the Special Representative for Trade Negotiations is to keep each official adviser currently informed, and that the chairmen of the Ways and Means and Finance Committees can designate additional members of their committees and staff members who will have access to the current information provided the official advisers. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 170: The bill as passed by the House contained a requirement (in section 162(a)) that, as soon as practicable after a trade agreement entered into under chapter 1 or under the compensation authority or the authority to renegotiate duties has entered into force with respect to the United States, the President is to transmit to each House a statement of his reasons for entering into the agreement. This amendment provides that this statement is to include an employment impact statement setting forth in detail job losses and gains which may be expected as a result of the trade agreement. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 172: The bill as passed by the House contained a requirement (in section 163(a)) that the President submit to the Congress an annual report on the trade agreements program and on import relief and adjustment assistance. Under this amendment, the annual report is to include additional specified information. The House recedes with an amendment which deletes from such additional specified information with respect to the estimated effect under the program on employment and consumers.

Amendment No. 174: This amendment adds a new chapter 7 (consisting of sections 171 through 175) to title I of the bill. Under this amendment:

- (1) the United States Tariff Commission is renamed as the "United States International Trade Commission";
- (2) the membership is increased from 6 to 7 commissioners (no more than 4 from the same political party);
- (3) the term of office of commissioner is increased from 6 to 14 years, with one term expiring every other year;
- (4) an individual who has served for more than 7 years after the date of the enactment of the bill will be ineligible for reappointment;
- (5) the chairman and vice chairman positions are to rotate, with assignment as such normally determined by seniority;
- (6) the pay of the commissioners is upgraded;
- (7) the voting record of the commissioners is to be published;
- (8) the Commission is to be represented in court by its own attorneys or, at the request of the Commission, by the Attorney General of the United States, and

(9) the Commission is given an independent budget, and appropriations for the Commission for each fiscal year are authorized.

The House recedes with the following amendments:

(1) the Commission membership remains at six with an understanding that the commissioner shall, to the maximum extent feasible, avoid tie votes; (2) each Commissioner will serve for one nine-year term (rather than fourteen years). The House recedes from the Senate amendment with a modification to require the Commission Chairmanship to rotate every eighteen months, beginning June, 1975.

The House recedes from the Senate amendment to upgrade Commissioners' pay and to require voting records to be published. The Conference agreement permits the Commission to represent itself in judicial proceedings relative to its own functions, whereas the Attorney General would represent the Commission in judicial proceedings involving matters of Presidential decision. The House recedes from the Senate amendment requiring the Commission's budget to be submitted directly to Congress, rather than through OMB, beginning in 1976, with approval of both the Senate Finance and House Committee on Ways and Means.

Amendments Nos. 180 and 181: Under section 201 of the House bill, the Tariff Commission, when investigating petitions for eligibility for import relief, must take into account all economic factors which it considers relevant, including, with respect to substantial cause of serious injury to domestic injury caused by imports, an increase in imports (either actual or relative to domestic production). Senate amendments Nos. 180 and 181 provide that with respect to substantial injury, the Commission shall take into account only an absolute increase in imports. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 185: Section 201(b)(3) of the House bill provides that in determining the domestic industry producing an article like or directly competitive with an imported article, the Tariff Commission may (1) in the case of a domestic producer which also imports, treat as part of such domestic industry only its domestic production, and (2) in the case of a domestic producer which produces more than one article, treat as part of such domestic industry only that portion or subdivision of the producer which produces the like or directly competitive article. The Senate amendment adds to the House language a third standard under which the Commission may, in the case of a domestic producer located in a major geographic area of the U.S. and serving a market in that area, treat as part of such domestic industry only that segment of the producer which is located in the area. The House recedes with an amendment authorizing the Tariff Commission to treat as a domestic industry only the segment of the national production that is produced in a major geographic area if

(1) the production in such area constitute a substantial portion of the national industry, (2) such producers serve primarily the market of such major geographic area and (3) imports are concentrated in such geographic area.

Amendment No. 191: This amendment amends the House provision which requires the Tariff Commission, if it finds serious injury or threat thereof to a domestic injury caused by an imported article, to include in its report thereon to the President its finding as to the amount of increase in, or imposition of, any duty or import restriction on such article which is necessary to prevent or remedy such injury. The Senate amendment further requires that if the Commission finds that adjustment assistance under chapters 2, 3, and 4 of title II of the bill can effectively remedy such injury, the Commission shall recommend the provision of such assistance in its report to the President. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 198: Section 202 of the House bill provided that the President, after receiving an affirmative finding of import injury from the Tariff Commission, shall evaluate the extent to which adjustment assistance has, or can be, made available to workers and firms in the injured domestic injury and may direct the Secretaries of Labor and Commerce to give expeditious consideration to petitions for adjustment assistance, and may provide import relief to the industry pursuant to section 203 of the bill.

The House provision required the President to make a determination whether to provide such import relief within 60 days after receipt of the Commission's affirmative finding, and to notify Congress immediately if he determined not to provide such relief. The Senate amendment changes the House provision in that (1) if an affirmative injury finding is made by the Commission, the President is required to provide import relief, and (2) if the Commission recommends the provision of adjustment assistance along with its finding, the President is to direct the Secretaries of Commerce and Labor to give expeditious consideration to assistance petitions. The Senate amendment further requires the President, within 60 days after receiving an affirmative finding of injury (1) to determine what method and amount of import relief he will provide and whether he will direct expeditious consideration of adjustment assistance petitions (and publish in the Federal Register that he has made such determination); and (2) publish his order to the Secretaries of Labor and Commerce directing them to give such expeditious consideration, if the Tariff Commission recommends the provision of adjustment assistance.

The House recedes with an amendment under which, after receiving an affirmative determination of injury (or threat thereof) the President shall (in addition to recommending whatever adjustment assistance that he deems advisable):

(1) provide import relief as recommended by the Commission;

(2) provide such other import relief as he deems appropriate; Provided, however, if he determines it is not in the national economic interest, he may provide no import relief.

However, if the President does not provide any import relief (because he determines it is not in the national economic interest) or if he provides relief other than recommended by the Commission, he must report his reasons to the Congress, and the Congress by an approval of a concurrent resolution under the procedures established by section 151 may provide import relief, as recommended by the Commission, or otherwise.

Amendments Nos. 202 and 208: The House bill permits the President, within 45 days after receiving an affirmative finding of injury by the Tariff Commission, to request additional information from the Commission. The Commission in not less than 30 days after such request (60 days in the case extensive additional information is requested) is required to furnish such information. Senate amendment No. 202 requires the President to request additional information within 15 days after receiving the finding and Senate amendment No. 208 deletes the additional 30 day period allowed under the House provision for Tariff Commission report in the case of extensive information. The House recedes with respect to amendment No. 202, the Senate recedes with respect to amendment No. 208.

Amendment No. 207: This amendment deletes from section 203 of the House bill the provision stating that, for purposes of providing import relief, the following methods shall be preferred to the methods listed below it:

- (1) Increases in, or imposition of, duties,
- (2) tariff rate quotas,
- (3) quantitative restrictions,
- (4) orderly marketing agreements.

This amendment further requires the President, if required under section 202(a) (1) to provide import relief, to take one or more of the relief actions set forth in section 203 of the House bill (redesignated section 203(a) by the Senate). The House recedes with an amendment.

Amendment No. 209: This amendment deletes section 203(c) of the House bill, which requires the President to report to Congress when he selects a method or methods of providing import relief (including a statement as to why he selected a method of relief over methods ranking higher in preference under section 203(a) of the House bill and over the provision of adjustment assistance), and provides instead that on the day the President proclaims import relief or announces his intention to negotiate orderly marketing agreements, he shall transmit to Congress a document setting forth the kind of action taken by him, and if such action differs from that recommended by the Tariff Commission in its affirmative finding, the reason for such difference.

Amendment No. 251: Under section 222 of the House bill, the Secretary of Labor shall certify groups of workers as eligible to apply for adjustment assistance if he determines, among other things, that increases of imports of articles like or directly competitive with articles produced by the workers' firm contributed importantly to the total or partial separation of the workers from employment, or to an absolute decrease in sales or production of the firm. The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to find an absolute increase in such imports. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 252: This amendment, which adds a new paragraph to section 222 of the House bill, defines "contributed importantly" (as such term applies to the effect of imports on worker's employment or their firm's production and sales) as meaning a cause which is important but not necessarily more important than any other cause. This definition was not included in the House bill, but was set forth in the House report. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 253 and 254: Section 223(c) and (d) of the House bill requires the Secretary of Labor to promptly publish in the Federal Register (1) a summary of his determination made with respect to any petition for worker adjustment assistance, and (2) notice of his determination to terminate any certification of eligibility for assistance by workers. The Senate amendments require the Secretary to also publish at the same time his reasons for each such determination. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 262: Under section 232(a) of the House bill, the trade adjustment allowance payable to an adversely affected worker for a week of unemployment shall be (1) for any week in the first 26 weeks of such allowance 75 percent of his average weekly wage, and (2) any subsequent week of such allowance 65 percent of his average weekly wage. The Senate amendment provides that for any week of allowance, the allowance shall be 75 percent of his average weekly wage. Under both House and Senate versions, no weekly allowance may exceed the average weekly manufacturing wage and each weekly allowance is reduced by 50 percent of the amount of the remuneration for services performed by him during such week. The House recedes with an amendment providing that the allowance shall be 70 percent of the worker's average weekly wage for the entire 52 weeks of entitlement.

Amendment No. 264: Under section 232(e) of the House bill, whenever in any week of unemployment, the total amount payable to a worker as remuneration, unemployment compensation, training allowance, and trade readjustment exceeds (1) in the case of any week in the first 26 weeks of such allowance, 80 percent of his average weekly wage; or (2) in the case of any subsequent week, 75 percent of his average weekly wage, then the workers' trade readjustment allowance must be reduced by the amount of such excess. The Senate amendment eliminates the distinction between the first 26 weeks and subsequent weeks and provides that if the specified amounts payable to the worker exceed 80 percent of his average weekly wage for any week, the readjustment allowance for that week is reduced by the amount of the excess. Under both House and Senate versions, 130 percent of the average weekly manufacturing wage, if less than the percentage of the workers' average weekly wage which otherwise applies, is used for purposes of computing the reduction. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 265: This amendment eliminates the provision in the House bill which provides for Federal reimbursement to the States for any unemployment insurance provided under State programs to workers who are eligible for adjustment assistance under the bill. Under the bill as amended by the Senate, Federal funding is provided only for that portion of a worker's adjustment benefits which exceed his entitlement under the State unemployment program. The House recedes.

Senate amendments Nos. 268 and 267: Section 233 of the House bill provides that payments of trade readjustment allowances may not be made to any worker for more than 52 weeks, except that payments may be made (1) for an additional 26 weeks to a worker to assist him to complete training, and (2) for an additional 13 weeks to a worker who attained age 60 on or before the date of his total or partial separation from employment. Senate amendment No. 266 would provide for payments for an additional 26 weeks in the case of workers age 60 and over; and Senate amendment No. 267 imposes a maximum limitation of 78 weeks of trade readjustment allowances for any worker. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 268: This amendment provides that no trade adjustment allowance may be paid to a worker for an additional week to assist him in completing training unless the worker makes application for a training program approved by the Secretary within the later of (1) 180 days after the end of the week of his most recent total or partial separation (as the case may be), or (2) the date of his first certification of eligibility to apply for adjustment assistance. The House recedes.

Senate amendments Nos. 270 and 271: Section 236 of the House bill authorized the Secretary of Labor to defray subsistence and transportation expenses for workers undergoing training at facilities not within commuting distance of the worker's residence. The House bill provided subsistence payments not exceeding $5 per day, and transportation expense payments not exceeding 10 cents per mile. Senate amendment No. 270 provides for subsistence payments not exceeding $15 per day and Senate amendment No. 271 provides for transportation payments not exceeding 12 cents per mile. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 272: The House bill allows a displaced worker to apply for a job search allowance for up to one year after he becomes unemployed. The Senate amendment allows a worker who has been referred to training to apply for a job search allowance within a reasonable period of time after the conclusion of such training. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 273: The House bill requires workers seeking relocation allowances to apply for these allowances before the time in which the relocation move is made. The amendment permits applications for such allowances to be made within a reasonable time after the move has been completed. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 274: The House bill contains a provision which states that any determination by a cooperating State agency with respect to entitlement to payments of adjustment assistance allowances is subject to review in the same manner as are determinations under the State unemployment insurance law. The Senate amendment applies State review standards to all adjustment assistance program benefits. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 275: This amendment amends the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 in order to reduce by 15 percent the credits for State unemployment taxes which employers are allowed against their liability for Federal Unemployment Tax if the Secretary of Labor finds that the State has not entered into before July 1, 1975, or fulfilled its commitments under, a cooperative agreement with the Secretary for the administration of adjustment assistance benefits within such State. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 276: This amendment provides that final determinations as to entitlement to all adjustment assistance benefits (rather than to only allowance payments as in the House bill) made by the Secretary of Labor absent an agreement under section 239 with a State shall be judicially reviewable as provided in section 205(g) of the Social Security Act. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 281: This amendment authorizes the appropriation (for purposes of training under section 236 of the bill) $50,000,000 for fiscal year 1975 and such sums as are necessary for the 5 succeeding fiscal years. No separate authorization for training was contained in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment eliminating the specified $50,000,000 limitation on appropriations for fiscal year 1975, and an amendment authorizing necessary appropriations for the 7 succeeding fiscal years after fiscal year 1975, thereby conforming the appropriation authorization to the conference agreement on the date of termination of all adjustment assistance programs.

Amendment No. 284: This amendment provides that weeks of unemployment beginning after the effective date of the worker's adjustment assistance chapter for which trade adjustment allowances were payable under the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 shall be deducted from the total number of weeks of unemployment for which the worker is eligible for allowances under such chapter. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 288: The amendment adds a new section to the bill which authorizes the Secretary of Labor to require by subpoena the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence necessary for him to make determinations under the worker adjustment assistance chapter. U.S. district courts are authorized to issue orders requiring compliance with such subpoenas. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 289: This amendment adds a new section to the bill under which any worker or group of workers may receive judicial review in United States circuit courts of appeals of any final determination by the Secretary of Labor on the eligibility of workers to apply for adjustment assistance. The findings of the Secretary shall be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Amendment No. 320: This Senate amendment creates a new program of adjustment assistance for communities adversely affected by imports. A community, group of communities, or Governor of a State on behalf of a community or communities may file a petition with the Secretary of Commerce for certification of eligibility to apply for community adjustment assistance. The Secretary must certify a community eligible to apply if he determines: (a) a significant number or proportion of workers in the trade impacted area where the community is located are or are threatened to become totally or partially unemployed; (b) sales and/or production of firms in the trade impacted area have decreased absolutely; and (c) increased import of articles like or directly competitive with those produced by the firms or the transfer of firms from the trade impacted area to foreign countries have contributed importantly to (a) and (b).

Benefits can be extended only if the Secretary approves the adjustment assistance plan. Adjustment assistance for qualified communities consists of:

All forms of assistance other than loan guarantees, as provided a redevelopment area under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 ("PWEDA") and loan guarantees with a termination date September 30, 1982 as expressly provided in the Trade Act. Under the PWEDA the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to provide assistance to attract new investment and to create additional long term employment opportunities in the area in the form of:

- (1) direct grants for acquisition and development of land and improvements for public works, public service, or development facilities, including authority for additional grants to areas of substantial unemployment;
- (2) loans to purchase land and facilities for such purposes as constructing, modernizing and expanding plant facilities; and
- (3) technical assistance which would be useful in alleviating or preventing excessive unemployment or underemployment.

Loan guarantees for working capital and for the acquisition or improvement of plant facilities may be made to private borrowers by private lending institutions are subject to the same terms and conditions as under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965.

The Senate amendment imposed two major conditions upon applicants for loan guarantees: first that officials of the state or locality or both pledge such portion of a future revenue sharing entitlement as necessary to cover fifty percent of any deficiency arising from a default, and second, in the case of corporations, that an amount of stock equal to twenty-five percent of the amount guaranteed be paid by the lender into a trust which is part of an employee stock ownership plan established and maintained solely by the corporation. The House bill contained no such provisions. The House recedes with the following amendments:

First, delete the word "absolute" so as to permit the Secretary to issue certifications whenever he determines that increases of imports, whether absolute or relative, have contributed importantly to the total or partial separation of workers and to the decline in sales or production, of firms, or threat thereof, in the affected area.

Second, extend the expiration on date of the community program from September 30, 1980, to September 30, 1982.

Third, in place of the Senate bill's provisions on joint liability for loan guarantees provide that the Governor of the State, the authorized representative of the community, or both, in which an applicant for a loan guarantee is located may enter into an agreement providing that such State or community or both will pay one half of the amount of any liability arising from the loan guarantee, if the State in which the applicant has established by law a program approved by the Secretary for such purpose. It is the understanding of the managers that an amendment to the State and Local Fiscal Assistance Act of 1972 to include such a use of funds among the enumerated purposes for which funds may be applied under that Act will be considered in 1977 when that legislation is considered for renewal.

December 19, 1974

Fourth, provide that when considering loan guarantees for qualified corporations, the Secretary shall give preference to corporations which have or undertake to establish a qualified employee stock ownership plan established and maintained solely by the corporation.

Amendment No. 322: This Senate amendment requires the Comptroller General to conduct a study, assisted by the Departments of Labor and Commerce, of the worker, firm and community adjustment assistance programs. The study by the General Accounting Office, among other things, will evaluate: (1) the effectiveness of the programs in aiding adjustment to import competition and; (2) the coordination of the administration of the programs with other government programs providing unemployment compensation and relief to depressed areas. The report is to be submitted to the Congress by January 30, 1979. The House bill contained no similar provision. The House recedes with an amendment requiring that the report be submitted to the Congress no later than January 31, 1980 instead of January 30, 1979.

Amendment No. 323: This Senate amendment replaces a comparable provision contained in the House bill. An Adjustment Assistance Coordinating Committee is created to consist of a Deputy Special Trade Representative, as Chairman, and officials charged with adjustment assistance responsibilities of the Departments of Labor and Commerce and the Small Business Administration. The Committee is charged with the coordination of the adjustment assistance policies, studies, and programs of the various agencies involved and to promote the efficient and effective delivery of adjustment assistance benefits. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 324: This Senate amendment directs the Secretaries of Commerce and Labor to establish and maintain a program to monitor imports of articles which will reflect changes in the volume of such imports, the relation of such imports to changes in relevant domestic production and employment, and the extent to which such changes in production and employment are concentrated in specific geographic regions of the country. A second provision added by the Senate required the Secretaries to gather additional information concerning the international operations of multinational corporations doing business in the United States. The information would cover direct investment by any such corporation in each foreign affiliate, gross sales, employment data, etc. The information gathered under this provision is to be published regularly. The House bill contained no such provisions. The House recedes with an amendment deleting the provision relating to information concerning the international operations of multinational corporations. It is the understanding of the managers that nothing in the remaining provision will be construed to require the tracing of articles imported into the United States to their points of sale in specific regions or areas of the country.

Amendment No. 325: This Senate amendment required that every firm, prior to moving production facilities abroad, should: (1) give at least 60 days advance notice to its employees who are likely to become totally or partially unemployed; (2) at the same time give the Secretaries of Labor and Commerce notice of the move; (3) apply for and use all adjustment assistance for which it is eligible; (4) offer employment opportunities, if any exist, to its affected employees; and (5) assist in relocating employees where employment opportunities exist. The House bill contained no such provision. The House recedes with an amendment requiring that items 3, 4, and 5, above, be stated as being the sense of the Congress.

Amendment No. 326: This Senate amendment provides that the worker, firm, and community adjustment assistance provisions of title II of the Senate bill will become effective on the 90th day after the date of enactment of this Act. Such provisions are to terminate on September 30, 1982.

Amendment No. 329: Section 301(a) (4) of the Senate bill adds a provision to bases for retaliation, explicitly applying the discretionary retaliation authority to unjustifiable or unreasonable restrictions on access to supplies which burden or restrict U.S. commerce. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 330: The Senate bill extends retaliatory measures to include imposition of fees or restrictions on foreign services, as well as imposition of duties or other import restrictions on foreign goods. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 331: Section 301(a) of the Senate bill explicitly defines "commerce" to include services for purposes of the retaliation authority. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 332: Section 301(b) of the House bill required the President to consider U.S. international obligations when determining what actions to take under section 301. The Senate bill deleted this requirement. The House bill permitted actions against unjustifiable foreign practices to be taken on an MFN or selective basis. Actions against unreasonable foreign practices were to be on a selective basis. The Senate bill removes the distinction between unreasonable and unjustifiable practices, and authorized action on an MFN or selective basis in all cases. However, actions by the President would be subject to Congressional veto by a concurrent resolution of disapproval under Section 302 if the action is MFN rather than only against the country involved. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 334: The Senate bill adds a requirement, in addition to the provision in the House bill providing an opportunity for interested parties to present views, that the Special Trade Representative review complaints, publish them in the Federal Register, and hold public hearings upon request of the complainant on the alleged foreign restrictions. Also, the Special Trade Representative must submit a semiannual report to the Congress summarizing the reviews and hearings it has conducted during the preceding 6-month period. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 335: Section 301(e) of the House bill contained a provision requiring the President to provide an opportunity for the presentation of views and public hearings prior to the taking of action under Section 301. The Senate bill would also permit such presentation of views and hearings to take place promptly after the action, if the President determines that holding them prior to taking action would be contrary to the national interest because expeditious action is needed. The House recedes.

Amendment Nos. 336-337: The House bill provided for a one-House veto of any action under 301. The Senate bill provides for a two-House veto of any action taken by the President on an MFN basis. Following the adoption of such a two-House resolution of disapproval, such action would remain in effect only with respect to the country(ies) whose practice was the cause for taking action under Section 301. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 338: Section 321(a) of the House bill required that a preliminary dumping determination be made by the Secretary of the Treasury within six months after the question of dumping was presented to him. In more complicated investigations such determinations could have been made within nine months after such question was presented. The Senate bill permits the period for the preliminary determination to be extended to nine months only after the Secretary of the Treasury concludes that such determination can not be reasonably made in six months and publishes a notice in the Federal Register with a statement of his reasons for such determination.

The Senate bill requires the Secretary to make a final dumping determination within three months after a preliminary determination, whether such preliminary determination was affirmative or negative. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate bill requires the Secretary to determine whether or not to initiate an investigation within thirty days of the receipt of information alleging dumping. The Secretary would publish an affirmative determination to initiate an investigation in the Federal Register, and the time limits in the Senate bill would proceed from the date of such publication. The time limits in the House bill proceeded from the date on which the question of dumping was deemed to be presented to the Secretary.

Section 321(a) of the Senate bill provides that if, during the thirty day period of his determination whether or not to initiate an investigation, the Secretary of the Treasury concludes there is substantial doubt as to whether a domestic industry is being or is likely to be injured, he must give his reasons for such determination and any preliminary information available to him to the Tariff Commission. If the Commission determines within thirty days of receipt of the reasons and information that there is no reasonable indication of injury to an industry, it will advise the Secretary and any investigation will terminate. Otherwise, the investigation of the Secretary would continue. The House bill did not contain a similar provision.

Under the House bill, foreign manufacturers, exporters, and domestic importers had an automatic right to appear at hearings required to be conducted by the Secretary and the Commission. The Senate bill would amend Section 201(d) (1) of the Antidumping Act to extend the automatic hearing rights to include U.S. manufacturers, producers, or wholesalers of merchandise of the same class or kind, as well as foreign manufacturers, exporters and domestic importers of such merchandise. Under the Senate bill hearings would be held only at the request of one of the above interested parties.

The Senate bill adds the explicit qualification to the determination procedure that preserves any confidential treatment granted by the Secretary or the Commission during the course of the determination. The House bill did not contain a similar provision.

The House recedes with the understanding that the Secretary of the Treasury is not precluded from issuing an affirmative preliminary determination and withholding appraisalment, following the issuance of a preliminary negative determination. However, the Secretary must issue his final determination within three months of his first preliminary determination under the Antidumping Act.

December 19, 1974

Amendment No. 343: The Senate bill adds a new subsection 205(d) to the Antidumping Act which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to impose dumping duties when a multinational corporation operating in several foreign countries supports low-priced exports to the United States through high-priced sales by other subsidiaries located in protected markets. More specifically, when the Secretary determines that:

(1) merchandise exported to the United States is produced in facilities owned or controlled by person, firm or corporation which also owns or controls facilities producing similar merchandise in other countries;

(2) sales in the home market of the country exporting to the U.S. are nonexistent or inadequate as a basis for comparison with sales of such or similar merchandise in the United States; and

(3) sales of like or similar merchandise made in one or more of the other countries are at prices substantially higher than the prices charged for goods produced in the exporting country;

the Secretary may determine the foreign market value by looking at the higher prices (adjusted for differences in cost of production and costs incident to packing) at which such like or similar goods are sold in substantial quantities by one or more of such other foreign facilities located outside the exporting country. The dumping duty could then be assessed in the amount equal to the difference between the purchase price in the United States (or the exporter's sale price) and the higher foreign market value of the goods not actually exported to the United States. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes with an amendment making the Senate provision mandatory. Thus, the "may" in italics above is changed to shall.

Amendment No. 346: The Senate bill added an amendment to Section 481 of the Tariff Act to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to require that certified import invoices, other than for special transactions, include data on: (1) all rebates, drawbacks, and bounties and grants on the merchandise; and (2) the unit price of the same or similar merchandise in the home market of the country of export. The information would not be required if the customs officer determined it is currently available. The provision would apply to goods imported on or after the 90th day after enactment of the Act. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 347: The Senate bill adds a new section 516(d) to the Tariff Act to provide domestic manufacturers, producers, or wholesalers the right of judicial review in the U.S. Customs Court of negative dumping and countervailing duty determinations. The written notice of desire to contest must be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury within 30 days after the determination. This provision will apply to dumping and countervailing duty complaints made on or after enactment of the Trade Act. Under existing law importers and foreign producers are entitled to judicial review. Further, with respect to an antidumping proceeding or countervailing duty proceeding, upon summons, the Secretary is required to furnish the Customs Court with certified copies of the transcript of all hearings, and all notices, determinations or other matters published in the Federal Register in connection with a particular antidumping or countervailing duty proceeding. The House bill did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 353-4: Section 331 of the Senate bill contains a provision for a countervailing duty investigation to be initiated by the filing of a petition by any person setting forth his reasons for believing a bounty or grant exists, as well as at the initiative of the Secretary, which was required in the House bill. In both bills, there must be a Federal Register notice of the initiation of the investigation.

The Senate bill adds a 6-month time limit for a preliminary determination and retains the House 12-month limit for a final determination. In the Senate bill, the time limit begins on the date the petition is filed or the initiation notice is published, rather than from the date the question is presented to the Secretary, as under the House bill. The Senate bill requires that countervailing duties be imposed as of the publication date of the final determination. The House bill provided that such orders would apply 30 days after publication in the Federal Register.

The Senate bill adds to the House bill's extension of the injury test to duty-free imports a change in the suspension of liquidation provision, i.e., provides for suspension in the event the Secretary determines a bounty or grant exists with respect to nondutiable imports so as to require the same effective date for imposition of countervailing duties regardless of whether the merchandise in question is dutiable. Liquidation would be suspended immediately under the Senate bill, rather than 30 days after publication of the determination, as under the House bill.

The Senate bill deletes the provision in the House bill that the imposition of a countervailing duty shall not be required on any article subject to quantitative limitations where such limitations are determined to be an adequate substitute for a countervailing duty.

The Senate bill replaces the temporary waiver provision in the House bill, applicable while negotiations are in progress, with a new discretionary provision adding an explicit Congressional mandate for the President to negotiate internationally-agreed rules and procedures governing the use of subsidies and other export incentives, and the application of countervailing duties. The Senate bill deletes the one-year carve-out in the House bill for cases where an article is produced in facilities owned or controlled by a developed country, which are subsidized. Discretion under the Senate bill in the imposition of countervailing duties is permitted during the two year, rather than the four year period, following enactment under the House bill if the Secretary determines, after seeking advice from appropriate agencies that:

(1) adequate steps have been taken to eliminate or substantially reduce the adverse effect of the bounty or grant;

(2) there is a reasonable prospect that successful trade agreements under Section 102 will be entered into; and

(3) the imposition of countervailing duties would be likely to seriously jeopardize negotiations.

The Senate bill prohibits the waiver of otherwise mandated countervailing duties in cases involving import-sensitive items such as footwear. The House bill did not contain a similar provision.

The House bill requires only that the third condition exist for the Secretary to be able to exercise the waiver, whereas the Senate version permits the waiver only if all of the three conditions exist. Under the Senate, the Secretary may revoke his determination at any time, and must revoke it if a basis supporting such waiver no longer exists.

The Senate bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to promptly report his determination not to impose duties and reasons therefor to both Houses of Congress. Countervailing duties will be imposed if a majority of those present and voting of either House adopts at any time a disapproval resolution under Section 152 procedures. The House bill did not contain a similar provision.

The House recedes with amendments. The discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to waive countervailing duties under the conditions specified in the Senate provision are to be effective for a four year period following date of enactment. The prohibition against the application of the waiver will apply only with respect to nonrubber footwear imports. It is the understanding of the conferees that the requirement concerning the elimination or reduction of adverse effects in the waiver provision is not to be construed as the intent of Congress that this language inject an injury concept into countervailing duty cases regarding dutiable goods, nor that the President negotiate, in every case, orderly marketing agreements with countries who are subsidizing exports to the United States in order to avoid the imposition of countervailing duties through use of such waiver.

Amendment No. 368: This Senate amendment amends section 515(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930 by inserting before the period at the end thereof the phrase "or the imposition of countervailing duties under Section 303." The House did not contain a similar provision. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 369: Section 321(d) of the Senate bill provides that for purposes of applying the provisions of Section 303(a) (4) (time limits on preliminary and final determinations) with respect to any countervailing duty investigation initiated before the date of enactment, such investigation shall be considered initiated on the day after such date of enactment. The amendment further provided that the Secretary's final determination on all countervailing complaints filed more than six months before enactment will be reached within six months after enactment. The House recedes with respect to the first provision relating to Section 303(a) (4) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (as amended). The Senate recedes with respect to the second provision relating to complaints filed more than six months before enactment, with the understanding that Section 321(d) of the Senate bill is adequate to subject pending complaints to the time limits of the countervailing duty statutes, as now amended.

Amendment No. 370: This Senate amendment extensively revises Section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930, relating to unfair import practices, so as to vest solely in the International Trade Commission (subject to Presidential intervention for policy reasons only) final authority to exclude articles concerned in all unfair methods of import competition under Section 337, and to make other changes relating to the disposition of such cases. The House recedes with one amendment, striking the Senate provision requiring the International Trade Commission to consider in cases based upon claims of U.S. letters patent, defenses of price gouging.

Amendment No. 375: This amendment adds to section 402 of the House bill (relating to freedom of emigration in East-West trade) a new subsection (c) which authorizes the President to waive the freedom of emigration requirements in such section for a period of 18 months after the date of the enactment of the bill for any nonmarket country if he reports to Congress that the waiver will substantially promote the freedom of emigration objectives of the section and that he has received assurances that the emigration practices of that country will substantially lead to the achievement of the objectives of such section. The amendment further authorizes the President to extend the waiver at the end of the 18-month period.

and every year thereafter, subject to an affirmative approval, and thereafter congressional veto requirement. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 378: This amendment adds a new section 403 to the bill which provides that no nonmarket economy country may receive nondiscriminatory treatment or participate in a program under which the U.S. extends credit, credit guarantees, or investment guarantees, and no commercial agreement between the U.S. and any such country may enter into effect, during any period in which the President determines that such country is not cooperating with the U.S. to account for all U.S. personnel missing in action in Southeast Asia, to repatriate such personnel who are alive, and to return the remains of such personnel who are dead. The amendment further provides that any such country may receive such treatment and participate in such program, and that any such agreement shall enter into effect, if the President submits a report to Congress indicating that such country is so cooperating. Such report must include information on the nature of the cooperating and semiannual reports on the degree of cooperation by that country is required for so long as the nondiscriminatory treatment and credit or guarantees, or any such agreement, is in effect. The amendment does not apply to countries eligible for column 1 tariff treatment. The House recedes with an amendment which authorizes the President to deny the extension of most favored nation treatment, credits, guarantees, to countries which he determines are not cooperating with the United States in achieving the objectives of the Senate amendment. The President's reports to Congress would relate generally to compliance of countries involved in the MIA problem.

Amendment No. 380: Subsection (a) of section 403 of the House bill (section 404 as redesignated by the Senate) stated that the President may by proclamation extend nondiscriminatory treatment to products of a foreign country which has entered into a bilateral commercial agreement or is party to an appropriate multilateral trade agreement to which the U.S. is a party. The Senate amendment replaces the House provision with language stating that the President may only extend nondiscriminatory treatment to a country which has entered into a bilateral agreement with the U.S. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 385: This amendment provides that any bilateral commercial agreement entered into by the President may be renewed if during the life of the agreement a satisfactory balance of concessions in trade and services (balance of trade concessions under the House version) was maintained. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 387: This amendment amends section 405 of the House bill (relating to the authority of the President to enter into bilateral commercial agreements providing nondiscriminatory treatment to products of countries heretofore denied such treatment) to require that any such agreement—

- (1) include safeguard arrangements providing for prompt consultations when actual or prospective imports cause, threaten, or significantly contribute to market disruption, and the imposition of import restrictions appropriate to prevent such disruption (a more detailed statement of such arrangements than provided for in the House bill);
- (2) if the party to the agreement is not a party to such Convention, provides rights for United States nationals with respect to patents and trade marks not less than the rights specified under the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property;
- (3) if the party to the agreement is not a party to such Convention, provide rights for United States nationals with respect to copyrights not less than the rights specified under the Universal Copyright Convention;

- (4) contain arrangements to protect industrial rights and processes (and such arrangements shall apply only to agreements entered into and renewed after the date of enactment of the bill);

- (5) contain arrangements for trade promotion; and

- (6) contain other commercial arrangements necessary to promote the purposes of the bill.

The rights and arrangements required under paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (5), and (6) were discretionary under the House bill. The Senate amendment further requires that no bilateral commercial agreement, nor any proclamation extending nondiscriminatory treatment, shall be effective unless approved by Congress by concurrent resolution under the procedures in section 151 of the bill and provided that any such agreement entered into before the date of enactment of the bill, and any proclamation implementing any such agreement, may enter into effect subject to the disapproval of either House of Congress under the procedure contained in section 152. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 389: This amendment substantially revises section 405 of the House bill (section 406 as redesignated by the Senate) under which petitions may be filed with the International Trade Commission regarding products of countries receiving nondiscriminatory treatment under title IV of the bill to determine whether such products are causing market disruption and material injury to U.S. industries producing like or directly competitive articles. Under the Senate amendment—

- (1) the Commission must determine whether market disruption exists with respect to an article produced by a domestic industry;

- (2) market disruption is found to exist within a domestic industry whenever an article is being or is likely to be imported into the United States in such increased quantities as to be a significant cause of material injury or threat thereof to such industry (under the House language disruption exists whenever imports of a like or directly competitive article are substantial, are increasing rapidly both absolutely and relative to total domestic consumption, and are offered at prices substantially below those of comparable domestic articles);

- (3) disruption determinations are made with respect to the products of any country dominated or controlled by Communism rather than, as under the House version, only countries to which nondiscriminatory treatment has been extended under title IV;

- (4) certain procedural and hearing requirements applicable to import relief determination under title II are made applicable;

- (5) reduces the time limit for market disruption investigations from six months to three months;

- (6) prohibits the Commission from recommending adjustment assistance in such cases;

- (7) requires the President to impose import relief after an affirmative finding of market disruption;

- (8) prohibits the President from applying import relief measures to imports other than those from the particular country involved in the affirmative determination;

- (9) requires the President to initiate an investigation if he finds reasonable grounds that market disruption exists;

- (10) authorizes the President to take emergency relief action under section 201 and 203; and

- (11) provides that petitions may be filed with the Special Representative for Trade Negotiations requesting that consultations provided for under safeguard arrangements contained in bilateral agreements with Communist countries be initiated.

The House recedes with amendments which (1) provide that petitions requesting consultations under safeguard arrangements be submitted to the President rather than to the Special Trade Representative, and (2) to redefine market disruption to exist whenever imports of a like or directly competitive article are increasing rapidly both absolutely and as a proportion of total domestic consumption, and such imports are causing or are likely to cause material injury to a domestic industry. The conferees understand that foreign entities would not be eligible to petition for relief under either section 201 or section 406.

Amendments Nos. 393 and 394: These amendments revise the procedures relating to the submission of required documents for, and the effect of, Congressional action on the approval or disapproval of extension of nondiscriminatory treatment to nonmarket economy countries. Under the House bill, Congress could disapprove the extension of nondiscriminatory treatment to a nonmarket economy country. The Senate bill revised the House provisions (1) to require affirmative Congressional approval of any bilateral agreement extending MFN treatment if the agreement was entered into after enactment of this Act; (2) to provide for Congressional disapproval of the agreement and implementing proclamation with a nonmarket economy country if the agreement was entered into before enactment of this Act; and (3) to provide for Congressional disapproval of reports submitted under title IV, which disapproval would deny continuation of MFN treatment, deny further participation in United States credit, or guarantee programs and preclude conclusion of a bilateral agreement under section 406.

Amendments Nos. 396 and 397: Amendment No. 396 adds a new section 408 to the bill which provides that (1) Czechoslovakia may not receive nondiscriminatory treatment or participate in any Federal programs extending credit or credit guarantees or investment guarantees, and (2) the United States may not consent to the release to Czechoslovakia of any gold belonging to that country and controlled by the United States pursuant to the Paris Reparations Agreement of January 24, 1946; until the government of Czechoslovakia pays a principal amount it owes to United States citizens under awards rendered against that country by the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission. Amendment No. 397 provides that if Czechoslovakia continues to fail to pay such awards, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to determine whether Czechoslovakia owns the gold which is controlled by the United States and, upon such finding, issue orders and judgments resulting in the payment of the claims of United States citizens against Czechoslovakia, with any balance remaining to be paid to that country. Under the conference agreement, any bilateral agreement with Czechoslovakia extending most favored nation treatment must include a renegotiation of the claims settlement. However, a more equitable claims settlement may be renegotiated prior to submission of a commercial agreement. The conferees intend that there be a speedy renegotiation of a claims settlement by individuals other than those who negotiated the unreasonable first tentative agreement. No further government credits may be extended to Czechoslovakia until the claims settlement is renegotiated and approved by Congress.

Also, the United States shall not release any gold to Czechoslovakia until the claims settlement is approved.

Amendment No. 398: This amendment adds a new section 409 to the bill which provides that no nonmarket economy country may receive nondiscriminatory treatment or participate in a program under which the U.S. extends credit, credit guarantees, or investment guarantees, and no commercial agreement between the U.S. and any such country may be concluded, during any period in which the President determines that such country has failed to enter into an agreement with the U.S. providing for a mutual exchange of information on production, consumption, and demand of major agricultural commodities, or after entering into such an agreement fails to fulfill it. The amendment further provides that any such country may receive such treatment and participate in such program, and that any such agreement shall enter into effect, if the President submits a report to Congress indicating that such country has entered into, and is fulfilling, such an agreement. The amendment does not apply to countries currently eligible for column 1 tariff treatment. The House recedes with an amendment which makes the application of the prohibition in this section discretionary on the part of the President. The Senate recedes, but it is the intent of the Conferees that the President must determine that there has been compliance with the intent of the Senate amendment on the part of any foreign country before any bilateral commercial agreement entered into under the authority of section 405 of the bill including the extension of most favored nation treatment with that country is renewed. Under the bill, all bilateral commercial agreements must be renewed every three years.

Amendments Nos. 399 and 400: Amendment No. 399 added a new section 411 to the bill to prohibit the extension of nondiscriminatory treatment and credits, and the concluding of any commercial agreement, with any nonmarket economy country during any period in which the President finds that such country denies its citizens freedom to emigrate to join any close relative living in the United States, or takes other action to dissuade such emigration. Amendment No. 399 added a new section 410 to the bill the intent of which was to provide that during any period in which a waiver is in effect for any country under section 402(c) of the bill (waiver of prohibition against nonmarket countries which restrict emigration in East-West trade) such waiver shall also apply to that country for purposes of section 411. The House recedes with amendments (1) making conforming amendments necessary to apply the waiver provisions of section 410 to 411, and (2) exempting countries entitled to column 1 tariff treatment on the date of the enactment of the bill from the application of section 411. By including section 411, as amended, in the bill, the Conferees intend to underscore the high importance attached to the right and opportunity to emigrate for the purpose of reuniting close relatives with their families in the United States. The Conferees, however, do not intend to change or affect in any way the provisions of the "Jackson-Vanik amendment," which also deals with freedom of emigration, or to imply that any additional requirements are inserted. Indeed, the purpose of the Conferees' modifications is to bring the coverage of this amendment into complete harmony with the "Jackson-Vanik amendment." The amendment, as amended, accordingly will not substantively go beyond the coverage of the Jackson-Vanik amendment, but the Conferees recommend its inclusion as a means of emphasizing this particular aspect of the general area covered by the Jackson-Vanik amendment.

Amendment No. 401: This amendment adds a new section 412 to the bill requiring the International Trade Commission to establish and maintain a program to monitor imports and exports between the U.S. and nonmarket economy countries. The Commission is required to publish a summary of data collected under the program not less than once each calendar quarter and transmit such publication to Congress. The House recedes with a conforming amendment.

Amendment No. 402: This amendment adds a new section 413 to the bill which establishes within the Executive Branch an East-West Foreign Trade Board to coordinate and oversee the orderly development of trade with nonmarket countries. The Board would be empowered to review East-West transactions involving U.S. Government credits or investment guarantees in excess of $5 million or involving the transfer of technology deemed vital to the U.S. national interest and persons contemplating such transactions would be required to file reports with the Board not less than 90 days before entering into the agreement. The amendment requires the Board to make a determination that any such transaction is in the national interest. Transactions involving more than $50 million which are determined by the Board to be in the national interest would be made subject to Congressional veto under section 152. The Board generally would be charged with oversight and review of U.S. relations with Communist countries. The House recedes with the following amendment:

SEC. 411. EAST-WEST FOREIGN TRADE BOARD.

(a) The President shall establish an East-West Foreign Trade Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board") to monitor trade between persons and agencies of the United States Government and nonmarket economy countries or instrumentalities of such countries to insure that such trade will be in the national interest of the United States.

(b) (1) Any person who exports technology vital to the national interest of the United States to a nonmarket economy country or an instrumentality of such country, and any agency of the United States which provides credits, guarantees or insurance to such country or such instrumentality in an amount in excess of $5,000,000 during any calendar year, shall file a report with the Board in such form and manner as the Board requires which describes the nature and terms of such export or such provision.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), if the total amount of credits, guarantees and insurance which an agency of the United States provides to all nonmarket economy countries and instrumentalities of such countries exceeds $5,000,000 during a calendar year, then all subsequent provisions of credits, guarantees or insurance in any amount, during such year shall be reported to the Board under the provisions of paragraph (1).

(c) The Board shall submit to Congress a quarterly report on trade between the United States and nonmarket economy countries and instrumentalities of such countries. Such report shall include a review of the status of negotiations of bilateral trade agreements between the United States and such countries under this title, the activities of joint trade commissions created pursuant to such agreements, the resolution of commercial disputes between the United States and such countries, any exports from such countries which have caused disruption of United States markets, and recommendations for the promotion of East-West trade in the national interest of the United States.

And the Senate agrees to the same.

Amendment No. 406: This Senate amendment provides that, for purposes of generalized preferences, those members of an association of countries which constitute a free trade or customs union and which are not otherwise ineligible for designation as beneficiary developing countries may be treated as one country. "Country" is defined to also include any overseas dependent territory or possession of a foreign country, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The comparable provision of the House bill provides that any association of countries for trade purposes, no member of which is otherwise barred from designation as a beneficiary developing country, could be treated as one country for purposes of GSP. The House provision also includes within the definition of country any insular possession of the United States. Senate amendment numbered 406 assures insular possessions no less favorable treatment than that afforded articles imported from beneficiary countries.

The House recedes.

Amendment No. 407. Section 502(b) of the House bill lists 26 countries which were expressly ineligible for designation as beneficiary developing countries, and in addition, expressly excluded countries which do not receive most-favored-nation treatment and countries which afford other developed countries reverse preferences, unless the President was assured to his satisfaction that such preferences would be eliminated before January 1, 1976. The Senate bill retained the list of 26 excluded countries, but added the following categories of countries which also are ineligible for preferential treatment:

- (1) communist countries, except those which receive MFN treatment, are contracting parties to the GATT and members of the IMF, and are not "dominated or controlled by international communism". This exception is intended to apply only to Yugoslavia and Romania;

- (2) members of OPEC or other arrangements the effect of which is to withhold supplies of vital resources from international trade or to raise prices unreasonably causing disruption of the world economy;

- (3) countries affording reverse preferences to other developed countries, which have a significant adverse effect on United States commerce, unless the President receives assurances satisfactory to him that such reverse preferences or the adverse effect will be eliminated before January 1, 1976;

- (4) countries which have nationalized US-owned property without compensation, negotiation, or arbitration;

- (5) countries failing to take adequate steps to prevent drugs from entering the United States from such country illegally; and

- (6) countries failing to recognize or enforce arbitral awards not favored of United States citizens or businesses preferentially owned by United States citizens. The House recedes with the following amendment:

- (1) A country which is a member of OPEC or another cartel-type arrangement will be denied preferential treatment if it takes any action to withhold supplies of vital commodity resources from international trade or to raise the price of such commodities to an unreasonable level. The purpose of this provision is to deny tariff preferences to OPEC members or other cartel countries which cause serious disruption of the world economy.

- (2) The mandatory exclusions for nationalization, drug traffic, and failure to recognize arbitral awards are subject to a waiver by the President for reasons of national economic interest. The President must report to the Congress the reasons for not excluding such countries.

Amendment No. 408. Section 502(c) of the House bill provided several discretionary criteria which the President was required to consider in designating beneficiary developing countries, including whether a country had nationalized United States-owned property without payment of prompt, adequate, and effective compensation. The Senate bill deleted this nationalization criterion from the discretionary considerations (and added it to the mandatory exclusions), and added a discretionary criterion based on the extent to which a country has assured the United States of equitable and reasonable access to its markets and basic commodity resources. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 410: This amendment exempts from the exclusion of countries party to arrangements to withhold vital supplies of commodities or to raise the price of vital commodities to an unreasonable level, thereby causing serious disruption of the world economy, countries which enter into agreements contemplated under section 108, and are not in violation of such agreements. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 411: This amendment modifies the provisions of the House bill with respect to articles eligible for preferential tariff treatment. The House bill provides that value added in a beneficiary country from which the article is directly imported by not less than 35 percent and not more than 50 percent, as prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; this is modified to require that, in the case of a single beneficiary country, at least 35 percent of the value of the article be added in such country and in the case of an association of countries treated as one beneficiary country, at least 50 percent of the value of the article be added in countries that are members of the association. The amendment also excludes imports of textile and apparel articles subject to textile agreements, watches, import-sensitive electric articles and import-sensitive steel articles, specified footwear articles, semimanufactured and manufactured glass products and other articles determined by the President to be import sensitive in the context of generalized preferences from eligibility for preferential tariff treatment.

The House recedes, with the amendment to add the words "import-sensitive" before "semimanufactured" and "manufactured glass" to be excluded from eligibility for preferential treatment.

Amendment No. 412: The House bill terminates preferential treatment for a particular article from a particular country (1) whenever the value of United States imports of such article from such country exceed $25 million in any calendar year, or (2) whenever imports of such article from such country exceed 50 percent of the value of total United States imports of the article for any calendar year. The House bill provided that these limitations could be waived by the President for reasons of national interest.

The Senate bill amends these limitation provisions by inserting a formula by which the $25 million ceiling changes annually in proportion to annual changes in United States GNP compared with 1974 GNP, and by exempting from the 50 percent limit articles for which no like or directly competitive articles is being produced in the United States on the date of enactment. The Senate bill also restricts the President's authority to waive the $25 million and 50 percent ceilings to countries with respect to which the following conditions exist: (1) There has been an historical preferential trade relationship between the United States and such country, (2) there is a treating or trade agreement in force covering economic relations between the United States and such country, and (3) such country does not discriminate against, or impose unjustifiable or unreasonable barriers to, United States commerce. The Senate amendment also adds clarifying provisions with respect to the termination of a country's beneficiary status, and the redesignation of beneficiary countries whose status has been terminated.

The House recedes and accepts the Senate amendments.

Amendment No. 428: Section 606 of the House bill states that it is the sense of Congress that effective international cooperation is required to end illicit production, smuggling, trafficking in, and abuse of dangerous drugs. In order to promote such cooperation the President is required to embargo trade and investment with any nation when the President determines that such nation has failed to take adequate steps to prevent narcotics and other controlled substances produced or processed in, or transported through, such nation from entering the United States unlawfully. This section also requires that such suspension shall continue until the President determines that the Government of such nation has taken adequate steps to carry out the purposes of this section. The Senate amendment substitutes for the House language the requirement that the President shall submit a report to Congress each year listing those foreign countries in which narcotic drugs and controlled substances are produced, processed, or transported for unlawful entry into the United States and states that such report shall include a description of the measures such countries are taking to prevent such production, processing, or transport. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 429: This Senate amendment adds a new section 607 to the House bill stating that no person shall be liable for damages, penalties, or other sanctions under the Federal Trade Commission Act or the Antitrust Acts (or any similar State law) on account of his negotiating, entering into, participating in, or implementing an arrangement (or modification or renewal thereof) providing for the voluntary limitation on exports of steel and steel products to the United States, if such arrangement was undertaken before the date of enactment of this Act at the request of the Secretary of State and ceases to be effective not later than January 1, 1975. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 430: This Senate amendment amends section 484(e) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to require the Secretaries of the Treasury and Commerce and the International Trade Commission to establish a single enumeration of articles for import and export purposes, and to seek to provide comparability of statistics on domestic production with such enumeration. All import entries and export declarations are to be in terms of such enumeration.

The House recedes with an amendment which would require the Secretary of Commerce and the International Trade Commission to conduct a joint study of existing commodity classification systems with a view to identifying appropriate principles and concepts to guide the organization and development of an enumeration of articles which would permit comparability of United States import, production, and export data. A report with respect to such study is to be submitted to Congress and to the President no later than August 1, 1975. Further, the International Trade Commission is to conduct an investigation under section 332(g) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide the basis for a report on the appropriate concepts and principles which should underlie the formulation of an international commodity code adaptable for modernized tariff nomenclature purposes and for recording, handling, and reporting of transactions in national and international trade; such report is to be submitted no later than June 1, 1975. Also, the International Trade Commission is to begin full and immediate participation in the United States contribution to technical work on the Harmonized Systems Committee under the Customs Cooperation Council.

Amendment No. 431: This Senate amendment adds a new section 609 to the House bill which requires the Secretary of Commerce to submit to the Ways and Means and Finance Committees, on monthly and cumulative basis, statistics on U.S. imports for consumption and U.S. exports by country and product. The amendment sets forth detailed statistical categories and requires that the value of goods and agricultural commodities exported under agricultural and foreign assistance laws, and the total amount of U.S. subsidies paid with respect to agricultural commodities, be separately reported. The Secretaries of Agriculture and State are required to furnish the Secretary of Commerce certain information related to the reporting required under this section. The House recedes with an amendment that requires quarterly and cumulative basis submission of statistics, rather than monthly and cumulative.

Amendment No. 432: This Senate amendment amends section 321 of the Tariff Act of 1930 to increase the duty-free tourist exemption for mail gift items to the United States from American Samoa, Guam, or the Virgin Islands from $10 to $20 retail value. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 433: This Senate amendment adds a new section 611 to the bill which provides that in the case of any protest under section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 involving the imposition of an import surcharge in the form of a supplementary duty pursuant to Presidential action on August 17, 1971, the time for review and allowing or denying the protest shall not expire until 5 years after the date the protest was filed in accordance with such section 514. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 434: This Senate amendment added a new section 612 to the bill stating that it is the sense of Congress that the United States should enter into a trade agreement with Canada guaranteeing continued stability to the economies of the United States and Canada and that in order to promote such stability the President is authorized to initiate negotiations for a trade agreement with Canada to establish a free trade area covering the United States and Canada. Any agreement entered into must be reciprocal. It is required that nothing in this section shall be construed as prior approval of any legislation which may be necessary to implement such an agreement. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 435: This amendment added a new section 613 to the bill to provide that after the date of enactment of the bill, no Federal agency may approve any loans, guarantees, insurance, or any combination thereof in connection with exports to the Soviet Union in an aggregate amount which exceeds $300,000,000 without prior Congressional approval.

The House recedes, with an amendment exempting the Commodity Credit Corporation from the provisions of this section, and specifying that the Congressional approval of any loan, guaranty, insurance, or any combination thereof in excess of $300,000,000 must be approved as provided by law.

Approval, under the provisions of the Export-Import Bank Amendments of 1974, of any increase in the $300,000,000 limit contained in such Act on loans, guarantees, insurance, or any combination thereof shall be deemed approval of loans, guarantees, insurance, or any combination thereof in excess of $300,000,000 "as provided by law" under this Act.

Managers on the Part of the Senate.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the Senate and the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3022) to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (82 Stat. 906), as amended, to designate segments of certain rivers for possible inclusion in the national wild and scenic rivers system; to amend the Lower Saint Croix River Act of 1972 (86 Stat. 1174); and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the Senate and to the House in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The House amendment to the text of the bill struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for the

December 19, 1974

Senate bill and the House amendment. The differences between the Senate bill, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference, except for minor drafting changes of a purely technical nature, are noted below.

STUDY OF POTENTIAL COMPONENTS OF THE NATIONAL WILD AND SCENIC RIVER SYSTEM

The first section of both the Senate bill and the House amendment would amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (82 Stat. 906) to designate certain rivers or segments thereof for study to determine whether they should be added, by subsequent legislation, to the national wild and scenic rivers system established by that Act. The Senate bill would designate twenty-five rivers in eleven States and the House amendment thirteen rivers in ten States. The conference report designates twenty-nine rivers in thirteen States.

Included in subsection (a) of section 1 of the conference report are all nine of the rivers which would be designated by both the Senate bill and the House amendment. These rivers are the American, California; Au Sable, Michigan; Cahaba, Alabama; Colorado, Colorado and Utah; Kettle, Minnesota; Manistee, Michigan; West Fork of the Sipsy Fork, Alabama; Tuolumne, California; and Wisconsin, Wisconsin. The Senate bill provided for somewhat longer segments in the case of two of these rivers—the American (from Cedars to Mountain Meadow Lake and the lower 7.5 miles of the North Fork of the North Fork) and the Colorado (the thirty-six mile stretch in Utah from the Colorado-Utah border downstream to its confluence with the Dolores River)—than did the House amendment. The conferees agreed to the Colorado segment as designated in the Senate bill and the American segment as designated in the House amendment.

Second, the conferees agreed to include in subsection (a) of section 1 sixteen rivers contained in the Senate bill, but omitted from the House amendment: the Illinois, Oklahoma; John Day and South Fork Owyhee, Oregon; Shepaug, Connecticut; Upper Mississippi, Minnesota; and eleven rivers in Colorado—the Big Thompson, Cache la Poudre, Conejos, Elk, Encampment, Green, Gunnison, Los Pinos, Piedra, Yampa and Dolores. The conferees did, however, agree to limit the Illinois River segment to that portion within Oklahoma and to delete that portion in Arkansas which would be designated for study under the Senate bill.

Third, subsection (a) of section 1 of the conference report includes four rivers designated in the House amendment but absent from the Senate bill: the Nolichucky in Tennessee and North Carolina and three rivers in Wyoming: Clark's Fork, Snake, and Sweetwater. In the case of the three Wyoming rivers, however, the conferees agreed to provide the State legislature with the opportunity to act upon the recent recommendations of the Wyoming Stream Preservation Feasibility Study Committee. In particular, the conferees added a proviso stating that "with respect to the rivers named in subparagraphs (33), (50), and (51), the Secretaries shall not commence any studies until (i) the State legislature has acted with respect to such rivers or (ii) one year from the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is earlier."

TIME PERIOD AND AUTHORIZATIONS FOR THE RIVER STUDIES

Clause (1) of subsection (b) of the Senate bill concerns the time period in which the twenty-six river studies are to be conducted. This clause would amend section 4(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act to provide that twenty-five of the studies are to be completed by October 2, 1979. The twenty-sixth study—that of the Dolores—would be required to be completed by October 2, 1975.

The reasons for the early date on this river study are set forth in full on pages 27, 28 and 31 of Report No. 93-1207 accompanying the Senate bill.

The House amendment provided for a one year shorter study, concluding on October 2, 1978. The conferees agreed that although the four year study period in the House amendment might be sufficient to complete the thirteen river studies provided for in that amendment, the longer five year period would be necessary for the twenty-nine studies required by the conference report.

The conferees, therefore, agreed to adopt as clauses (b) (1) and (2) of section 1 of the conference report language amending section 5 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act to provide for a study period ending on October 2, 1978, for twenty-eight of the rivers and ending on January 3, 1974, for the Dolores. (The Dolores study was moved from October 7, 1975, to January 3, 1976, to insure a full year's study period.)

Section 2 of the House amendment provided for a $975,000 authorization for the study of the thirteen rivers designated in that amendment. The Senate bill had no specific authorization for the study of the twenty-five rivers it designated for study. The conferees agreed to the principle in the House amendment of an authorization ceiling, adjusted for the sixteen more rivers to be studied under the conference report than under the House amendment. Therefore, the conferees agreed to provide in clause (3) of subsection (b) of section 1 of the conference report an authorization ceiling of $2,175,000.

The decision to adopt a longer study period than the automatic three fiscal year period provided in section 7(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act necessitated the inclusion in subsection (c) of section 1 of the conference report the Senate bill's subsection 1(c). This subsection would amend subsection 7(b) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act by adding a proviso that where any Act which designates additional study rivers also establishes a different study time period than the three fiscal year period required by section 7(b) the different period prevails. This would eliminate any conflict between the conference report's provisions calling for a five year study period and the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act's provisions establishing three fiscal year study periods. It would also remove any ambiguity which may result from any future Acts establishing different study periods for study rivers which those Acts designate.

PRIORITY OF RIVERS STUDIED

Subsection (d) of section 1 of the conference report is identical to section 1(b) (2) of the Senate bill. The purpose of subsection (d) is to shorten the period of uncertainty landowners would experience when the rivers along which they live or work are designated for study under the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act.

Subsection (4) (a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, as amended by the Act of May 10, 1974 (88 Stat. 122), establishes a basis for determining the order in which rivers are to be studied. The fourth sentence of the subsection provides that "In conducting these studies the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall give priority to those rivers with respect to which there is the greatest likelihood of developments, which, if undertaken, would render the rivers unsuitable for inclusion in the national wild and scenic rivers system."

Subsection (d) would amend that sentence by providing a second basis for determining priority: early consideration is also to be given those rivers "which possess the greatest proportion of private lands within their areas". This basis for establishing priority would insure that those studies involving river segments which have a great number of private landowners along their borders will be completed quickly. This will serve to reduce the period of uncertainty landowners would otherwise experience while the study is being conducted and the President's recommendations determined.

AMENDING THE LOWER ST. CROIX RIVER ACT OF 1972

Section 2 of the conference report amends section 6 of the Lower Saint Croix River Act of 1972 (86 Stat. 1174) by increasing from $7,275,000 to $19,000,000 the authorization for the acquisition and development of land and interests therein along the 27 mile segment of the Lower Saint Croix River to be administered by the Secretary of the Interior. This authorization increase will permit the National Park Service to acquire the necessary land and interests in land to provide the degree of protection to the Federal segment of the wild and scenic river which was intended in the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act and the Lower Saint Croix River Act of 1972.

This section 2 is identical to section 2 of the Senate bill and has the identical result of increasing the authorization by $11,725,000 as that of H.R. 12960 which has been reported by the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

SENATE—Friday, December 20, 1974

The Senate met at 9 a.m. and was called to order by Hon. THOMAS J. MCINTYRE, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

PRAYER

Hon. HAROLD E. HUGHES, a Senator from the State of Iowa, offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we meet here today at the threshold of a winter of hard choices for humankind throughout the world. Once again, we pray to You on behalf of the Congress and the people of this beloved country. We ask not for bounty or good fortune but simply for the strength and wisdom to meet our problems as you would have us meet them.

In the selfless image of the humble Nazarene, we commit ourselves to turn aside the temptations of pomp and self-aggrandizement and to walk the path of righteousness and compassion. We ask for Your divine guidance to enable us to feel deeply the pain of the afflicted, the persecuted, and the deprived, for we know that even the least of these are our brothers and Your children. Holy Father, we ask Your blessing for the Members of this great governing body who will be continuing the Nation's work in the years ahead. And we ask Your blessing for those colleagues who are departing to do Your bidding in other fields or to find well-deserved rest from years of faithful service. Wherever we go, whatever we do, help us in doing Your will by doing everything within our mortal power to heal the sick, reconcile the alienated, and to forgive, in your Holy Name, those who have trespassed against us.

Holy Father, our transgressions are many. Help us to be a devout people. We believe You helped us in founding this Nation on faith in You as well as love of liberty. May it ever be that way. Bless and keep this melting pot, this United States of America, and all other peoples on this troubled planet.

Give us Your divine guidance, to never cease our work for peace and justice and brotherhood.

We ask all things according to His will, and on His name. Amen.

GUIDELINES FOR THE 94TH CONGRESS

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, we come near the end of the session. Certain things occur to me. One is that yesterday we enacted and sent to the President a great landmark bill, dealing with the right of privacy. It was Justice Brandeis who said:

Sunlight is the most powerful disinfectant. So I am very hopeful that this will reassure our people that their right to know once again has been preserved by an alert and watchful Congress.

As we review what we have done, I recall a British saying:

The glass is falling
Hour by hour
If you break
The bloody glass
It won't hold up
The weather.

That is very true. We tend to blame the glass through which the sands fall for our failure to do those things which should be done as time passes.

We should remember that we are human, that the problems are to be solved by humans and can be solved only by humans, and that it will do no good for us to "break the bloody glass"—that is, to indulge in recrimination—because in so doing, we are not going to hold up the weather.

We are going to establish a climate in the new Congress as in the one which is expiring, only by performance. I hope we will remember an ancient Latin maxim as we enact legislation: "Graviora Quaedam sunt remedia periculis."

Some remedies are worse than the disease. I sincerely hope that we will not over-legislate. It was the late Bruce Barton who proposed that we repeal a bill for every bill we passed. It was not a bad idea. We now have so many bills among our public laws that many of them are unenforceable. The Department of Justice has told me that, in this Congress, alone, we have created so many new crimes and established so many new penalties and broadened the scope of the criminal justice situation so much that it would be totally impossible adequately to enforce all the laws that are on the books.

So, I hope that in the future we will give some thought to repealing laws, as our special committee under the chairmanship of the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH) and the cochairmanship of the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS) did in bringing out their recommendation for the repeal of certain emergency legislation.

I hope, too, that in the next Congress we—all of us in the Senate—will restrain our tendency toward cacophony loquendi—or, the itch to speak. The only thing worse than the itch to speak in this body is the itch to demand a vote on everything under the sun. It is not really necessary to have a yea and nay vote on whether to authorize a small sum of money for Criss Cross Creek, which nobody ever heard of.

We have heard of vanity books, which are written to perpetuate an individual's interest in his own name and his own interests. These votes, I think, are often vanity votes.

We have had approximately 550 votes this year. At least 200 of them were as unnecessary as a pearl collar on a poodle. Yet, we have taken the time of the Members 550 times, on an average of 15 minutes each, and this amount of time could have been devoted in many cases to legislation, to inquiry, to service, to constituents, or—to that rarest of opportunities—a chance to think.

I would rather dedicate 200 of the next potential 550 votes in the next Congress to the opportunity for thinking. I wish we had in Congress a thinking rug, to which Members might retire, not to sleep, not simply to gossip, not even to read the lugubriousness of their favorite columnist, but just to think. I suppose it is asking too much.

But I repeat, as I began: If you do not like the weather, you do not solve it by breaking the bloody glass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

THE 93D CONGRESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I share the sentiments of the distinguished Republican leader, when he speaks about a multiplicity of laws.

Voltaire said that a multitude of laws in any country is like a great number of physicians—a sign of weakness and malady.

We do, I think sometimes, enact too many laws. Also, I share the sentiments of the distinguished Republican leader when he states that we should not have so many rollcall votes. There have been 543 rollcall votes during this session. If only 10 minutes were consumed on each rollcall vote, that would be 5,430 minutes, but as a usual thing, 15 minutes are consumed on each rollcall vote. The Senators may compute for themselves the time consumed by these 543 rollcall votes.

As to Congress itself, I believe that the 93d Congress has been an historic Congress in many ways. One of the great responsibilities of the Federal legislative branch is to conduct oversight of the various agencies and departments of Government.

This Congress has been an outstanding one in this respect. It conducted the Watergate hearings—and I speak especially of the Senate in regard to this oversight function. The Senate Judiciary Committee conducted thorough hearings on the nomination of L. Patrick Gray, to be Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The result of that hearing had an impact on history, because the strands that ran from the hearings on that nomination were woven into the overall fabric of that sad story that was called Watergate.

The Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate conducted thorough hearings on the nominations of Professor Cox and his successor, Mr. Jaworski. It conducted thorough hearings on Attorney General Elliot Richardson and his deputy, Mr. Ruckelshaus, and Mr. Richardson's successor, Mr. Saxbe.

The Committee on the Judiciary helped to formulate guidelines by which the investigation of the so-called Watergate matters was conducted. But for those guidelines that were hammered out during those Committee on the Judiciary sessions, there never would have been a case titled "United States versus Nixon." The results of that case, sad though they were but cleansing as they were, would never have been a matter of the history of this country.

The Committee on Rules of the U.S. Senate conducted hearings on a Vice President, the first Vice President to be selected under the 25th amendment, Mr. Gerald Ford, who is now President of the United States.

The Committee on Rules of the U.S. Senate conducted hearings on the nomination of Mr. Nelson Rockefeller, who is now Vice President of the United States, and who now presides over this august body.

In doing so, I think that the Committee on Rules of this body conducted itself in a very commendable way.

So many good things can be said about the historical oversight functions that have been so capably performed by this Congress. The House Judiciary Committee acted with dignity and proficiency in developing and reporting the Articles of Impeachment. In the areas of legislation, I think that this Congress has written landmark legislation. It has enacted campaign reform, election reform, pension reform, minimum wage legislation. It has increased social security payments. It soon will have enacted a landmark trade bill. There are many other measures of great importance to the people of this country that have been enacted by the 93d Congress.

I am proud of this Congress. Especially am I proud of the Senate of the United States as it has conducted its business in this troublesome era, which, happily, is fading now into the past.

I think it was Aaron Burr who, when Vice President of the United States, referred to this body as a citadel of law, of order, and of liberty. That was a long, long time ago. Through the decades that have since followed, I believe that this body has lived up to the statement of Aaron Burr: It is a citadel of law, of order, and of liberty.

Sometimes, those who watch it from the galleries may not feel that it is a citadel of order, and those of us who sit in this body contribute to the disorder. But when all is said and done—when all is said and done—it is the great citadel, perhaps the greatest pillar in the constitutional system created by our forebears when they wrote the Constitution of the United States. It is a check against the House, it is a check against the executive branch, it is a check against the judiciary.

I wish to compliment the Members of this body for their services during this 93d Congress, because I believe that it has lived up to what our forebears would have expected.

Mr. President, I personally wish to express my appreciation to the distinguished Republican leader and to the assistant Republican leader on behalf of the distinguished majority leader and on my own behalf, and on behalf of my colleagues on this side of the aisle for the cooperation, the courtesy, the rapport, and the friendship which they consistently exhibit toward those of us just across the aisle from them. I thank the distinguished majority leader for his warm friendship which I have been privileged to enjoy for another year.

I want also to thank all of the Members who sit on the other side of the aisle. They have been very cooperative and very considerate—especially during these past 2 weeks—with me.

And to my own colleagues, may I say that I am most proud of the diligence and the dedication to their duty that they have unfailingly shown throughout these 2 years of the 93d Congress.

Mr. President, the people of this country can take new heart in this great constitutional system of ours. It has never failed us. And in the dark days of the past 2 years, this constitutional system has shown that it has deep roots, and that it is enduring. I shall never cease to have faith in the wisdom of those forebears who gathered at the Constitutional Convention in 1787, believing that they somehow had in their midst a Divine Presence, because were it not so, I cannot believe that they could have given to us this priceless gift, the greatest document of its kind that was ever written, the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, I close by attempting to recall, if I may, the words of the great English poet, Rudyard Kipling:

Our fathers in a wondrous age,
Ere yet the Earth was small,
Ensured to us an heritage,
And doubted not at all

That we, the children of their heart,
Which then did beat so high,
In later time should play like part
For our posterity.

Then fretful murmur not they gave
So great a charge to keep,
Nor dream that awestruck time shall save
Their labour while we sleep.

Dear-bought and clear, a thousand year
Our fathers' title runs.
Make we likewise their sacrifice,
Defrauding not our sons.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, if the distinguished acting majority leader has time, will he yield to me?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes.
Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I thank the distinguished acting majority leader for his kindness and consideration throughout the session—and I have the same feeling, of course, for our distinguished majority leader—for all of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle. It is very thoughtful of him to make note of this.

I would like to say publicly what I have said to him privately this morning, that he has done a remarkable and extraordinarily commendable job throughout the session, and particularly at this period when he has had the full responsibility, under great pressure, of acting as the majority leader. I marvel at his ability to provide us with an apt quotation of considerable length, which has a definite meaning for us at this turning point of the year. I wish that it had been possible for him and for myself to speak after breakfast so that we could have had some more of our colleagues here. I solicit their reading of what the distinguished acting majority leader has said.

It seems to me that Plutarch put it very well, and might well have spoken of the pressures upon Senators, when he said:

To be turned from one's course by men's opinions, by blame, and by misrepresentation shows a man unfit to hold an office.

I think this applies to Members of Congress, to the President, and to the distinguished occupant of the Chair, the President of the Senate.

It is not too well understood that we do resist and must resist the current pressures of the day, the efforts to force us to suspend our judgment in response to the current clamor or the emotional wrath of groups or individuals who would ask us to substitute for our judgment their opinion. Edmund Burke cautioned us against doing that in his famous letter to the Electors of Bristol at about the time of our Revolution.

So I think we must continue to do what we think is best: to consult and consider our constituents' wishes, to recognize that we are here to represent them, and not simply to echo them; that we are here as men and women, and enfranchised by their will, but enfranchised to do those things which we believe will be in their interests, and therefore in the interest of the Republic. Otherwise, as Plutarch says, we would not be fit to hold these offices.

Therefore, I do thank the distinguished acting majority leader again.

One final observation: I know this is the first time in the history of the Union that we have had a President and a Vice President who are parthenogenetic, both of them having sprung full blown from the brow of the 25th amendment.

December 20, 1974

I thank the distinguished acting majority leader.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Republican leader. Mr. President, I also want at this time to express appreciation to the officers of the Senate, and to the Parliamentarian, who will be departing as Parliamentarian but who will shortly be our Parliamentarian Emeritus. I also express appreciation to all the members of the policy staff on both sides of the aisle, and to the fine young men and women who serve as our pages.

Also, I think I should express appreciation to all who had a part in the arrangements of last evening. I have heard only the very kindest words expressed about the televising of the historic swearing in of our new Vice President, and so I think a word of appreciation, on behalf of the people of this country to the fourth estate and to the electronic media, would be appropriate at this time.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Let me say that the distinguished acting majority leader speaks for me and for our side of the aisle as well. I have already had something to say about our friend the retiring Parliamentarian, to wish him well, and I would like all of those who have been mentioned to feel that our remarks are not simply the remarks of the Christmas season. We are not making gifts here. We are making our commitment of respect and appreciation.

Yesterday's first and record-shattering session before television and radio was, I think, a successful thing. It was conducted with dignity and with appropriate consideration for the proprietors. I am glad we were able to do this. Now perhaps on other great occasions the same sort of thing can be made again. The adoption of resolutions in front of television will, I hope, be used by schoolteachers for the benefit of their students, to let them see that the Senate in action is a place where they will gain something from their observations.

RECESS SUBJECT TO CALL

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and at 9:33 a.m. the Senate recessed until 9:35 a.m.; whereupon the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

RECESS UNTIL 10:30 A.M.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, upon my motion the Senate went into recess earlier subject to the call of the Chair.

Because it has been determined that there will not be any business before the Senate at least until 10:30, I think it more appropriate to recess to a time certain, and thus all the attaches will not need to remain on the floor constantly.

I therefore move that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 10:30 a.m.

The motion was agreed to, and at 9:36 a.m., the Senate recessed until 10:30 a.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.). The Senator from West Virginia.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR HARRY F. BYRD, JR.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Virginia be recognized for not to exceed 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SOVIET UNION AND THE EXIMBANK

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I note from the news reports of this morning that the Department of State has expressed strong displeasure at action taken by the Senate and by the House, for that matter, to put a ceiling of $300 million on Export-Import Bank loans and guarantees to the Soviet Union.

State Department sources, according to the news report, said that the Soviet Ambassador expressed his anger during a meeting he had Wednesday with Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Well, Mr. President, I might say that the Soviet Ambassador does not run the Senate of the United States. We are dealing with U.S. money, U.S. credit.

The U.S. Congress has the right to put whatever restrictions it deems best on long-term, taxpayer-subsidized, low-interest rate loans to the Soviet Union.

Mr. President, this fight for a ceiling on loans to Russia goes back a long time. I first spoke in support of a ceiling on June 25, 1974, 6 months ago. I made clear then that I would do all that I could to hold up the extension of the Export-Import Bank unless a ceiling was put on such loans.

That fight has been going on, now, for 6 months.

The Senate has written a firm ceiling. The House of Representatives has concurred in that ceiling. The legislation extending the life of the Export-Import Bank with this ceiling has now gone to the White House.

The reports are prevalent that Secretary of State Kissinger has recommended a veto of the Export-Import Bank legislation.

Well, that is his privilege, and it is the President's decision whether or not to veto such legislation. But I point out that vetoing the Export-Import Bank legislation is not going to eliminate the ceiling on loans to Russia. The Senate anticipated that something like this might happen, so the Senate wrote in a ceiling on loans to Russia in the trade bill.

I introduced the amendment to the trade bill, which amendment was cosponsored by my dear friend from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD).

This amendment had the approval and support of the able chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. RUSSELL B. LONG.

It was approved by the Senate.

It has been approved by the conferees. It will be a part of the trade bill conference report when it comes back to the Senate for action.

So, if the Department of State wants to get rid of this ceiling, then it must have the President not only veto the Export-Import Bank extension legislation, which has the Byrd amendment, but it must also have the President veto the trade bill, which likewise carries the Byrd amendment.

So there is a ceiling on loans to Russia in two separate pieces of legislation.

Naturally, all of us would like the Soviet Ambassador to be as happy as he can be in the city of Washington, D.C., but the fact that he expresses anger at what the Senate has done, I must say, does not particularly bother the Senator from Virginia.

The more funds the Export-Import

December 20, 1974

Bank borrows, the more it goes into the money markets, the more it adds to the upward pressure on interest rates.

I point out that the Soviet Government has been borrowing money from the U.S. Export-Import Bank, a Government agency, at approximately one-half the interest rate which is paid by American companies which go out in the banking system to borrow funds.

I point out, also, that the Russian Government is borrowing funds from the American Government at an interest rate of approximately one-half the interest rate paid by the individual citizen, when the American citizen goes to borrow money for a home, or to buy an automobile, or for any other purpose.

I think Congress has acted wisely in not giving the Department of State a blank check. I do not favor blank checks.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record at this point statements which I made in regard to this matter at various times between June 25, 1974, and the current date.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 25, 1974]

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. President, I understand that in the next day or so a resolution will be presented to the Senate to extend the Export-Import Bank for 30 days. The authorization expires on June 30, and the proposal will be to extend it for 30 days. At the end of that time, as I understand it, a new Export-Import Bank Act will be presented to the Senate.

In order to expedite the consideration of the 30-day resolution, I hope that whoever manages this matter will bring to the Senate a letter from the Export-Import Bank stating that no additional loans will be made to the Soviet Union during that 30-day period. Many of us have been concerned about the large numbers of loans, the tremendous amounts of tax funds, that have been made available to the Soviet Union.

This has been done in defiance of legislation which already has passed the House of Representatives and is now before the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if the Senate is being asked and if Congress is being asked to extend for 30 days the life of the Export-Import Bank so that the new legislation can be considered at the end of that time, then the Bank should be willing to give a letter to Congress stating that no additional funds will be made available to the Soviet Union until Congress has an opportunity to consider the full extension of the Bank Act.

In the interest of time I hope that whoever is handling this legislation will contact the Export-Import Bank and arrange for such a communication to be sent to the manager of the bill who, in turn, could read it on the floor of the Senate.

I thank the Senator from Louisiana for yielding.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 26, 1974]

STATEMENT BY MR. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.

Mr. President, I had planned to do whatever one Senator could do to hold up this joint resolution.

I have been concerned for some time about the vast sums of American tax dollars that have been made available to the Soviet Union—hundreds of millions of dollars, and at subsidized interest rates.

I felt that this action by the Export-Import Bank was contrary to the clear intent of the House of Representatives, which has passed legislation putting certain restrictions on loans to the Soviet Union. It is true that the Senate has not yet passed such legislation, but the House has clearly acted.

The U.S. Government has been borrowing money at 9 percent and loaning it to Russia at 6 to 7 percent. No American or American company can borrow money at that interest rate; mostly it is 11 percent.

Yesterday I had a very satisfactory talk with the President and Chairman of the Export-Import Bank of the United States, the Honorable William J. Casey. That discussion was followed up by a letter to me from Mr. Casey, of which I shall read the last paragraph, and then, when I conclude my remarks, I shall ask that the entire letter be printed in the Record.

The last paragraph of the letter is as follows:

I want to assure you that the Bank will not act on this commitment or extend any other financing to the Soviet Union until such time as Congress has determined what policies the Bank should follow in this regard and has enacted the legislation presently before the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee.

That is the end of the quotation from the letter to me signed by William J. Casey, President and Chairman, Export-Import Bank of the United States. I commend Mr. Casey for his assurance and his attitude.

Mr. President, that letter takes care fully, clearly, and explicitly of the problem which I previously had with this joint resolution extending the life of the Export-Import Bank. As a result of this letter and as a result of my conversation yesterday with Mr. Casey, I am pleased to support the joint resolution offered by the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter to me dated June 25, 1974, signed by Mr. William J. Casey, be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, D.C., June 25, 1974.

Hon. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: The Senate has before it a Joint Resolution which would extend the life of the Bank from June 30, 1974 to July 31, 1974. Certain questions have arisen regarding new transactions with the U.S.S.R.

Since I became Chairman of the Export-Import Bank on March 14, of this year, the Bank has refrained from issuing any new commitments for transactions in the U.S.S.R. until such time as the Congress has determined the policy guidelines for the Bank to follow. During this period we have done nothing beyond honoring commitments previously made. Only one such commitment is now outstanding. We have not heard anything about it for some time and don't know if the deal, which relates to a transfer line to produce crankshaft half bearings, is still alive.

I want to assure you that the Bank will not act on this commitment or extend any other financing to the Soviet Union until such time as Congress has determined what policies the Bank should follow in this regard and has enacted the legislation presently before the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM J. CASEY.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Oct. 9, 1974]

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. President, the conferees on the Export-Import Bank legislation have concluded their deliberations. The conference report, I understand, will be brought before the Senate tomorrow. The conference agreement eliminated a very important part of the Senate proposal.

Under the legislation as it passed the Senate, authority for new commitments to the Soviet Union is limited to $300 million. Now, the conferees have added a proviso to that, the proviso being that such a limit may be exceeded if the President determines that it is in the national interest to do so.

Well, Mr. President, that is no ceiling at all.

The Export-Import Bank already has granted credits of $469 million to Communist Russia.

The legislation which passed the Senate would permit an additional $300 million in credits and guarantees. It would put a ceiling of another $300 million in credits and guarantees. The conferees eliminate that ceiling by granting the President the right to exceed it whenever he feels it is desirable to do so.

I understand that the State Department has been lobbying night and day, to have the Senate ceiling of $300 million in additional credits to Russia eliminated.

Why is it that we are not satisfied with already giving Soviet Russia $469 million in credits and not satisfied with making it possible to extend another $300 million in credits, but the State Department and the conferees want a blank check?

Well, Mr. President, I plan to oppose that conference report tomorrow and I may even oppose a continuing resolution. I think the time has come to call a halt to the giving away of tax funds.

I do not quite understand this love affair with the Soviet Union. The American taxpayers have granted the Soviet Union $469 million in subsidized credit and the Senate has approved an additional $300 million in credits and guarantees.

I was willing to go along with that additional $300 million in order to get a firm ceiling on the amount of money that can be channeled into loans to Communist Russia. I am not willing to go along with legislation that would give a blank check. I wish I could understand just why it is that there is such a keen interest in making available to Russia unlimited credit.

Now, that gets back to the Jackson amendment to the trade bill which put restrictions on additional loans to Russia.

I support that proposal. But tremendous pressure is being used to eliminate that. Then it ties in with this legislation where the conferees have agreed to eliminate the ceiling on the amount of additional loans. I do not know what our Government is up to. There is something fishy. There is something fishy about this, when the State Department spends most of its time, day and night, lobbying Congress to take the ceiling off the amount of money that the Export-Import Bank may make available to the Soviet Union.

Bear in mind, this is a loan directly to the Central Bank of Russia, namely, the Government of Russia. I am persuaded to the view that I am taking also because of the shell-lacking that the American negotiators—they are drawn from the State Department—got when they settled the amount of money which the Soviet Union owes the United States.

That debt was settled at 3 cents on the dollar, plus another 24 cents, provided the United States grants Russia most-favored-nation treatment and provided we extend Export-Import Bank credits to her.

December 20, 1974

I think that is no deal at all. It is a disgraceful deal.

We all know what that great grain deal was, the $300 million grain deal, where the United States came out second best—$300 million is a low figure because the consumers were badly hurt by it also.

I am not persuaded that we did not come out second best on the SALT agreements.

Those other measures that I mentioned are water under the bridge, but this conference report is not water under the bridge. I contend there must be a ceiling on the amount of credit that the Export-Import Bank will be permitted to extend to Russia. I shall oppose the conference report.

I would ask that the leadership advise the Senator from Virginia when any legislation affecting the Export-Import Bank is brought before the Senate.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Oct. 10, 1974]

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK ACT AMENDMENT— CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. President, the conference report on the Export-Import Bank legislation presumably will come before the Senate today. I want to state that I shall oppose this conference report. I ask that the leadership protect the Senator from Virginia if he is not in the Chamber in regard to any unanimous-consent request dealing with any aspect of Export-Import Bank legislation. I am disturbed that the conferees eliminated the ceiling on the amount of credit that may be extended to the Soviet Union. Already credits in the amount of $469 million have been extended to Russia. Senate legislation would put a ceiling on additional credit and guarantees of $300 million.

The conferees eliminated that ceiling by adding a proviso that the President, if he deems it in the national interest, can lead to any extent beyond that $300 million figure that he sees fit.

Mr. President, I frankly just cannot understand why the State Department is determined that there be no ceiling on subsidized credit given to the Soviet Union. My understanding is that the State Department is lobbying day and night in an effort to eliminate the Senate ceiling, and it succeeded with the conferees. I think this is a matter to which the Senate must give careful attention.

We know that the United States has come out second best on its dealings with Russia. The so-called detente, with just cause, has been immensely popular with the Communist leaders in Russia, and well it should be. Russia bought American wheat in 1972 with American money. Russia borrowed the money at subsidized interest rates to purchase the wheat from the United States. We know that that cost the taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars and we know it cost the consumers many more hundreds of millions of dollars.

I studied the settlement made by the State Department of the Russian lend-lease debt, which was $2.1 billion, the total debt. The State Department negotiators settled that debt at 3 cents on the dollar, plus another 24 cents provided Russia was given most-favored-nation treatment, and provided—Russia is given additional Export-Import Bank taxpayer-subsidized credits.

It is my intention when the conference report is called up today to speak at some length on this subject. I shall object to any unanimous-consent agreement in regard to it.

I think the time has come to give consideration to the American taxpayer.

I think the time has come to call a halt to the use of the huge borrowings of the Federal Government. The more the Federal Government goes into the money market, the higher the interest rates inevitably will become. The Export-Import Bank has to go out and borrow this money. It has been borrowing the money at a higher percentage, and then it turns that money over to Russia at a relatively low interest rate. We know what the wage earner has to pay for interest today. The wage earner, if he or she wants to borrow money for a home, an automobile, or what have you, pays an interest rate of 12 or 14 percent, or perhaps higher. Yet this money is turned over to Russia at an interest rate of around 6 or 7 percent.

I shall resist this legislation. I expect to talk at some length when it is called up today. I again ask the leadership to protect me if the Senator from Virginia happens not to be in the Chamber at the time the legislation is called up. I shall make every effort to be in the Chamber throughout the day, but if I am not here I hope my rights will be protected.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Oct. 10, 1974]

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 251—EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY FOR THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The Senate continued with the consideration of the joint resolution—Senate Joint Resolution 251—to extend the authority of the Export-Import Bank of the United States.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, if we may have order, I can get this through quickly.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Senators will please take their seats and refrain from conversation, so that we can hear the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President the Export-Import Bank conference report nullifies every major Senate action restricting Bank authority, and paves the way for an immediate multi-billion dollar U.S. investment in Soviet energy development.

The Senate adopted an amendment prohibiting Exim support of Soviet fossil fuel projects without prior congressional approval—the conference committee deleted it.

The Senate adopted an amendment to put the Eximbank back in the Federal budget so its inflationary impact on the deficit will be disclosed—the conference committee deleted it.

The Senate adopted an amendment to put the Eximbank back in the Federal budget so its inflationary impact on the deficit will be disclosed—the conference committee deleted it.

The Senate required prenotification to Congress of any Eximbank credit extension to the Soviet Union over $50 million—the conference committee excluded Eximbank loan guarantees from this provision, effectively nullifying it.

The Senate put an overall ceiling of $300 million on Eximbank Soviet Union loans. The conference committee eliminated this ceiling, saying the President could set any limit he chooses.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Nov. 26, 1974]

AMENDMENT OF THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. President, I, of course, have no objection to a cloture motion being filed.

I would point out for the record that the conference report on the extension of the Export-Import Bank was made the pending business just today at the hour of approximately 12:30. Within a matter of minutes it was superseded by the Navajo-Hopi Indian bill. After much discussion on that, it was then again made the pending business at something around 1:15, as I recall. Then the Senator from Virginia entered into or rather addressed a series of questions to the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Those questions dealt with a complex part of the bill, the bill itself is complex as are all the operations of the Export-Import Bank.

The Senator from Virginia had the opportunity to query the Senator from Illinois for something like 40 or 45 minutes, estimating the time. Then the distinguished senior Senator from Washington requested that the Export-Import Bank legislation be set aside and that the conference report on HEW be taken up.

The Senate then proceeded to consider the conference report on HEW, several other conference reports, and has just this moment at the time the cloture petition was filed gotten back to consideration of the Export-Import Bank conference report.

It is somewhat strange, it seems to me, to file a cloture petition so soon after a piece of legislation is laid before the Senate and when there has been virtually no discussion of that legislation other than maybe something approaching an hour or slightly over an hour.

As I say, I have no objection, of course, to the petition being filed, but I did think the Record should show how little discussion there has been in the Senate on it.

As a matter of fact, I was prepared, and it is too late now, but I was prepared to vote today on a motion to table, but several of my colleagues who could not be here today urged I not do it.

So it think we could have disposed of it today.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, in response to the Senator from Virginia, it is fair to say the issues we have talked about for an hour or two or three today, however long it might have been, have been talked and retalked and retalked about on this floor. The same issues have been talked about for many, many hours this summer and fall.

We have extended the Export-Import Bank's termination date twice. The issues that we are debating today are quite familiar to all of us, and I do not see any point in going on with extended debate on a topic we have had extensive debate on over the past 4 or 5 months.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. As mentioned earlier, a vote should come very quickly next week on a motion to table, but aside from that, the Senator from Oregon said that all of this is familiar ground.

Well, just in the first question that I put today to the Senator from Illinois, a brand new point was developed, brand new information was developed, which the Senate never before had had available to it.

I say that a bill of this magnitude, and I might point out that there are $25 billion involved in this legislation, $25 billion of U.S. tax funds, and if Congress is going to consider legislation of that magnitude we better take just a little bit of time to understand just what it is doing.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, to keep the record straight, it is not $25 billion of tax funds.

This is not an income tax. This is not a sales tax. These are bonds that are being sold and this Bank breaks even.

I do not want to leave the impression that we are dealing with taxes, $25 billion.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am glad the Senator developed that point because the Export-Import Bank, the way it gets its money, goes into the money market and sells bonds backed by the full faith and credit of the people of the United States.

The more that Bank goes into the money market, the more it forces an upward pressure on interest rates.

The Federal Government today borrows 62 percent of all the lendable funds—62 percent of all the lendable funds. So, I say that the Government itself, by this smashing amount of borrowing, represents a major reason for these tremendous interest rates.

December 20, 1974

It is obvious when the Federal Government goes into the money markets for such vast sums that the upward pressure on interest rates is very severe.

I think it is very easy to understand why the young couple trying to buy a home, obtain funds to buy a home, finds it very difficult to do that and can only do it at very high interest rates, why businessmen seeking to go into the private money markets to develop their business find it very difficult to do.

So on the Export-Import Bank—and I have been a supporter of that Bank and I am now a supporter of that Bank; I do not propose that the Bank should not continue to operate—I do contend that there must be some limit on it.

As a businessman, in my own business I do not give blank checks and in handling the tax funds of the American people I do not think Congress should give blank checks, and I think that this legislation should require and should place a ceiling. That is what the major fight is about.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD
Dec. 13, 1974]

MR. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.'S STATEMENT

Mr. President, I congratulate the able Senator from Washington for the tremendous amount of work and time and effort which he has put into this extremely important matter. I congratulate, along with him, the able Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Kucinski) and the able Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) for their hard work and their skill. I am pleased to have been a cosponsor of the original Jackson amendment. I have a deep sympathy for the plight of those of Jewish faith in the Soviet Union. I likewise have a deep sympathy for those others in the Soviet Union of other nationalities and other religious beliefs who, likewise, are being harassed and oppressed.

I was very much encouraged by the statements made on the floor today, first by the Senator from Connecticut and then by the Senator from Washington and the Senator from New York, all pointing out that this proposal before the Senate today applies not just to individuals of one particular faith, but to all citizens of the Soviet Union who are undergoing harassment and oppression.

Mr. President, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the original Jackson-Vanik proposal is a part of the bill as reported by the Committee on Finance. It was approved by the House of Representatives and then by the Committee on Finance, and now is a part of the bill. The Senator from Washington has offered an amendment to the original Jackson proposal.

My only concern about the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Washington is that it does not provide a ceiling on credits that can be extended to the Soviet Union. As the Senator from Washington pointed out earlier, I think this matter is being taken care of. In the conference report on the Export-Import Bank bill, the conferees agreed to the Senate proposal that a $300 million ceiling be placed on loans and guarantees to the Soviet Union.

Also, the Senate earlier adopted amendment No. 2026 to this trade bill which likewise provides that, after the date of enactment of the Trade Reform Act of 1974, no agency of the Government of the United States shall approve any loans, guarantees, insurance or any combination thereof, in connection with exports to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in an aggregate amount in excess of $300 million without prior congressional approval.

I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JACKSON. I commend the Senator from Virginia for his diligence, and I supported him in connection with the Export-Import Bank restriction.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The Senator certainly did.

Mr. JACKSON. I think he has rendered a great service in doing that, and now again in connection with this amendment.

I should like to make the legislative record clear that the amendment that we have up, previously adopted by the Committee on Finance, does not authorize any credit. We are merely allowing a prohibition to be waived.

The control on those credits has been properly safeguarded by the Byrd amendment, both in connection with the Export-Import Bank conference report and, again, in this specific bill.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is correct, except that the Committee on Finance did not adopt the compromise proposal. That is the one that is before us today.

Mr. JACKSON. That is right. This amendment that is before us today is an amendment that gives the President specific latitude, with the safeguards to waive, under the conditions outlined in this amendment, restrictions relating to MFN and credits. But it does not authorize affirmatively—credit or anything of that kind.

The Senator has dealt with the credit problem very efficiently with his amendment to this bill, which has already been adopted by the Senate, and, of course, in the Export-Import Bank conference report. So it is double-barreled, and I hope that the Byrd amendment will stay in conference when the conferees meet.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I thank the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I wish to say again that the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia was one of the original cosponsors of the amendment on the issue of emigration, and no one has been more faithful, more dedicated and more effective in advocating the effort that we are seeing culminated here, in this action on the floor today. I praise him for all that he has done, and for the fine way in which he has courageously spoken out.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am very grateful to my friend from Washington. It was easy to do, because I believe very strongly that this is a humanitarian approach. I think, as many persons have charged, it is very unusual for one country to attempt to interfere in a purely domestic policy of another country. But the way I look at it is as follows: that other country—in this case Russia—wants something from the United States.

They want special concessions from the United States.

They want us to grant most-favored-nation tariff treatment to Russia.

They want access to long-term, taxpayer-subsidized, low-interest rates.

If we are going to give all of that, I submit that we have a right to ask for something in return. What is being asked in return is a humanitarian and compassionate nature. I am glad to have supported the original amendment, and I shall support the approach now suggested by the Senator from Washington, the Senator from Connecticut, and the Senator from New York.

Before taking my seat, I wish to comment on the trip to the Soviet Union taken by the junior Senator from New York, (Mr. Buckley). I was very much impressed with the way Senator Buckley handled that trip. He did not spend his time with the leaders of government. Rather, he spent his time among the citizenry, among the Jewish people who had been oppressed and harassed, among the minority nationalities within the Soviet Union. He got, as a result, a firsthand insight into the problems facing them.

I think the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) has rendered his fellow citizens a very important service.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 12 NOON

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 12 o'clock noon.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 11:19 a.m., recessed until 12 noon; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. CLARK).

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR FOR INDIAN AFFAIRS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 620, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK). The report will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 620) to establish within the Department of the Interior an additional Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of today.)

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I am satisfied that the agreement by the conference committee on H.R. 620 is a reasonable compromise. For that reason, I move the adoption of the conference report.

December 20, 1974

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, through the courtesy and graciousness of the chairman of Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I was a conferee on this bill, H.R. 620.

I have not signed the conference report, because of the vigorous opposition of the regional corporations representing Alaskan Natives who are residents of Alaska and because of the opposition of the vast majority of Alaskan Natives who reside in Alaska to the concept of the mandatory creation of a 13th regional corporation to represent those Alaskan Natives who left their homes and live "outside," as we call it.

We have supported the other amendments in the bill, such as a provision to raise the Commissioner of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to an assistant secretary level. The other amendments in this bill are good ones. But I could not in good conscience sign this report under the circumstances that exist; because, instead of having an election to determine whether or not there should be a 13th regional corporation, this bill, in effect, creates a 13th regional corporation and permits any nonresident Alaskan Native who is eligible for benefits under the Alaskan Natives Land Claims Settlement Act to elect to receive his or her benefits under the 13th regional corporation, rather than as part of the 12 regional corporations that represent all Alaskan Natives within the State.

To me, it is a mistake to mandate the creation of a 13th regional corporation. There was an election; and although it was a narrow election, the nonresident Alaskan Natives voted against the creation of the 13th regional corporation. Litigation is pending over the adequacy of the election procedures. I feel that the Federal judge in Seattle will adequately review those procedures and determine whether there was a fair election. If there was not, there could be another election.

The original bill called for a new election, and I would support that as a way to shorten the process of litigation. But, to me, to mandate the creation of a 13th regional corporation is improper, as not reflecting the desires of those who did vote and not properly expressing the viewpoint of the Alaskan Natives who reside in Alaska. Six-sevenths of those who are beneficiaries actually reside in the State. This bill really pertains to the one-seventh who do not reside in our State, and I think it is unfair to give them a mandatorily created corporation.

I also would like to make certain of one aspect, and I am sure my good friend, the Senator from Colorado, who is managing the bill, understands my position. I think it is unfair to create mandatorily a 13th regional corporation, because in doing so, it raises again the question of the fairness of the concept that is involved in the bill. The basic bill, the Alaskan Natives Land Claims Settlement Act, provided that if the people who reside outside of Alaska want a 13th regional corporation to manage their money, they can have one. But that was to be a conscious decision, knowing that if these beneficiaries chose to create a 13th regional corporation, they would deny themselves an interest in land, because only the 12 regional corporations under the Alaskan Natives Land Claims Settlement Act will have land.

I think there should be a new election, if there is to be any reconsideration of the creation of the 13th regional corporation.

Despite the kindness and cooperation of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs in permitting me to be a member of this conference, I cannot endorse the conference report.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I understand the position of the distinguished Senator from Alaska. I merely reiterate my opinion that the compromise is reasonable, and I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE WILD AND SCENIC RIVERS ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 3022, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK). The report will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows: The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3022) to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (82 Stat. 960), as amended, to designate segments of certain rivers for possible inclusion in the national wild and scenic rivers system; to amend the Lower Saint Croix River Act of 1972 (86 Stat. 1174), and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by all the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of today.)

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I am satisfied that the agreement reached by the conference committee was a reasonable compromise, and I now move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SECRETARY OF THE SENATE TO RECEIVE MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I shall shortly propose a recess for the Senate, but I ask unanimous consent first that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive messages from the other body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 1 P.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until 1 p.m. today.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 12:16 p.m., recessed until 1 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. NELSON).

SPEEDY TRIAL ACT OF 1974

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 754.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 754) to give effect to the sixth amendment right to a speedy trial for persons charged with criminal offenses and to reduce the danger of recidivism by strengthening the supervision over persons released pending trial, and for other purposes, as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "Speedy Trial Act of 1974".

"§ 3161. Time limits and exclusions.
"(a) In any case involving a defendant charged with an offense, the appropriate judicial officer; at the earliest practicable time, shall, after consultation with the counsel for the defendant and the attorney for the Government, set the case for trial on a day certain, or list it for trial on a weekly or other short-term trial calendar at a place within the judicial district, so as to assure a speedy trial.
"(b) Any information or indictment charging an individual with the commission of an offense shall be filed within thirty days from the date on which such individual was arrested or served with a summons in connection with such charges. If an individual has been charged with a felony in a district in which no grand jury has been in session during such thirty-day period, the period of time for filing of the indictment shall be extended an additional thirty days.

"(c) The arraignment of a defendant charged in an information or indictment with the commission of an offense shall be held within ten days from the filing date (and making public) of the information or indictment, or from the date a defendant has been ordered held to answer and has appeared before a judicial officer of the court in which such charge is pending whichever date last occurs. Thereafter, where a plea of not guilty is entered, the trial of the defendant shall commence within sixty days from arraignment on the information or indictment at such place, within the district, as fixed by the appropriate judicial officer.

"(d) If any indictment or information is dismissed upon motion of the defendant, or any charge contained in a complaint filed against an individual is dismissed or otherwise dropped, and thereafter a complaint is filed against such defendant or individual charging him with the same offense or an offense based on the same conduct or arising from the same criminal episode, or an information or indictment is filed charging such defendant with the same offense or an offense based on the same conduct or arising from the same criminal episode, the provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall be applicable with respect to such subsequent complaint, indictment, or information, as the case may be.

"(e) If the defendant is to be tried again following a declaration by the trial judge of a mistrial or following an order of such judge for a new trial, the trial shall commence within sixty days from the date the action occasioning the retrial becomes final. If the defendant is to be tried again following an appeal or a collateral attack, the trial shall commence within sixty days from the date the action occasioning the retrial becomes final, except that the court retrying the case may extend the period for retrial not to exceed one hundred and eighty days from the date the action occasioning the retrial becomes final if unavailability of witnesses or other factors resulting from passage of time shall make trial within sixty days impractical.

"(f) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, for the first twelve-calendar-month period following the effective date of this section as set forth in section 3163(a) of this chapter the time limit imposed with respect to the period between arrest and indictment by subsection (b) of this section shall be sixty days, for the second such twelve-month period such time limit shall be forty-five days and for the third such period such time limit shall be thirty-five days.

"(g) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, for the first twelve-calendar-month period following the effective date of this section as set forth in section 3163(b) of this chapter, the time limit with respect to the period between arraignment and trial imposed by subsection (c) of this section shall be one hundred and eighty days, for the second such twelve-month period such time limit shall be one hundred and twenty days, and for the third such period such time limit with respect to the period between arraignment and trial shall be eighty days.

"(h) The following periods of delay shall be excluded in computing the time within which an information or an indictment must be filed, or in computing the time within which the trial of any such offense must commence:

"(1) Any period of delay resulting from other proceedings concerning the defendant, including but not limited to—

"(A) delay resulting from an examination of the defendant, and hearing on, his mental competency, or physical incapacity;

"(B) delay resulting from an examination of the defendant pursuant to section 2902 of title 28, United States Code;

"(C) delay resulting from trials with respect to other charges against the defendant;

"(D) delay resulting from interlocutory appeals;

"(E) delay resulting from hearings on pretrial motions;

"(F) delay resulting from proceedings relating to transfer from other districts under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure; and

"(G) delay reasonably attributable to any period, not to exceed thirty days, during which any proceeding concerning the defendant is actually under advisement.

"(2) Any period of delay during which prosecution is deferred by the attorney for the Government pursuant to written agreement with the defendant, with the approval of the court, for the purpose of allowing the defendant to demonstrate his good conduct.

"(3)(A) Any period of delay resulting from the absence or unavailability of the defendant or an essential witness.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, a defendant or an essential witness shall be considered absent when his whereabouts are unknown and, in addition, he is attempting to avoid apprehension or prosecution or his whereabouts cannot be determined by due diligence. For purposes of such subparagraph, a defendant or an essential witness shall be considered unavailable whenever his whereabouts are known but his presence for trial cannot be obtained by due diligence or he resists appearing at or being returned for trial.

"(4) Any period of delay resulting from the fact that the defendant is mentally incompetent or physically unable to stand trial.

"(5) Any period of delay resulting from the treatment of the defendant pursuant to section 2902 of title 28, United States Code.

"(6) If the information or indictment is dismissed upon motion of the attorney for the Government and thereafter a charge is filed against the defendant for the same offense, or any offense required to be joined with that offense, any period of delay from the date the charge was dismissed to the date the time limitation would commence to run as to the subsequent charge had there been no previous charge.

"(7) A reasonable period of delay when the defendant is joined for trial with a co-defendant as to whom the time for trial has not run and no motion for severance has been granted.

"(8)(A) Any period of delay resulting from a continuance granted by any judge on his own motion or at the request of the defendant or his counsel or at the request of the attorney for the Government, if the judge granted such continuance on the basis of his findings that the ends of justice served by taking such action outweigh the best interest of the public and the defendant in a speedy trial. No such period of delay resulting from a continuance granted by the court in accordance with this paragraph shall be excludable under this subsection unless the court sets forth, in the record of the case, either orally or in writing, its reasons for finding that the ends of justice served by the granting of such continuance outweigh the best interests of the public and the defendant in a speedy trial.

"(B) The factors, among others, which a judge shall consider in determining whether to grant a continuance under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph in any case are as follows:

"(1) Whether the failure to grant such a continuance in the proceeding would be likely to make a continuation of such proceeding impossible, or result in a miscarriage of justice.

"(2) Whether the case taken as a whole is so unusual and so complex, due to the number of defendants or the nature of the prosecution or otherwise, that it is unreasonable to expect adequate preparation within the periods of time established by this section.

"(3) Whether delay after the grand jury proceedings have commenced, in a case where arrest precedes indictment, is caused by the unusual complexity of the factual determination to be made by the grand jury or by events beyond the control of the court or the Government.

"(C) No continuance under paragraph (8)(A) of this subsection shall be granted because of general congestion of the court's calendar, or lack of diligent preparation or failure to obtain available witnesses on the part of the attorney for the Government.

"(1) If trial did not commence within the time limitation specified in section 3161 because the defendant had entered a plea of guilty or nolo contendere subsequently withdrawn to any or all charges in an indictment or information, the defendant shall be deemed indicted with respect to all charges therein contained within the meaning of section 3161, on the day the order permitting withdrawal of the plea becomes final.

"(j) (1) If the attorney for the Government knows that a person charged with an offense is serving a term of imprisonment in any penal institution, he shall promptly—

"(A) undertake to obtain the presence of the prisoner for trial; or

"(B) cause a detainer to be filed with the person having custody of the prisoner and request him to so advise the prisoner and to advise the prisoner of his right to demand trial.

"(2) If the person having custody of such prisoner receives a detainer, he shall promptly advise the prisoner of the charge and of the prisoner's right to demand trial. If at any time thereafter the prisoner informs the person having custody that he does demand trial, such person shall cause notice to that effect to be sent promptly to the attorney for the Government who caused the detainer to be filed.

"(3) Upon receipt of such notice, the attorney for the Government shall promptly seek to obtain the presence of the prisoner for trial.

"(4) When the person having custody of the prisoner receives from the attorney for the Government a properly supported request for temporary custody of such prisoner for trial, the prisoner shall be made available to that attorney for the Government (subject, in cases of interjurisdictional transfer, to any right of the prisoner to contest the legality of his delivery).

"§ 3162. Sanctions.

"(a) (1) If, in the case of any individual against whom a complaint is filed charging such individual with an offense, no indictment or information is filed within the time limit required by section 3161(b) as extended by section 3161(h) of this chapter, such charge against that individual contained in such complaint shall be dismissed or otherwise dropped. In determining whether to dismiss the case with or without prejudice, the court shall consider, among others, each of the following factors: the seriousness of the offense; the facts and circumstances of the case which led to the dismissal; and the impact of a reprosecution on the administration of this chapter and on the administration of justice.

"(2) If a defendant is not brought to trial within the time limit required by section 3161(c) as extended by section 3161(h), the information or indictment shall be dismissed on motion of the defendant. The defendant shall have the burden of proof of supporting such motion but the Government shall have the burden of going forward with the evidence in connection with any exclusion of time under subparagraph 3161(h)(3). In determining whether to dismiss the case with or without prejudice, the court shall consider, among others, each of the following factors: the seriousness of the offense; the facts and circumstances of the case which led to the dismissal; and the impact of a reprosecution on the administration of this chapter and on the administration of justice. Failure of the defendant to move for dismissal prior to trial or entry of a plea of guilty or nolo contendere shall constitute a waiver of the right to dismissal under this section.

"(b) In any case in which counsel for the defendant or the attorney for the Government (1) knowingly allows the case to be set for trial without disclosing the fact that a necessary witness would be unavailable for trial; (2) files a motion solely for the purpose of delay which he knows is totally frivolous and without merit; (3) makes a statement for the purpose of obtaining a continuance which he knows to be false and which is material to the granting of a continuance; or (4) otherwise willfully fails to proceed to trial without justification consistent with section 3161 of this chapter, the court may punish any such counsel or attorney, as follows:

"(A) in the case of an appointed defense counsel, by reducing the amount of compensation that otherwise would have been paid to such counsel pursuant to section 3006A of this title in an amount not to exceed 25 per centum thereof;

"(B) in the case of a counsel retained in connection with the defense of a defendant, by imposing on such counsel a fine of not to exceed 25 per centum of the compensation to which he is entitled in connection with his defense of such defendant;

"(C) by imposing on any attorney for the Government a fine of not to exceed $250;

"(D) by denying any such counsel or attorney for the Government the right to practice before the court considering such case for a period of not to exceed ninety days; or

"(E) by filing a report with an appropriate disciplinary committee.

The authority to punish provided for by this subsection shall be in addition to any other authority or power available to such court.

"(c) The court shall follow procedures established in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure in punishing any counsel or attorney for the Government pursuant to this section.

"§ 3163. Effective dates.

"(a) The time limitation in section 3161(b) of this chapter—

"(1) shall apply to all individuals who are arrested or served with a summons on or after the date of expiration of the twelve-calendar-month period following July 1, 1975; and

"(2) shall commence to run on such date of expiration to all individuals who are arrested or served with a summons prior to the date of expiration of such twelve-calendar-month period, in connection with the commission of an offense, and with respect to which offense no information or indictment has been filed prior to such date of expiration.

"(b) The time limitation in section 3161(c) of this chapter—

"(1) shall apply to all offenses charged in informations or indictments filed on or after the date of expiration of the twelve-calendar-month period following July 1, 1975; and

"(2) shall commence to run on such date of expiration as to all offenses charged in informations or indictments filed prior to that date.

"(c) Section 3162 of this chapter shall become effective after the date of expiration of the fourth twelve-calendar-month period following July 1, 1975.

"§ 3164. Interim limits.

"(a) During an interim period commencing ninety days following July 1, 1975 and ending on the date immediately preceding the date on which the time limits provided for under section 3161(b) and section 3161(c) of this chapter become effective, each district shall place into operation an interim plan to assure priority in the trial or other disposition of cases involving—

"(1) detained persons who are being held in detention solely because they are awaiting trial; and

"(2) released persons who are awaiting trial and have been designated by the attorney for the Government as being of high risk.

"(b) During the period such plan is in effect, the trial of any person who falls within subsection (a) (1) or (a) (2) of this section shall commence no later than ninety days following the beginning of such continuous detention or designation of high risk by the attorney for the Government. The trial of any person so detained or designated as being of high risk on or before the first day of the interim period shall commence no later than ninety days following the first day of the interim period.

"(c) Failure to commence trial of a detainee as specified in subsection (b), through no fault of the accused or his counsel, or failure to commence trial of a designated releasee as specified in subsection (b), through no fault of the attorney for the Government, shall result in the automatic review by the court of the conditions of release. No detainee, as defined in subsection (a), shall be held in custody pending trial after the expiration of such ninety-day period required for the commencement of his trial. A designated releasee, as defined in subsection (a), who is found by the court to have intentionally delayed the trial of his case shall be subject to an order of the court modifying his nonfinancial conditions of release under this title to insure that he shall appear at trial as required.

"(c) The plans prepared by each district court shall be submitted for approval to a reviewing panel consisting of the members of the judicial council of the circuit and either the chief judge of the district court whose plan is being reviewed or such other active judge of that court as the chief judge of that district court may designate. If approved by the reviewing panel, the plan shall be forwarded to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, which office shall report annually on the operation of such plans to the Judicial Conference of the United States.

"(d) The district court may modify the plan at any time with the approval of the reviewing panel. It shall modify the plan when directed to do so by the reviewing panel or the Judicial Conference of the United States. Modifications shall be reported to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

"(e) (1) Prior to the expiration of the twelve calendar-month period following July 1, 1975, each United States district court shall prepare and submit a plan in accordance with subsections (a) through (d) above to govern the trial or other disposition of offenses within the jurisdiction of such court during the second and third twelve-calendar-month periods following the effective date of subsection 3161(b) and subsection 3161(c).

"(2) Prior to the expiration of the thirty-six calendar-month period following July 1, 1975, each United States district court shall prepare and submit a plan in accordance with subsections (a) through (d) above to govern the trial or other disposition of offenses within the jurisdiction of such court during the fourth and subsequent twelve calendar-month periods following the effective date of subsection 3161(b) and subsection 3161(c).

"(2) the incidence of, and reasons for, periods of delay under section 3161(h) of this title;

The Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, with the approval of the Judicial Conference of the United States, shall prescribe such forms and procedures and time requirements consistent with section 3170 after consideration of the recommendations contained in the district plan and the need to reflect both unique local conditions and uniform national reporting standards.

In the event an additional period of suspension of time limits is necessary, the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall so indicate in his report to the Congress, which report shall contain such application for such additional period of suspension together with any other pertinent information. The Judicial Conference shall not grant a suspension to any district within six months following the expiration of a prior suspension without the consent of the Congress. Such consent may be requested by the Judicial Conference by reporting to the Congress the facts supporting the need for a suspension within such six-month period. Should the Congress fail to act on any application for a suspension of time limits within six months, the Judicial Conference may grant such a suspension for an additional period not to exceed one year."

Sec. 102. The tables of chapters for title 18 of the United States Code and for part II of title 18 of the United States Code are each amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to chapter 207 the following new item:

"208. Speedy trial. . . . 3161".

TITLE II—PRETRIAL SERVICES AGENCIES

Sec. 201. Chapter 207 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out section 3152 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new sections:

"The Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall establish, on a demonstration basis, in each of ten representative judicial districts (other than the District of Columbia), a pretrial services agency authorized to maintain effective supervision and control over, and to provide supportive services to, defendants released under this chapter. The districts in which such agencies are to be established shall be designated by the Chief Justice of the United States after consultation with the Attorney General, on the basis of such considerations as the number of criminal cases prosecuted annually in the district, the percentage of defendants in the district presently detained prior to trial, the incidence of crime charged against persons released pending trial under this chapter, and the availability of community resources to implement the conditions of release which may be imposed under this chapter.

"§ 3153. Organization of pretrial services agencies.

"(a) The powers of five pretrial services agencies shall be vested in the Division of Probation of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. Such Division shall establish general policy for such agencies.

"(b) (1) The powers of each of the remaining five pretrial services agencies shall be vested in a Board of Trustees which shall consist of seven members. The Board of Trustees shall establish general policy for the agency.

"(2) Members of the Board of Trustees shall be appointed by the chief judge of the United States district court for the district in which such agency is established as follows:

"(A) one member, who shall be a United States district court judge;

"(E) two members, who shall be representatives of community organizations.

"(c) The term of office of a member of the Board of Trustees appointed pursuant to clauses (C) (other than a public defender) and (E) of subsection (b) (2) shall be three years. A vacancy in the Board shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Any member appointed pursuant to clause (C) (other than a public defender) or (E) of subsection (b) (2) to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term.

"(d) (1) In each of the five demonstration districts in which pretrial service agencies are established pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, the pretrial service officer shall be a Federal probation officer of the district designated for this purpose by the Chief of the Division of Probation and shall be compensated at a rate not in excess of the rate prescribed for GS-16 by section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

"(2) In each of the five remaining demonstration districts in which pretrial service agencies are established pursuant to subsection (b) (1) of this section, after reviewing the recommendations of the judges of the district court to be served by the agency, each such Board of Trustees shall appoint a chief pretrial service officer, who shall be compensated at a rate to be established by the chief judge of the court, but not in excess of the rate prescribed for GS-15 by section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) The designated probation officer or the chief pretrial service officer, subject to the general policy established by the Division of Probation or the Board of Trustees, respectively, shall be responsible for the direction and supervision of the agency and may appoint and fix the compensation of such other personnel as may be necessary to staff such agency, and may appoint such experts and consultants as may be necessary, pursuant to section 3109 of title 5, United States Code. The compensation of such personnel so appointed shall be comparable to levels of compensation established under chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code.

"§ 3154. Functions and powers of pretrial services agencies.

"Each pretrial services agency shall perform such of the following functions as the district court to be served may specify:

"(1) Collect, verify, and report promptly to the judicial officer information pertaining to the pretrial release of each person charged with an offense, and recommend appropriate release conditions for each such person, but such information as may be contained in the agency's files or presented in its report or which shall be divulged during the course of any hearing shall be used only for the purpose of a bail determination and shall otherwise be confidential. In their respective districts, the Division of Probation or the Board of Trustees shall issue regulations establishing policy on the release of agency files. Such regulations shall create an exception to the confidentiality requirement so that such information shall be available to members of the agency's staff and to qualified persons for purposes of research related to the administration of criminal justice. Such regulations may create an exception to the confidentiality requirement so that access to agency files will be permitted by agencies under contract pursuant to paragraph (4) of this section; to probation officers for the purpose of compiling a presentence report and in certain limited cases to law enforcement agencies for law enforcement purposes. In no case shall such information be admissible on the issue of guilt in any judicial proceeding, and in their respective districts, the Division of Probation or the Board of Trustees may permit such information to be used on the issue of guilt for a crime committed in the course of obtaining pretrial release.

"(a) The Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall annually report to Congress on the accomplishments of the pretrial services agencies, with particular attention to (1) their effectiveness in reducing crime committed by persons released under this chapter; (2) their effectiveness in reducing the volume and cost of unnecessary pretrial detention; and (3) their effectiveness in improving the operation of this chapter. The Director shall include in his fourth annual report recommendations for any necessary modification of this chapter or expansion to other districts. Such report shall also compare the accomplishments of the pretrial services agencies operated by the Division of Probation with those operated by Boards of Trustees and with monetary bail or any other program generally used in State and Federal courts to guarantee presence at trial.

"(b) On or before the expiration of the forty-eighth-month period following July 1, 1975, the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall file a comprehensive report with the Congress concerning the administration and operation of the amendments made by the Speedy Trial Act of 1974, including his views and recommendations with respect thereto.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, the House has passed S. 754, the Speedy Trial Act of 1974. This legislation, represents over 4 years of study and refinement by the Senate and House Judiciary Committees. S. 754 has been the responsibility of the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights which I have had the honor to chair, and the House Subcommittee on Crime under the very capable leadership of Representative JOHN CONYERS.

Throughout its development the speedy trial legislation has been a subject of much controversy in the Federal criminal justice community. For example, the Justice Department has until very recently opposed enactment of any such legislation. However, the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights spent 3 years attempting to accommodate the Justice Department, Federal judges and the attorneys active in the defense of criminal cases. In the Senate subcommittee we adopted over 25 of the amendments proposed by the Justice Department. Although the bill was reported favorably from the Senate Judiciary Committee without a dissenting vote and passed the Senate on a voice vote the Justice Department remained in opposition to the bill when it was considered on the House side. However, thanks to the work of Representative CONYERS, Chairman RODINO, Representatives WILLIAM COHEN and CHARLES WIGGINS the House was able to reach an accommodation with the Justice Department and at the same time to preserve the basic thrust of the legislation. Indeed I believe that the House has substantially improved the Senate bill and therefore I call upon the Senate to concur in the House amendments to S. 754.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter written by the Attorney General to Mr. RODINO, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee withdrawing the Justice Department's opposition to the speedy trial legislation be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks and that the section-by-section analysis contained in the Senate report on S. 754, indicating all the changes which the Senate made at the behest of the Justice Department also be reprinted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
(See exhibits 1 and 2.)

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, although the proponents of speedy trial have differed on how it might be achieved, for example whether by Federal legislation or court rule, there has never been disagreement in Congress or in the Federal criminal justice system over the need for speedy trials. The members of the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights were shocked when they learned in 1971, as they were first considering this legislation, of the inordinate delay commencing trials in Federal criminal cases. Information made available to the subcommittee by the Federal Judicial Center indicated that the average delay between arrest and indictment in the busier Federal courts was over 100 days and between indictment and trial over 250 days. This suggests that delay between arrest and trial may be as long as 350 days in some of the busier Federal districts.

A 1-year delay in the trial of many Federal criminal cases is simply unacceptable. It takes no great insight into the crime problem to know that when suspects are arrested, but not tried for months or years, there is no deterrent to continued criminal activity. A study by the National Bureau of Standards in 1970 found that most defendants commit crime on bail after they have been on pretrial release more than 60 days. Furthermore, when those defendants are finally brought to justice they know that the overworked prosecutor and court will have to accept their offer to bargain for a lesser sentence. This kind of plea bargaining is known as "giving away the courthouse for the sake of the calendar." The criminal always wins and society always loses in this bargain. The speedy trial crisis has made a mockery of the criminal laws enacted by Congress and of the Justice Department's attempt to enforce those laws.

This recognition of the importance of speedy justice is not new. It can be traced back through literature of western civilization to the Old Testament. The stern morality of Ecclesiastes recognized that the only effective deterrent to crime was swift and sure punishment for criminal activity:

Because sentence against an evil deed is not executed speedily, the heart of the sons of men is fully set to do evil.

However, in enacting this bill Congress is not only concerned about crime control but also with elementary justice. It is inconsistent with both the Constitution and our sense of fairness to hold a man in jail for months or years without a trial. Proponents of the speedy trial legislation know of the degradation of life in America's jails. We are determined to limit to the extent feasible the exposure of our fellow citizens to the conditions Oscar Wilde described with such eloquence in his "Ballade of Reading Gaol" and which unfortunately are as apt today in the United States as they were in Reading, Berkshire, England 75 years ago:

The vilest deeds like poison weeds
Bloom well in prison air;
It is only what is good in man
That wastes and withers there.
Pale Anguish keeps the heavy gate,
And the Warder is Despair.

Those of us in the Congress who have been working on this problem realize that speedy trial will never be a reality in the Federal courts until Congress makes clear to all that it will no longer tolerate delay. Unfortunately, while it is in the public interest to have speedy trials, the parties involved in the criminal process do not feel any pressure to go to trial. The court, defendant, his attorney, and the prosecutor may have different reasons not to push for trial, but they all have some reason. The overworked courts, prosecutors, and defense attorneys depend on delay in order to cope with their heavy caseloads. The end of one trial only means the start of another. To them, there is little incentive to move quickly in what they see as an unending series of cases. The defendant, of course, is in no hurry for trial, because he wishes to delay his day of reckoning as long as possible.

I believe, after years of studying this problem, that S. 754 can begin to end this seemingly hopeless morass. The bill is based upon the premise that the courts, undermanned, starved for funds, and utilizing 18th century management techniques, simply cannot cope with burgeoning caseloads. The consequence is delay and plea bargaining. The solution is to create initiative within the system to utilize modern management techniques and to provide additional resources to the courts where careful planning so indicates.

S. 754, as amended in the House, would create that initiative within the federal system by enacting time limit requirements for the initial stages in the criminal process. The time limits would be enforced by judges empowered to sanction prosecutors for delay by dismissing the indictment if trial does not occur within the limits and empowered to sanction prosecutors for delay by dismissing liberal dilatory tactics. The time limits plus sanctions system is related to the appropriations process in the Congress so that each court could count on sufficient resources to achieve the goals set out in the time limits by Congress.

The bill requires each Federal district court, in cooperation with the U.S. attorney and attorneys active in the defense of criminal cases in that district, to establish a plan for trying criminal cases within 100 days of arrest or receipt of summons. The bill takes effect over a 5-year period so that the goals of a 30-day limit on the period between arrest and indictment and a 70-day limit on the period between indictment and commencement of trial will not be in force until the fifth year after enactment.

Starting the 5th year after enactment the 30-day arrest to indictment and 70-day indictment to trial time limits will be enforced by mandatory dismissal. In the first 4 years after enactment, the time limits are phased in beginning with a 60-day arrest to indictment and 180 days indictment to trial limit in the second year after enactment. Every few years the time limits are shortened and the sanctions for failure to meet the time limits increase. During these intervening years a planning process for the district courts will be established to enable the districts to determine what additional resources, personnel, and facilities will be required to comply with the progressive time limitations. District plans which will detail these needs will be required at specified times during the 7-year phasing in of time limits. This, in turn, will enable Congress to consider the needs of each individual district, and of the whole Federal criminal justice system.

Along with its provision for speedy trials, S. 754 also authorizes the creation of demonstration "pretrial services agencies" in 10 Federal districts, excluding the District of Columbia which is already served by the District of Columbia Bail Agency, performing many of the same functions. These agencies will make bail recommendations, supervise persons on bail, and assist them with employment, medical, and other services designed to reduce crime on bail. This provision will greatly enhance the operations of the Bail Reform Act of 1966.

The House amendments to S. 754 change the bill in eight important respects. As I stated earlier, I view all of these changes as important refinements in the bill because they provide greater flexibility in the legislation. The changes are as follows:

First. Judicial emergency.—In the House hearings a number of witnesses, particularly the Justice Department and the Administrative Office of the U.S. courts, contended that if the Congress fails to provide the necessary funds to make speedy trial a reality or if a particular district is beset by an unforeseeable occurrence which would make compliance with the time limits impossible, the unwarranted dismissal of cases could result. The House adopted an amendment to authorize the Judicial Conference of the United States to suspend the time limits between indictment and trial for up to a period of 1 year in the event of a judicial emergency.

Two. Phase-in.—The House bill provides that both the sanctions and the ultimate time limits of the bill become effective in the 5th year after enactment; S. 754 as it passed the Senate provides that they become effective in the 7th year. Because of the adoption of the judicial emergency provision, the House felt that the phase-in period could be reduced without endangering the objectives of the bill.

Three. Sanctions.—The House version provides that the failure to meet the speedy trial limits will result in the dismissal of the complaint, information, or indictment. It would be up to the trial judge to determine whether the dismissal would forever bar prosecution of the defendant for any offenses which were known or reasonably should have been known at the time of the granting of the dismissal. This sanction becomes effective in the 5th year after enactment. S. 754 provides for the dismissal of cases in the 7th year for failure to meet the time limits, but only permits re prosecution if the Government can demonstrate exceptional circumstances.

Fourth. Time limits to trial.—S. 754 as passed the Senate computes the time limits between the periods of arrest to indictment and indictment to trial. At the suggestion of the Department of Justice, the House adopted an amendment to begin the running of the time limits to trial from arraignment. An additional 10 days were added between indictment to arraignment.

Fifth. Filing indictments.—At the request of both the Department of Justice and the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, the House adopted an amendment which would permit up to 30 additional days for the filing of an indictment in those districts where grand juries meet infrequently. This amendment is intended to give more flexibility to rural districts, where criminal case filings do not warrant the continuous operation of the grand jury.

Sixth. Pilot planning.—The House adopted an amendment to do away with pilot planning districts. Instead, each district planning group is entitled to receive an appropriation for the initial phases of planning.

Seventh. Planning process.—The House also adopted an amendment which essentially had the effect of reorganizing the planning provisions of S. 754. Very few substantive changes were made with the exception of granting the Judicial Conference of the United States, through the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, greater influence over the administrative aspects of the planning process.

Eighth. Pretrial services.—Finally, the House adopted an amendment to permit the probation service of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts to administer 5 of the 10 pretrial services agencies. The Administrative Office had urged the subcommittee to vest all 10 pretrial services agencies in the division of probation, but the committee believes that a dual approach would provide greater flexibility and opportunity for experimentation.

In conclusion, 4 years of work by the Congress on this question has resulted in a workable scheme for the achievement of speedy trial in Federal criminal cases. This process of refinement has developed a bill which carefully balances the rights of the individual and society in a speedy trial. I believe we have responded to all of the legitimate concerns of all interested parties, the Department of Justice, and the Judicial Conference included. I hope that the Senate will join with the House by concurring in the House amendments.

Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge those Members of the House and Senate who have helped in the development of this landmark legislation. First, this bill would never have gotten out of the Senate Judiciary Committee without the help and cooperation of my friends and colleagues, the senior Senators from Nebraska and Arkansas. Both of these senior members of the Judiciary Committee provided me and the rest of the Judiciary Committee with helpful criticism and they are responsible for a number of the important improvements on the bill.

On the House side, this legislation was the responsibility of Representative JOHN CONYERS, Jr., chairman of the House Subcommittee on Crime. Without his leadership and creativity, this legislation would probably still be on the House Judiciary Calendar. Chairman CONYERS skillfully shepherded this bill through the lengthy debate in the House Judiciary Committee and the Rules Committee, and helped to develop additional flexibility in the legislation necessary for passage in the House. Mr. CONYERS was joined in his efforts by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, PETER RODINO, as well as the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Representative WILLIAM COHEN, and Representative CHARLES WIGGINS, also a member of the House Judiciary Committee. In addition, I would like to acknowledge the help the bill received from Representative CLAUDE PEPPER, who has been a leading proponent of speedy trial legislation for several years.

I believe Congress also owes a debt of gratitude to the staff of the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights in the Senate where this legislation was originally developed, and to the staff of the Subcommittee on Crime in the House where the bill was refined and prepared for final House action.

In closing, I wish to state that it would not have been possible to achieve enactment of the speedy trial legislation had it not been for the untiring labors and profound wisdom of Mark Gitenstein, our present chief counsel of one Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, and his predecessor in this post, Larry Baskin, and a former member of the legal staff of the subcommittee, Glenn Ketner.

Mr. President, this bill was passed by the Senate by an overwhelming vote. I have studied the House amendments. I have consulted the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. HRUSKA), who is very interested in this bill, about these House amendments. He and I are perfectly satisfied with these amendments. They were worked out to a large extent with the aid of the Department of Justice; and the Department of Justice, after opposing this bill for several years, has endorsed the bill.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D.C., December 13, 1974.
Hon. PETER W. RODINO, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, Washington,
D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: It is my understanding that proponents of H.R. 17409, the Speedy Trial Act of 1974, are determined to enact such legislation prior to the termination of the 93rd Congress.

As you know, the Department of Justice has consistently pointed out a number of significant problems with H.R. 17409. Our most serious objection to this legislation is the mandatory dismissal with prejudice provision contained in section 3162. This feature if enacted into law would ultimately provide that if a defendant is not indicted within 30 days following arrest or service of summons, or if the defendant's trial does not commence within 60 days following arraignment, the charge is dismissed with prejudice against prosecution for that offense or any offense based on the same indictment.

The Senate version of the bill, S. 754, although purporting to provide for dismissal without prejudice, contains a restrictive provision with respect to a new prosecution that for all practical purposes constitutes a dismissal with prejudice. If either the present House version or Senate version is retained the Department of Justice would be compelled to continue our strong opposition to this legislation.

Mandatory prejudicial dismissal of criminal cases not tried within arbitrary time limits can only serve to injure the public and our system of justice by releasing persons charged with crime without an adjudication. Not only may the untied defendant pose a danger to the public's welfare but the public confidence in a criminal justice system which releases persons without trial is certainly undermined.

The Department of Justice supports an amendment to section 3162 of H.R. 17409 deleting the bar to further prosecution following dismissal under that section. Deletion of this language would still result in dismissal of cases for failure to meet the time limits of section 3161 but would permit charges to be brought under a new information or indictment consistent with existing law. If this amendment is adopted a federal judge may dismiss with prejudice for denial of Sixth Amendment right to speedy trial or dismissal with prejudice where he believes circumstances warrant such dismissal.

Adoption of this amendment by the Congress would resolve the most significant difficulty in this legislation and would enable the Department to effectively administer the provisions of H.R. 17409.

I would hope that you and members of your Judiciary Committee and members of the House will support this amendment. Copy of which is enclosed.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM B. SAXBE,
Attorney General.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

TITLE I—SPEEDY TRIAL

Significant changes have been made in the language of S. 754 to accommodate suggestions of Committee members, the Justice Department, Federal judges, and defense counsel who will have to carry out the provisions of the bill if it is enacted.

What follows is a section-by-section analysis of the bill as reported by Committee with a brief explanation of each provision including the Committee amendments. Also the analysis notes the more significant differences between S. 754 and its predecessor in the last Congress, S. 895.

Section 3161 time limits and exclusions

Subsection 3161(a) requires the judge at the earliest practicable point in the process to set a date certain for trial. The date is set upon consultation with the prosecutor and defense counsel.

This provision requires that all parties must be on notice of the trial date as early in the proceeding as possible. Setting a trial date early in the process permits the parties, the witness, and especially the courts, to plan out the trial schedule and to integrate the schedule with their obligations. This eliminates difficulties with subsequent scheduling conflicts of the attorneys, especially those defense counsel who may have a civil practice. Any conflict existing at this time can be resolved and no future conflicts can be permitted to defer the trial date, since the attorney is already on notice as to his primary obligation to prepare and try this particular case.

S. 895 required that the date certain be set at initial appearance rather than at the earliest practicable point. The Justice Department and several other witnesses suggested that setting a date certain at initial appearance was unworkable because United States magistrates, who conduct initial appearance procedures in many districts, would be setting the date for a trial to be conducted by a district court judge. Based upon Judge Albert Stephen's suggestion, the requirement has been eliminated so that the Federal district judges can retain control over their own calendars. S. 754 would still provide that the court set a date certain for trial at the earliest possible point in the process. Thus, the courts would be free to adopt rules on this subject consistent with their own peculiar needs and capabilities.

Subsection 3161(b) sets a 30-day limit on the period between the filing of a complaint or an arrest and the filing of an information or indictment based on the complaint. If cases are not brought within this period they must be dismissed. The time limit imposed by this subsection is subject to the allowable delays as set forth in Subsection 3161(h).

Subsection 3161(c) requires that trial must commence within 60 days of the date of the filing of an indictment or information. Combined with the 30-day arrest to indictment time limit imposed by subsection 3161(b), the total period between arrest and trial allowed by S. 754 would be 90 days.

The Committee is convinced that the goal of trial within three months of arrest in the typical Federal criminal case is a reasonable one. The Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights heard considerable testimony from prominent members of the bench and bar on the reasonableness of such a time limit.

Such time limits are absolutely essential to effective crime control. Speedy trial seems to decrease crime by defendants on pretrial release and to increase the rate at which defendants plead guilty. A study by the National Bureau of Standards found that defendants who are released prior to trial are more likely to commit a subsequent crime before they are tried for the first if they are not brought to trial within two to three months of arrest. When a 60-day speedy trial program was established in the United States Attorney's Office in the Southern District of New York the proportion of defendants pleading guilty increased from 90 percent to 95 percent.

However, the Justice Department objected to the original provisions of S. 754 which provided a single time limit of 60 days between arrest and commencement of trial. According to the Department the grand jury process should not be covered in the speedy trial time limits. The Department is worried that in complicated cases, such as conspiracies in which arrest precedes indictment, prosecution cannot be adequately prepared in a two-month period. Furthermore, in approximately 40 percent of the Federal criminal cases, arrests are made before indictment for the purpose of halting on-going criminal activity. Thus, the Department of Justice proposed commencing the speedy trial time limits with arraignment.

However, a study by the Federal Judicial Center found that over one-half of the delay in an average Federal case occurs between arrest and indictment and that delays of approximately 100 days during this period are typical. In light of these findings it seemed inadvisable to adopt the Department's proposal, commencing the time limits with arraignment and thus excluding the period between arrest and indictment from the legislation.

Senator McClellan suggested a workable compromise on this question. He proposed that there be two different time limits, one between arrest and indictment where arrest precedes indictment and one between indictment and trial in all cases. The Committee has adopted the McClellan proposal in Subsections 3161(b) and (c)—a 30-day limit from arrest to indictment and a 60-day period between indictment and trial.

In 1967 the President's Crime Commission suggested that in the average case the delay between arrest and indictment should only be approximately 15 days and a recent survey conducted by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts for the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee found that several District courts were able to indict defendants within 30 days. The Committee arrived at the 30-day time limit for the period between arrest and indictment based on this data.

While the Committee has concluded that it is necessary to minimize the delays currently experienced during the arrest to indictment period, it recognizes that complexity of the grand jury process sometimes leads to unavoidable delays. For this reason, the time limits imposed by this subsection are subject to special tolling provisions as provided in subsection 3161(h). For example subsection 3161(h)(8) specifically provides that grand jury proceedings which are sufficiently complex are to be exempt from the arrest to indictment time limits.

Section 3161(h) provides other enumerated exclusions from both the arrest to indictment and the indictment to trial time limits. Most of the exclusions apply to pretrial proceedings which take place after indictment. However any exclusion of time or tolling of time limits permitted by 3161(h) would be permitted whether it occurred before or after indictment.

In further response to the Department's concern about the imposition of time limits the Committee has amended S. 754 to allow for a gradual phase-in of the time limits over a seven year period in conjunction with a gradual phase-in of the sanctions for non-compliance. Judges could begin to impose dismissal in the fifth year after enactment but would not have to dismiss with restrictions on re prosecution for violation of the time limits until the seventh year. (See Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.) This gradual phasing-in of the time limits should allow the districts to identify and solve any problems that might arise in complying with the time limits.

Subsection 3161(d) allows the time limits imposed by subsections 3161(b) and (c) to begin to run afresh should an indictment or information be dismissed upon defendant's motion on grounds other than non-conformance with speedy trial time limits, and a subsequent complaint charging the defendant with the same offense or with an offense based on the same criminal conduct or episode is filed.

This subsection allows latitude to the prosecutor to re-institute prosecution of a criminal defendant whose case has previously been dismissed on non-speedy trial grounds without having to comply with the time limits imposed by the filing of the earlier complaint. To require a prosecutor to conform to indictment and trial time limits which were set by the filing of the original complaint in order to reopen a case on the basis of new evidence would be an insurmountable burden. Thus, when subsequent complaints are brought, the time limits will begin to run from the date of the filing of the subsequent complaint.

The Committee is concerned that this provision not be used to evade the speedy trial time limits set out in this Act. The prosecutor should not be able to avoid the speedy trial time limitations when his carelessness in preparing the original complaint or indictment has resulted in a dismissal under this section. Therefore, when a judge dismisses an original information or indictment on other than speedy trial grounds he should, nevertheless, take into consideration the defendant's right to speedy trial under the statute and under the Constitution. For example, the judge might want to order that the original dismissal be with prejudice so that the prosecutor could not reindict several months after a carelessly drawn indictment has been dismissed.

Subsection 3161(e) provides for time limits where there is a mistrial or where the defendant succeeds in collateral attack or appeal. As a general matter the provision requires that if the Government decides to retry the defendant in any of these situations the time limits begin to run on the date that the order occasioning the retrial becomes final.

Although there was little disagreement among witnesses appearing before the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights as to the wisdom of commencing time limits with the date of the order giving rise to the retrial, there was controversy over whether 60 days, as provided in S. 895, was a sufficient amount of time. The Justice Department contended that 60 days was insufficient time to prepare for a retrial after successful collateral attack, which could come years after the original trial. The section as it appears in S. 754 draws a distinction between cases of retrial following declaration by a trial judge of a mistrial or an order by the trial judge for a new trial; and cases where there is a retrial following a collateral attack or appeal. In the former case the speedy trial period is 60 days while in the latter case the period is also 60 days, except that the period may be extended if unavailability of witnesses or other factors resulting from the passage of time make trial within 60 days impractical. This dichotomy recognizes the difficulty of preparing a new case after successful collateral attack but would not allow inordinate delay where retrial is contemporaneous with the original trial as in a declaration of mistrial by the trial judge.

Subsection 3161(f) provides that the 30-day arrest to indictment time limit required by Subsection 3161(b) will not take effect immediately upon enactment. Instead, it will be phased in, along with the sanctions for failure to comply with the time limits, over a seven year period. During the second year after enactment, the arrest to indictment time limit will be 60 days. During the third and fourth years after enactment, the time limit will be 45 days. Thereafter, the 30-day time limit specified in Subsection 3161(b) will be in effect. (See Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.)

During the phase-in, provided by this subsection, the time limit which will apply in any particular case will depend upon the time limits in effect when the arrest takes place. If the arrest takes place when the 60-day time limit is in effect then the 60-day limits will apply regardless of whether new limits go into effect for other cases in the interim.

Subsection 3161(g) provides that the 60-day indictment to trial time limit required by Subsection 3161(c) will not take effect immediately upon enactment. The 60-day indictment to trial time limit will also be phased in over a seven year period. For the second year following enactment, the time limit will be 180 days. For the third and fourth years the time limit will be 120 days. For the fifth year and thereafter the time limit will be the 60 days. However, the accompanying phase-in of sanctions will not make the dismissal sanction plus limitation on re prosecution mandatory until the seventh year. (See Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.)

Subsection 3161(f) and (g) are the result of much discussion and compromise concerning the time necessary for achieving compliance with the mandatory speedy trial time limits contemplated by S. 754.

In testimony before the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, Senator Percy expressed concern about imposing an unrealistically short time limit too quickly. He suggested a 180-day period with a plan requiring the cases not tried in 160 days be automatically placed upon special calendars for expedited disposition. Once a case got on a judge's special calendar it would have priority and could go to trial as soon as he completed the case before him. Senator

Percy also expressed support for an alternative that would provide an initial 180-day period with phased reductions to the ultimate goal. These suggestions formed the basis for a phase-in period of three years which was incorporated in S. 895 as adopted by the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee in October of 1972 and which was also incorporated in S. 754 as introduced in February of 1973.

S. 754 has been amended to extend the phase-in period to now cover seven years. This is accomplished by imposing progressively shorter time limits coupled with progressively stricter sanctions for non-compliance. (The phasing-in of the dismissal sanction is discussed in more detail in Section 3162 at p. 42. See also the Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.) The end result will be a mandatory 30-day arrest to indictment time limit and a mandatory 60-day indictment to trial time limit enforced by a mandatory dismissal sanction during the seventh year after enactment. This lengthening of the phase-in period grows, out of suggestions by the Justice Department and Professor Freed of Yale Law School that the Federal criminal justice system could not comply with a three-year phase-in period. Imposing the required time limits in graduated stages over a seven year period accompanied by the gradual introduction of more severe sanctions for non-compliance plus a division of the time limits into an arrest-to-indictment period and an indictment-to-trial period should alleviate the burden that compliance with these speedy trial standards will place on the courts and the Justice Department.

During the phase-in provided by this subsection, the time limits which will apply to any particular case will depend upon the time limits in effect at the time the indictment or information is filed against the defendant. If the indictment or information is filed when the 180-day limits are in effect then the 180-day limits will apply regardless of whether new limits go into effect for other cases in the interim.

Subsection 3161(h) excepts from the time limits imposed in Subsections 3161(b) and (c) the following periods of delay:

- (1) Delays caused by proceedings relating to the defendant such as hearings on competency to stand trial, hearings on pretrial motions, trials on other charges, and interlocutory appeals;
- (2) Delays caused by deferred prosecution upon agreement of defense counsel, prosecutor, and the court for the purpose of demonstrating the defendant's good conduct;
- (3) Delays caused by absence or unavailability of the defendant;
- (4) Delays resulting from the fact that the defendant is incompetent to stand trial;
- (5) Delays resulting from the treatment of the defendant pursuant to the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act;
- (6) Delays between the dropping of a charge and the filing of a new charge for the same or related offense;
- (7) Reasonable periods of delay when the defendant is joined for trial with a co-defendant, and neither defendant has shown good cause to grant a severance; and
- (8) Any other delay resulting from a continuance granted at the request of defense or prosecution upon a finding of the judge that the ends of justice cannot be met unless the continuance is granted. The judge must balance the right of the defendant and the interest of the public in speedy trial against the "ends of justice", and set forth in the record his reasons for granting the continuance.

Proceedings Concerning the Defendant

Subparagraph 3161(h)(1) allows the court to exempt from the time limits, time consumed by "proceedings concerning the defendant." This provision, when considered with all the enumerated exclusions from the time limits contained in 3161(h), assures that the time limits do not fall too harshly upon either the defendant or the Government. Subparagraph 3161(h)(1) allows the defendant to take advantage of certain procedures on his own motion such as mental competency hearings on motions to suppress evidence without penalizing the Government for the resulting delay.

At the suggestion of the Justice Department, the committee has enumerated in the text of the bill examples of what is meant by "proceedings concerning the defendant." The list is not intended to be exhaustive. It is representative of procedures of which a defendant might legitimately seek to take advantage for the purpose of pursuing his defense.

Also at the suggestion of the Justice Department, new language was added by the subcommittee to subparagraph 3161(h)(1) to resolve an ambiguity in the original language of S. 895. Subparagraph 3161(h)(1) of S. 895 as introduced did not clarify whether an exclusion for a "proceeding concerning the defendant" includes just the period consumed by the hearing or also includes the period during which it is under advisement. Under that provision a pretrial motion which only consumes a few hours in hearing could exclude days or even weeks from the time limits while the motion is under advisement. To meet this problem, the latter half of the section as amended, 3161(h)(1)(B), would have excluded only "court days" actually consumed in a proceeding covered by the subparagraph. It was intended however, that a unique question of law or unusually complex pretrial hearing could be the basis for an "ends of justice" continuance (see discussion of 3161(h)(8), p. 38ff).

However, the committee dropped the subcommittee's language on "court days." Under the committee amendment delays "reasonably attributable to delays during which a matter is actually under advisement" may toll the time limits. It was not the intent of the committee in adopting this amendment to give a blanket exception to matters under advisement for the time excluded must be "reasonably attributable" and the matter must be "actually under advisement." Therefore the judge must be actually considering the question, for example, conducting the research on a novel legal question.

It is intended that an examination of mental competency or for narcotics addiction pursuant to the Narcotics Addict Rehabilitation Act (NARA), section 2902 of title 28 of the United States Code, should be treated the same as the hearing on these issues. Therefore, a reasonable amount of time actually consumed while the defendant is under physical or mental examination shall also be excluded in computing time. Of course, it would still be inappropriate to exclude time spent at a hospital after the examination is complete or as a result of unreasonable delays at the hospital awaiting examination.

Deferral of Prosecution

Subparagraph 3161(h)(2) is designed to encourage the current trend among the United States attorneys to allow for deferral of prosecution on the condition of good behavior. A number of Federal and State courts have been experimenting with pretrial diversion or intervention programs in which prosecution of a certain category of defendant is held in abeyance on the condition that the defendant participate in a social rehabilitation program. If the defendant succeeds in the program, charges are dropped. Such diversion programs have been quite successful with first offenders in Washington, D.C. (Project Crossroads) and in New York City (Manhattan Court Employment Project). Some success has also been noted in programs where the defendant's alleged criminality is related to a specific social problem such as prostitution or heroin addiction. Of course, in the absence of a provision allowing the tolling of the speedy trial time limits, prosecutors would never agree to such diversion programs. Without such a provision the defendant could automatically obtain a dismissal of charges if prosecution were held in abeyance for a period of time in excess of the time limits set out in section 3161 (b) and (c). This section of S. 754 differs from its counterpart in S. 895. It now requires that exclusion for diversion only be allowed where deferral of prosecution is conducted "with approval of the court."

This assures that the court will be involved in the decision to divert and that the procedure will not be used by prosecutors and defense counsel to avoid the speedy trial time limits.

Absence or Unavailability

Subparagraph 3161(h)(3) provides for exclusion of time during which the defendant or an essential witness is absent or unavailable. Therefore, a fugitive defendant with an outstanding indictment cannot deduct from his 60 days the time during which he avoids prosecution. At the suggestion of Senator Thurmond and Mr. Reznick, S. 754 was drafted so that it follows the language of the American Bar Association Speedy Trial Standards in defining the terms "absence" and "unavailability." Furthermore, the term "unavailable" means that if the defendant is located in another jurisdiction and is not resisting extradition and the attorney for the Government has exercised due diligence, the reasonable delay related to the administrative operation of the extradition system would also be excluded.

This subsection has been amended by the Committee to include the absence of an essential witness, as well as the absence of the defendant, as one of the periods of delay which are exempted from the time limits. The necessity of including essential witnesses in this exclusion was pointed out by testimony of the Justice Department before the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights. The subsection as now constructed would remedy the situation in which an essential government witness becomes unavailable on the 59th day after indictment. Under the provisions contained in S. 754 as introduced, the case would be dismissed on the 60th day. This problem is especially acute when expert witnesses are involved because their presence is often required in different courts on the same day.

This problem is resolved by the subsection in that an "absent" or "unavailable" witness is treated in the same manner as an "absent" or "unavailable" defendant. By an "essential witness" the Committee means a witness so essential to the proceeding that continuation without the witness would either be impossible or would likely result in a miscarriage of justice. For example, a chemist who has identified narcotics in the defendant's possession would be an "essential witness" within the meaning of this subsection.

Mental Incompetence Hearings

Subparagraph 3161(h)(4) of the bill as reported deals with the exclusion of periods of time during which the defendant is mentally incompetent to stand trial. Reference is made to the exclusion of periods of time relating to examination for mental incompetency in subparagraph 3161(h)(1)(A) as a "proceeding concerning the defendant." That provision provides for the exclusion of time consumed in competency hearings and a reasonable number of hospital days actually consumed by physicians in mental examination. However, once the defendant is determined incompetent the only consideration is his return to competency. The length of time required for him to do so obviously should not be the basis of a speedy trial claim under the bill. Therefore, a separate exclusion has been added to subsection 3161(h).

Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act Proceedings

Subparagraph 3161(h)(5) of S. 754 deals with the exclusion of periods of time during which the defendant is under examination or treatment pending trial pursuant to the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966 (NARA). Reference is made to the exclusion of periods of time relating to examination for addiction pursuant to NARA in subparagraph 3161(h)(1)(A) as a "proceeding concerning the defendant." That provision provides for the exclusion of time actually consumed in hearings on the issue of addiction and a reasonable number of hospital days actually consumed by physicians in physical examination. However, once the defendant is determined to be an addict and falls within the eligibility provision of NARA, he is covered by that act and speedy trial is much less relevant. Therefore a separate exclusion has been added to subsection 3161(h).

Reindictment After Dismissal

Subparagraph 3161(h)(6) provides for the case where the Government decides for one reason or another to dismiss charges on its own motion and to then recommence prosecution. Under this provision only the period of time during which the prosecution has actually been halted is excluded from the 60-day time limits. Therefore, under 3161(h)(6) when the Government dismisses charges only the time between when the Government dismisses charges to when it reindicts is excluded from the 60-day time limits. For example, if the Government decides 50 days after indictment to dismiss charges against the defendant then waits six months and reindicts the defendant for the same offense the Government only has 10 days in which to be ready for trial.

Joinder of Codefendants

Subparagraph 3161(h)(7) provides for the exclusion of time from the time limits where the defendant is joined for trial with a codefendant who was arrested or indicted after the defendant. The purpose of the provision is to make sure that S. 754 does not alter the present rules on severance of codefendants by forcing the Government to prosecute the first defendant separately or to be subject to a speedy trial dismissal motion under section 3162.

The committee amended this provision, which appeared as 3161(c)(5) in the bill as introduced, to make it absolutely clear that Congress did not intend to alter the traditional rules of severance. According to the Justice Department, the original provision would have required the Government to show good cause for not granting a severance. This is contrary to present law which places the burden on the defendant who seeks the severance. The new provision deletes any reference to burdens of proof or "good cause" and simply refers to codefendants as to whom "no motion for severance has been granted."

"Ends of Justice" Continuance

Subparagraph 3161(h)(8) is the heart of the speedy trial scheme created by S. 754. It allows for the necessary flexibility to make 90 day trials a realistic goal within seven years of enactment.

The provision represents considerable revision by the committee. The original provisions of S. 895 dealing with general continuances, set a dual standard for continuances—in some cases continuances would have been permitted for "good cause" and in some cases to meet the "ends of justice." The original provisions also only allowed seven day continuances for "good cause." The Department of Justice as well as many other commentators and witnesses found the provisions unnecessarily complicated and confusing. Therefore the committee consolidated all of the continuance provisions into one provision, 3161(h)(8) of the bill as reported.

The new provision eliminates the words "good cause" and simply adopts the stiffer "ends of justice" standard—a standard which was used in the original bill for those situations which could not fall within the "good cause" continuance provisions. "Ends of justice" is the standard found in section 3651 of title 18 of the United States Code in reference to suspension of sentence and the granting of probation. In essence, the new provision allows a judge to grant a continuance only where he finds the "ends of justice" outweigh the best interest of the public and the best interest of the defendant in speedy trial. This means that in each case where a continuance is requested, and the factual situation does not fall within 3161(h)(1) through (7), the judge must determine before granting the continuance that society's interest in meeting the "ends of justice" outweighs the interest of the defendant and of society in achieving speedy trial. Furthermore the judge must set out in writing his reasons for believing that in granting the continuance he strikes the proper balance between these two societal interests.

Although it is intended that continuances under 3161(h)(8) should be given only in unusual cases, it is anticipated that the provision will be necessary in many protracted and complicated Federal prosecutions, that is antitrust cases, and complicated organized crime conspiracy cases. However, the Committee has rejected a blanket exception for these cases and opted for a case-by-case approach (see p. 44). Each time such a continuance is granted in a complicated case the judge will still have to weigh the right of society and the defendant to a speedy trial against the "ends of justice." For example, although a case like the alleged conspiracy involving the so-called "Watergate case" might normally be subject to a continuance under this provision because of its complexity, society's interest in a speedy trial in light of the then upcoming election might have outweighed that consideration. Of course, another option open to the judge in that case, were S. 754 the law, would have been to sever the burglary charges from the conspiracy case, and of course a continuance would not have been appropriate in the simple burglary case.

The original "ends of justice" provision contained in S. 754 was vague even when construed in light of the accompanying legislative history. Therefore, upon the suggestion of Senators Hruska and McClellan and the Justice Department, subsection 3161(h)(8) has been redrafted to reflect the Committee's clear intention that the determination of whether or not to grant an exclusion is to be via a balancing test. Before establishing a special, more lenient set of limits, a court would have to determine that the "ends of justice" outweigh the defendant's and society's interest in speedy trial. Also, the section as amended by the Committee sets out, in the statutory language, the specific factors which a judge should consider when weighing these interests. This is designed to give the courts the maximum degree of guidance in interpreting this critical provision.

The new provision suggests three factors which a judge may consider in determining whether to grant a request for a special set of limits. First, it would be appropriate if the judge determines that failure to do so would make "continuation of such proceeding impossible, or result in a miscarriage of justice." For example, the following circumstances would be sufficient to warrant the granting of an "ends of justice" extension: where the judge trying the case, the attorney for the Government, defense counsel, the defendant or an essential witness is ill or unable to continue, or the defense counsel has been permitted by the court to resign from the case, or the court has removed counsel from the case.

A second factor which the amended section would permit the judge to consider is the overall complexity of the case. The court would rely on its own experience but also upon objective indicators of complexity when granting an "ends of justice" extension.

There are several fairly objective factors that a judge might consider in determining whether to grant a continuance under this provision because of the complicated nature of the case. None of these factors alone should be sufficient to grant a continuance. A judge might attempt to determine through conferences with defense and government counsel the number of days of trial which will be required to present the evidence in the case. For example, in the Southern District of New York, the United States attorney is ready for trial within 60 days of arrest for all "short trial" cases—cases which will take less than three days to try. This rule of thumb might be used under section 3161(h)(8). Therefore a continuance would be more appropriate in a case which is likely to take more than three days to try than in one which will take less than three days.

Another objective indicator of case complexity is the weighted caseload. This is a formula which has been used by the Federal judiciary to measure the complexity of cases for the purpose of determining the true workload for each district so that Congress can know when a new judgeship should be created. The formula is based on a periodic time study by the Federal Judicial Center which analyzes the actual amount of time spent on different kinds of cases. A new index was completed in May of 1971.¹ It would be very appropriate to grant continuances under section 3161(h)(8) for a bribery case which has a weighted caseload index of 5.94, while in the typical auto theft case where the index is only .63 a continuance based on complexity would not be appropriate.

The third factor to be used by the judge in determining whether to grant a continuance under this subsection is related to the second. It would permit an exclusion where proceedings become stalled in grand jury because of the "unusual complexity of the factual determination to be made by the grand jury or by events beyond the control of the court or the government." This provision is specifically designed to deal with the situation where arrest precedes indictment thus commencing the time limits but grand jury proceedings become stalled. It is not designed to cover every situation where grand jury proceedings are delayed—only where the delay was caused when an unusual amount of new or complex evidence is elicited in those proceedings. The more complicated the evidence presented, the more appropriate it would be for a judge to allow a continuance.

A grand jury continuance might be appropriate in a case involving continuing criminal activity, such as an organized crime or internal security conspiracy in which the prosecution has no real choice in commencing prosecution because the police have decided to arrest the defendant for the purpose of stopping the criminal activity. In most other cases, the continuance provision should not be used to give the prosecution time to gather evidence because the Government should not initiate prosecution until it is ready to move fairly rapidly to trial.

¹For a discussion of the weighted caseload formula and the new index, see The Annual Report of the Director of the Administration Office of the United States Courts, 1971. Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, Washington, D.C., p. 167 ff; and for a discussion as to how the formula was derived, see The 1969-70 Federal District Court Time Study, June 1971, Federal Judicial Center, Washington, D.C.

However, as a general matter the Committee intends that, except for the above situations, this provision should be rarely used. Furthermore, even the above situations should be handled on a case-by-case basis with the court stating in writing the reasons why it believes that granting the continuance strikes the proper balance between the ends of justice on the one hand and the interest of society in a speedy trial and the interest of the defendant in a speedy trial on the other.

It is assumed that the denial of a continuance under this subsection or any part of 3161(h) would not be appealable as an interlocutory matter. However, the question of the improper granting or denial of a continuance would be a proper question for review on the granting of a motion to dismiss under section 3162 of the act or on review of a conviction after such motion was denied. This provision is, however, not intended to give the prosecution any right to appeal that it does not already enjoy under the Criminal Appeals Act.

Subsection 3161(i) provides that where a defendant pleads guilty and then withdraws his plea that the time limits commence again on the date the plea is withdrawn.

This provision added at the suggestion of the Justice Department, takes into account the relative ease with which pleas of guilty may be withdrawn prior to sentence. Under S. 895, without such a provision, it was possible for a defendant to enter a plea of guilty on the 59th day to one of several charges and wait several weeks, and then withdraw his plea before sentencing, thereby frustrating any prosecution on the other counts which might not yet have been dismissed. It was even possible under the original language that the Government would have been unable to prosecute the defendant with respect to the charge to which he pleaded guilty but subsequently withdrew the plea.

The Committee followed the Justice Department's proposed solution to this problem in providing that the time limits start all over again on the day that a withdrawal of a plea becomes final. Therefore the day on which the defendant withdraws the plea is treated as the initiation of a legitimate subsequent prosecution. If a defendant pleads guilty to a charge on the 59th day after arrest and then withdraws his plea, the withdrawal of plea is treated as the first day of a new prosecution with 60 days remaining in which to try the defendant.

Section 3162 sanctions

Section 3162 declares that if the case is not brought to trial within the prescribed period the charges shall be dropped and that the defendant cannot be re-prosecuted except in "exceptional circumstances." Dismissal with limitations on prosecution would only be imposed beginning seven years after enactment but dismissal without limitation on prosecution would be imposed during the fifth and sixth years after enactment. If either prosecutor or defense counsel is responsible for intentional delay, he may be subject to sanctions including fines, penalties and a withdrawal of the right to practice for as long as three months.

Title I of S. 754, when considered as a whole, represents a direction by Congress on behalf of the American people, to the Federal criminal justice system to achieve the goal of 90-day trials within seven years of enactment. Section 3162 assures that the other provisions of title I which set out this laudable goal do not remain an unfulfilled promise. This provision establishes an evenhanded scheme of sanctions for violating the speedy trial time limits against two of the critical actors in the Federal criminal justice system, defense attorneys and United States attorneys.

The sanction against the United States attorney and the court for failure to comply with the speedy trial time limits is dismissal of the prosecution. For a discussion of similar provisions being used in State speedy trial schemes and the Committee's reasoning in adopting the dismissal sanctions, see pages 15-17.

The mandatory dismissal section is the most controversial provision in S. 754. The Department originally endorsed mandatory dismissal with prejudice when Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist appeared before the Subcommittee on behalf of the Department but for the past two years the Department has opposed this aspect of the bill. The issue of mandatory dismissal was discussed at some length during the April 17, 1973 hearings conducted by the Subcommittee. Both the Department and Carol Vance of the National District Attorneys Association were attracted by Professor Dailin Oaks' suggestion that a dismissal without prejudice provision might be an acceptable alternative.

Professor Oaks suggests that the Subcommittee look to the California speedy trial statute which provides dismissal without prejudice for failure to comply with the time limits. According to both Professor Oaks and Justice Winslow Christian, then Director of the National Center for State Courts, once a case is dismissed for failure to meet the speedy trial time limits in California it is rarely recommenced. That is because California judges impose a heavy burden upon the prosecution to justify its failure to meet the time limits on the first attempt. Therefore, this burden to justify reprosecution serves as a sufficient deterrent to failure to comply with the time limits while at the same time permitting reprosecution in extreme cases. According to Justice Christian, the metropolitan District Attorneys Offices in California very rarely fail to comply with the time limits. For example, in San Diego in an average year there were only three or four speedy trial dismissals out of 17,000 prosecutions.

The Committee has adopted Oaks' suggestion because of the California experience. S. 754, as amended by Committee, provides that charges be dismissed in cases where the defendant is not brought to trial within the time limits. However, the government can reinstitute charges if it presents compelling evidence that failure to meet the time limits in the first prosecution was caused by "exceptional circumstances" which the government and the court could not have foreseen or avoided. This is intended to be an even higher standard than that provided in section 3161(h)(8), "ends of justice." Indeed, in order for the government to reprosecute there would have to exist circumstances which the government could not and did not know about before the original dismissal. For example, "exceptional circumstances" might apply where a defendant or his counsel perjured himself in alleging circumstances which led a judge to dismiss charges for failure to meet the speedy trial time limits. It might be impossible to reinstate the charges were it not for such a provision.

S. 754, as amended, would impose a dismissal without limitation on prosecution during the fifth and sixth years after enactment. Beginning seven years after enactment dismissal would be with a limitation on subsequent prosecutions. Yet during the second, third and fourth years the only sanction for failure to meet the time limits would be the requirement that each such failure be reported to the District criminal justice planning group and to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts (see sec. 3168). The effect of this part of the Committee amendment plus the elongation of the phase-in (see discussion p. 34) is to increase the severity of the sanction as the length of the speedy trial time limits are shortened. (See Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.)

At the suggestion of the Justice Department, S. 754 adds language which places the burden of proof upon the defendant when he makes a speedy trial dismissal motion. The Government would still have the burden of going forward with the evidence in connection with an exclusion under subparagraph 3161(h)(3). Also at the suggestion of the Department, S. 754 would eliminate the requirement, contained in S. 895, that to succeed on the dismissal motion the defendant must show lack of fault for the delay. S. 754 also adds "nolo contendere" to the last sentence so that a plea of nolo contendere, like a plea of guilty, would constitute a waiver of the right to dismissal under the section. The Committee assumes that any waiver of a defendant's right to speedy trial is an intelligent waiver and that a defendant has been informed by the judge of his rights under the statute prior to taking any action which would constitute a waiver to the right to dismissal under section 3162.

The sanction for the failure of defense counsel to comply with the time limits is a scheme of penalties for dilatory tactics. The latter half of section 3162 is based upon an amendment to S. 895 proposed in the last Congress by Senator Thurmond. It sets out four situations when sanctions against counsel would be appropriate: (1) where counsel agrees to a trial date when he knows one of his witnesses will be absent; (2) where counsel files a motion which he knows is frivolous and without merit solely for the purpose of delay; (3) where counsel makes a false statement for the purpose of obtaining a continuance; and (4) where counsel otherwise fails to proceed to trial without justification consistent with section 3161. It sets out a range of penalties including the decreasing of compensation of appointed defense counsel, fines, the denial of the right to practice in that court for as long as three months, and the filing of a report with the appropriate disciplinary committee. The new provision also requires the court to follow rule 42 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure in conducting procedures which lead to such penalties.

Section 3163 effective dates

Section 3163, when read with subsections 3161(b) and (c) and subsections 3161(f) and (g) implements the phasing-in of the time limits. The result is a seven year graduated phase-in of the time limits during which the time limits between arrest and trial are shortened and the sanction for failure to meet the time limits become more severe. (See Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.)

Along with implementing the phase-in of the time limits, this section also specifies which kinds of pending cases will fall under the time limits after enactment. The arrest to indictment time limit would apply to all cases brought on or following the effective date of the Act and also to all summons issued or arrests conducted prior to the effective date but for which no indictment or information has yet been filed. The indictment to trial time limit would apply to all cases brought on or following the effective date and to all indictments or informations filed prior to the effective date.

The effective date of the Act will be one year after enactment. During the year between the date of enactment and the effective date, the interim time limits discussed in Section 3164 will apply.

An important difference between the original section 3163 contained in S. 895 and the new version is that the latter would eliminate the exclusion of antitrust, securities, and tax cases from the act. As Mr. Reznick suggested, it is these very cases that are responsible for the egregious delays in the Federal courts. In Reznick's words:

"In almost all such cases, the bringing of a criminal charge follows a long government investigation, involving extensive grand jury proceedings. The defendant also is well aware of the possibility of prosecution and has substantial time to prepare his case even before the formal institution of prosecution. No doubt more time for trial preparation may be required for some of the cases because of their complexity, but the continuance provisions of the Act can make allowance for such cases on an appropriate showing of good cause. A case-by-case approach to such problems is preferable to a blanket exemption for any class of cases."

This is essentially the approach taken by the Committee in its amendment to section 3163 and the "ends of justice" continuance provision, 3161(h)(8) where complex cases would be subject to a case-by-case continuance (see pp. 38-41).

Section 3164 interim plans

Section 3164 would require jurisdictions to implement interim plans within three months of enactment to remain in effect until the effective date of the 90-day time limits of subsection 3161(b) and (c). (See Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.) These interim plans must provide that all detained defendants and all released defendants considered to be "high risk" by the United States attorney be tried within 90 days.

Section 3164 has been added to title I of the legislation as a result of the suggestion by Professor Freed that certain minimal speedy trial requirements be placed into operation soon after enactment and until the courts are prepared to implement the mandatory time limits. These interim plans would be similar to the plan adopted by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. (See Section IV. Discussion, pp. 17-20.) The section would require trials within 90 days for pretrial detainees or "high risk" defendants who are on pretrial release, pending the full effectiveness of sections 3161 and 3162. The sanctions for failure to adhere to the limits would not be dismissal, as in section 3162, but pretrial release in the case of detainees and review of release conditions in the case of high risk releasees. The provision would not apply to detainees who have already been convicted of another offense because independent grounds for their detention exist.

Planning process sections

The overall function of S. 754 is to encourage the Federal criminal justice system to engage in comprehensive planning and budgeting toward the goal of achieving speedy trial. The most widely known section of the bill is the first section which imposes the time limits. However, the most important sections of the bill are the planning process sections (sections 3165-69) which provide a planning process whereby each district court formulates a plan for the implementation of speedy trial and sets out the additional resources necessary to meet the limits of section 3161.

The planning process sections are critical to the bill's success because they provide the vital link between the Federal criminal justice system and the appropriations process. In summary they provide the courts and the United States Attorneys with a mechanism to plan for the implementation of 90-day trials in a systematic manner, to try innovative techniques on a pilot basis, to itemize the additional resources necessary to achieve the 90-day trial goal, and to communicate with Congress concerning its plans and the additional budget requests.

S. 754 as introduced had only one section on the planning process which simply required the courts to formulate a plan for the implementation of speedy trial. The Committee agrees with representatives of the Justice Department and the Federal Judicial Center as well as Professor Freed that section 3165 of S. 754, as introduced, is inadequate. The provision did not set out with sufficient precision the goals of the planning and implementation process, the contents of the district plans or the types of studies and analysis which should precede each plan. Nor did the bill provide for a reporting or information-gathering process which would provide a data base for those preparing the district plans.

Judging from a recent study of the experience in the Federal Judiciary under Rule 50(b), this concern about the planning process of S. 754 is warranted. That study found that most courts responded to the new Supreme Court rule by merely adopting the model speedy trial plan circulated by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts or a plan which was only "slightly different". None of the district courts conducted in-depth analysis of the speedy trial situation within their jurisdictions other than to determine the actual processing times between various stages so that the time limits selected under the plans did not threaten the status quo. The result was that the plans did not require the adoption of new management technology, nor did they isolate causes of delay in the district and attempt to eliminate them. Consequently, the plans simply set norms for processing cases without attempting to shorten the actual case processing time and therefore Rule 50(b) is not having a major impact on the speedy trial crisis in the Federal courts.

The planning process contemplated by S. 754 demands much more of the district courts. The plans cannot simply restate the norms set out in section 3161 of the act as the courts have done with the model plan under Rule 50(b). Under S. 754 comprehensive criminal justice analysis must be undertaken in each district to isolate the causes of delay which keep the district from meeting those norms. The plan will explain those causes of delay and will set out a realistic strategy for attacking them. This amendment will make it absolutely clear what is expected of each district in the planning process and thereby avoid the pitfalls of Rule 50(b).

Some critics of S. 754 have asserted that even if the planning process works perfectly, speedy trial will not be forthcoming. They contend that basic changes in criminal law must precede any effort to achieve speedy trial or that the management techniques necessary to utilize criminal justice resources more efficiently cannot be implemented within the time frame contemplated by the bill or finally that Congress will not appropriate the necessary additional resources to help the system meet the time limits. Therefore, they suggest that the time limits approach be attempted on a pilot basis in several districts with appropriations for additional resources made available in advance.

The revision of section 3165 by the Committee is part of a comprehensive rewrite of the whole planning process. The Committee has (1) revised and clarified the planning process by requiring the establishment of special criminal justice planning groups in each district court (Section 3165); (2) described in greater detail the purpose of the planning process by explaining exactly what must be contained in each district plan (Section 3167); (3) created a reporting system requiring participants in the criminal justice system to report violations of the time limits (Section 3168); and finally (4) authorized five Federal districts to be chosen to plan for speedy trials as pilot districts with the knowledge that funds are to be available from the outset (Section 3169).

Section 3165 planning process

Section 3165 specifically requires that each United States judicial district form a planning group within 60 days of the effective date of this Act, for the purposes of the initial formulation of the District plans required by Sections 3166 and 3167 and the continued study of the criminal justice system in the district.

Section 3165 is designed to broaden the base of participants in the planning process. Courts alone do not cause delay, and courts alone or solely in consultation with others cannot cure delay. The district planning group would consist of the Chief Judge, the United States Attorney, the Federal Public Defender, if any, a private attorney experienced in the defense of criminal cases in the District, the Chief Federal Probation Officer and a person skilled in criminal justice research. This group would be charged with gathering the necessary information and undertaking the appropriate studies and analysis and formulating a plan which would be submitted to the district court for adoption. Although purely advisory, the planning group would have a broad jurisdiction and could make recommendations ranging from suggested statutory changes to recommendations as to how many new typewriters the clerk's office will need.

Section 3166 district plans—Generally

Section 3166 is based on section 3165 of S. 754, as introduced. The original provision has been revised to comport with the Committee's elongation of the phase-in of the time limits to seven years. Under the new provision, district plans are prepared one year before each new set of time limits are placed into operation and before the dismissal sanctions go into effect. (See discussion p. 42, and Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.) The section retains the requirement that the reports be transmitted to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts which in turn must summarize the reports within three months and transmit a nationwide report to the Congress.

Subsection 3166(a) requires each district court, upon approval of the judicial council of the circuit, to submit three plans for the trial of cases in accordance with section 3161 to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. The first plan is to be submitted one year after enactment and would plan for the courts' compliance with the time limits required for the third and fourth years following enactment during which the 45 day arrest to indictment and 120 day indictment to trial time limits are in effect.² The second plan is to be submitted three years after enactment and would plan for compliance with the time limits required for the fifth and sixth years following enactment during which the 30 day arrest to indictment and 60 day indictment to trial time limits are in effect. The final plan is to be submitted five years after enactment and would plan for compliance with the combined dismissal sanction with limited reprosecution and the time limits required for the seventh and following years. (See Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.)

Subsection 3166(b) requires the Chief Judge of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, upon approval of the Joint Committee on Judicial Administration to submit three plans for the trial of cases in accordance with section 3161 of the Act. These plans would be submitted to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts at the same time as the plans required by Subsection 3166(a) and would be formulated after consultation with the Joint Committee and the criminal justice planning group established for the District of Columbia pursuant to section 3169.

Subsection 3166(c) requires that the Ad-

²Because section 3161 does not become effective until one year after enactment, S. 754 refers to the second year after enactment as the "first twelve calendar month period after the effective date", the third year after enactment as the "second twelve calendar month period after the effective date", etc. For the purposes of discussion this report refers to the years in terms of years after enactment, not years after the effective date.

ministrative Office of the United States Courts with the approval of the Judicial Conference submit three reports to the Congress summarizing the reports to the Administrative Office by the various districts. (See Calendar of Implementation, Chart 1, p. 55.)

Subsection 3166(d) requires that the district plans required by this section will become public documents.

Subsection 3166(e) authorizes the appropriation of such sums as Congress might find necessary for the purpose of carrying out this section.

Section 3167 district plans—Contents

Section 3167 prescribes minimum requirements for the information which must be included in the district plans required by section 3166. The required information includes a description of the conditions present in the district which may affect implementation of the time limits set forth in the Act, the manner in which the district will implement the Act, and a description of procedures and techniques for gathering statistics dealing with implementation of the Act.

In clarifying exactly what must be contained in the district plans, Section 3167 should facilitate compliance with Section 3166. Furthermore, it recognizes many of the problems which the courts had in complying with Rule 50(b) as indicated in the study mentioned earlier. The new section 3167 sets out exactly what statistical information the planning group must place in the plan and requires each district to adopt procedures which will facilitate the reporting process set out in a new section 3168 described below, thereby providing the planning group and the district court with the information it needs to draft a plan.

Section 3168 speedy trial reports

Section 3168 requires the submission of periodic reports by the various participants in the criminal justice system for the purpose of compiling statistics concerning implementation of the speedy trial time limits, the complexity of various types of cases, and the needs of the individual participants in the criminal justice system.

Under the provisions of this section, all participants in the criminal justice process, the prosecutor, the defense attorney, the judge, the district planning groups, the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, the Department of Justice, and the General Accounting Office, will participate in the filing of reports. The reports filed with list problems encountered in meeting the time limits, each extension of time limits and the circumstances under which extensions are granted. Ultimately the reports or summaries will be relayed to the Judiciary Committees and the Appropriations Committee of the House and Senate.

These reports should be invaluable to criminal justice planners in the years before any sanctions are imposed. It will help the planners to anticipate the problems the district will face when sanctions and shorter time limits are phased in. This reporting process continues even after the dismissal limited reprosecution sanction goes into effect in order to provide the planners with information on performance under the time limits so that they can anticipate the rate at which dismissals might occur when that sanction is imposed.

Section 3169 pilot districts

Section 3169 authorizes the appropriation of $5,000,000.00 to be used in conducting the initial phases of planning and implementation of speedy trial plans in five pilot Federal judicial districts. The pilot districts will be selected by the Chief Justice and the Attorney General from applications submitted by the planning groups of the various districts. Funds given to these pilot districts can be used only by a two-thirds vote of the planning groups in the districts selected as pilot districts.

This section grows out of a suggestion by Charles R. Work, former chief prosecutor in the Superior Court in Washington, D.C. (and now Deputy Administrator of LEAA), and Professor Daniel Freed. Its purpose is to test the hypothesis that additional resources can help the system meet the time limits and to experiment with different management techniques and innovations which will help other districts comply with the time limits. Pilot districts will be funded in the first few years so that other districts and the Congress can gain from the experience of the pilot districts before imposition of the shorter time limits and stiffer sanctions in the rest of the nation.

Professor Freed has set out several of the questions which he feels the pilot districts could answer:

"How should money be used to accomplish the intended results? How can Congress ensure that planners will accommodate the availability of funds wisely to situations where inefficiency or tradition or excess proceduralism rather than shortages of personnel or facilities, are the major factors producing delay? Will the knowledge that funds are forthcoming promote unnecessary requests for added manpower and higher salaries, or for research and innovative reforms? What restraints should be imposed on these expenditures? Without funds available to at least some jurisdictions from the outset, how can a district's criminal justice system, or Congress, know, or learn, whether—and how much—money should be appropriated?"

Section 3170 definitions

Section 3170 contains the definitions of terms used in Title I of the Act. The term "offense" is defined in such a manner as to exclude defendants charged with petty offenses from the speedy trial provisions. The terms "judge" and "judicial officer" are defined so that the title applies to the Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

Section 3171 sixth amendment rights

Section 3171 provides that nothing in the speedy trial bill shall be interpreted as a bar to a claim by a defendant that his rights to speedy trial under the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution had been violated.

At the suggestion of Senator Fong a provision has been added to title III of the bill clarifying the intent of the Committee that no provision of this bill is to act as a bar to a defendant's claim of denial of speedy trial under the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution. Therefore, while this bill would be an exercise of Congress' power to implement the Sixth Amendment, it is not intended to be, and obviously could not be, a conclusive interpretation precluding the courts from going beyond Congress if they found the Sixth Amendment's speedy trial provision so required. Similarly, the courts, in interpreting the Sixth Amendment, could not strike down a provision of this Act because, in its view, the Sixth Amendment did not require it. Conceivably a court may determine that the Sixth Amendment requires trials within 100 days. If so, the provisions of this bill permitting trials within 240 days in the second year and within 165 days in the third and fourth years would be in conflict with the Sixth Amendment, and would fail. But the fact that the bill requires trials within 90 days beginning in the fifth year would be unaffected by such a decision. Congress may not do less than the Constitution requires, but it may do more.

TITLE II—PRETRIAL SERVICES AGENCIES

Section 3152 establishment of pretrial services agencies

Section 3152 creates on a demonstration basis in 10 judicial districts, other than the District of Columbia, pretrial services agencies to supervise and control defendants released on bail. The districts are to be selected by the Chief Justice, upon consultation with the Attorney General, on the basis of the number of criminal cases in the district, the percentage of defendants detained before trial, the incidence of crime charged to persons released prior to trial, and the resources available.

Section 3153 organization of pretrial services agencies

Section 3153 creates a board of trustees for the pretrial services agencies in the designated districts. The board shall be composed of the Chief Judge of the Federal District Court, the United States Attorney, the Public Defender, if there is one in the district, a member of the local defense bar, the chief probation officer, and representatives of community organizations appointed by the Chief Judge. The board appoints a Chief Pretrial Services Officer who is responsible for the operation of the agency and who may appoint other personnel to the staff of the agency.

Section 3154 functions and powers of pretrial services agencies

Section 3154 provides that each agency is to perform various functions, as the court shall direct, including: collection and verification of information pertaining to eligibility of defendants for release; recommendation of conditions of release; supervision and control of released persons; operation or contraction of operating facilities for custody or care of released persons, such as halfway houses, narcotics, and alcohol treatment centers, and counseling centers; coordination of other agencies to serve as custodians of released persons; and assistance in securing medical, legal, social and employment assistance to released persons. Information collected by the agencies is to be used only for the determination of bail and is otherwise confidential. The Board of trustees may create exceptions to this confidentiality requirement.

Although the primary function of the pretrial services agencies will be supervision of pretrial release, the Committee does not intend that these responsibilities be restricted to bail proceedings. The agencies could perform any service, as set out in section 3154, for any defendant prior to or even in lieu of trial. For example, the Committee sees no reason why the agencies could not provide services for defendants who are in pretrial intervention programs such as the programs contemplated by S. 798 (93d Cong., 1st Sess.) which was enacted by the Senate on October 3, 1973. Indeed, the pretrial services agencies could even administer a pretrial intervention program so long as such administration would not be in violation of any other statute and so long as such administration would not interfere with the agencies' primary responsibility under this title.

The whole second title, like the first, is designed to improve the efficiency and deterrent of the Federal criminal justice system. The second title is directed at the problem of defendants who are released pretrial pursuant to the Bail Reform Act of 1966 and either commit a subsequent crime before trial commences or who flee the jurisdiction to avoid prosecution. The title is based on the theory that more careful selection of defendants for pretrial release and closer supervision of released defendants, like trial within 90 days, would reduce pretrial crime. (For a more detailed discussion of the Committee's reasons for title II see pp. 24-25.)

This approach is based upon the experience in the District of Columbia Circuit. The District of Columbia Bail Agency has enhanced the operation of the Bail Reform Act in the District of Columbia because of the reliability of its recommendation for release and the quality of its supervision of released defendants. Title II would improve the operation of the Bail Reform Act by providing 10 Federal districts on a demonstration basis with sufficient resources to both conduct bail interviews and supervise conditions of release. A Pretrial Services Agency similar to the District of Columbia Bail Agency would be established in each of these districts.

There are only minor differences between Title II of S. 895 and Title II of S. 754. The number of pretrial services agencies which could be established have been increased from five to 10. This is based on the advice of criminal justice experts that there were at least 10 Federal district courts which could benefit from such a demonstration project.

S. 754 would also explicitly place the responsibility for establishing the pretrial services agencies upon the Director of Administrative Office of the United States Courts although the Chief Justice would still select the districts. Also the provision would no longer mention the District of Columbia as one of the jurisdictions in which a pretrial services agency must be established since the District of Columbia Bail Agency already serves that purpose.

Section 3153 on the organization and operation of pretrial services agencies has been rewritten so that the pretrial services agencies would be governed by a policy board or coordinating council. Based upon recommendations by Professor Freed and the Department of Justice, the new draft would establish a board of trustees, to be appointed by the Chief Judge of the district court and to be composed of one district judge, the United States attorney, the public defender, a member of the local defense bar, the chief probation officer and two representatives of community organizations.

Section 3154 has been amended to create a limited confidentiality for agency files. The confidentiality provision is designed to promote candor and truthfulness by the defendants would be reluctant to speak to interviewers if the information in the files could be used against the defendant on the issue of guilt. However, the provision does not create blanket confidentiality for the files; it leaves some discretion to the Board of Trustees to develop its own policy on the release of agency files. The Board's regulations must, of course, comport with the general policy set out in the section. As a general rule the agencies' files should only be used in initial bail hearings and in subsequent hearings where there is an apparent violation of release conditions. Exceptions shall be created to permit access by the agency's own personnel and by qualified persons for research purposes. The regulations on release of information for research purposes should require the preservation of the anonymity of the individual to whom such information relates; the completion of nondisclosure agreements by qualified persons and such additional requirements and conditions as the Board of Trustees finds to be necessary to assure the protection of privacy and security interests.

The section also would allow the Board of Trustees to permit dissemination of agency files to probation officers for presentence reports; to third party custodian agencies and in certain limited situations to law enforcement agencies for law enforcement purposes. The Committee has attempted to adopt a compromise between the language contained in the original confidentiality provision for the District of Columbia Bail Agency and the revision of that provision in 1970. The original provision (D.C. Code 23-903) provided a blanket confidentiality of the files, while the only limitation on the use of the information in the 1970 amendments (D.C. Code 23-1303) is that such information could not be used on the question of the defendant's guilt. The 1970 amendments permit the use of the information gained in bail interviews for the purpose of a perjury prosecution or for the purpose of impeaching the defendant's credibility. The Committee's language permits each Board of Trustees to make its own judgment on this question. Finally, the Committee assumes that each pretrial services agency will report annually to the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts and that the Director will in turn make a summary of the agencies' experience available in his annual report to the Congress required by Section 3155.

Section 3155 report to Congress

Section 3155 requires that the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall make an annual report on the operation of the pretrial services agencies, with special attention to their effectiveness in reducing pretrial crime and the volume and cost of pretrial detention. In this fourth annual report, the Director shall include recommendations for modifications of this chapter or for its expansion to other districts. This report shall also compare the effectiveness of these pretrial services agencies to traditional monetary bail programs. The Director shall also submit to Congress a report on the administration and operation of the whole Speedy Trial Act six years after enactment.

The purpose of this section is to keep Congress informed on the operation of both titles of S. 754. The first subsection of 3155 is specifically concerned with the effectiveness of the 10 pretrial services agencies. The Committee intends that an objective evaluation of each of the 10 pretrial services agencies be conducted. At the suggestion of Senator Bayh this provision was rewritten to assure that the final report on these pretrial services agencies would compare the effectiveness of these agencies to traditional monetary bail programs.

Professor Freed in his testimony before the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, pointed out that title II would empower a pretrial services agency to take over responsibility for filing bi-weekly detention reports which the United States attorneys are required to file pursuant to rule 46(g) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The reports filed by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts pursuant to subsection (a) should contain summaries of these bi-weekly reports from the 10 demonstration districts. Professor Freed set out an outline of data which might be compiled in this regard in appendix B to his testimony, appearing at pages 148 of the hearings conducted by the Subcommittee in 1971. The reports required by subsection (a) should, at a minimum, contain this information on pretrial detention in the 10 pretrial services districts.

The report required by subsection (b) of this provision is directed more toward the operation of title I of S. 754, although summaries of the findings in the other reports might be mentioned. The Committee intends that a report be prepared similar to Professor Dallin Oak's report to Congress on the operation and effectiveness of the Criminal Justice Act. The Oaks study led to amendments to the Criminal Justice Act and hopefully the report contemplated by subsection (b) would be of sufficient caliber to lead to improvements in the Act.

Section 3156 definitions

Section 3156 contains the definitions for title II.

Section 302 amends the analysis of chapter 207 of title 18, to reflect the amendments made by title II of the bill.

Section 303 authorizes the appropriations of $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1974, and such sums as Congress might find necessary in subsequent years.

The Committee arrived at the $10,000,000 authorization by considering the budget of the District of Columbia Bail Agency and the expense of conducting the sophisticated evaluations required by section 3155. Of course, this is only an authorization and the Appropriations Committees of both Houses of Congress would have to conduct hearings to determine whether $1,000,000 need be spent on each of the pretrial services agencies. Some districts where pretrial services agencies will be established will have a caseload considerably less than the District of Columbia Bail

Agency, and presumably the appropriation would reflect that difference.

Section 304 amends section 604, title 28 of the United States Code, relating to the functions of the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, to reflect the new duties imposed by the creation of pretrial services under this title.

THE DEAL ON THE TRADE BILL

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, there appeared in the Washington Post this morning what I regard as a rather intemperate and poorly informed editorial which I felt should be the subject of at least some modest comment.

Let me just read the first sentence: The squalid deal the Senate Democrats have forced on President Ford, as the price of passing the trade bill, evidently cannot be undone.

Mr. President, I am not aware of any deal that President Ford has made on the trade bill or made on the cargo preference bill or any other bill. I think I had some impression of what the President's reaction was to the trade bill as it stood about 4 or 5 months ago.

At that time I inquired of the President what his reaction to that bill was, and the impression I gained was that he was somewhat favorably disposed to it, but he felt that he ought to have more flexibility, so if he thought it was not working out very well he could suspend it.

After hearing the President's views on the matter, I undertook to see that that measure would be amended in such a fashion that the President would have the kind of flexibility that he seemed to think he should have if that bill became law.

Now, since that time there have been a lot of editorials and, I think, a lot of them were promoted by either the Exxon Corp., or this organization that calls itself the American Controlled Shipping Corp., the old foreign flags of convenience group, promoted in a lot of newspapers giving this shipping bill a very bad press.

It may be that after all the editorials have just taken a view if this little bill becomes law it will bring the country to an end, that the President might be intimidated into vetoing the bill and, for that matter, I was never confident he was going to sign it anyway.

All I can say is that in my discussion with the President, which was several months ago, I merely gained the impression as of that date if the bill were drawn in a fashion so that it had sufficient flexibility that he would consider signing it. I have seen the President several times since that moment, and the matter was not even discussed. So where these people get their information is news to me.

December 20, 1974

I would think that in an editorial of that sort someone would bother to undertake to check some of his facts because there is no deal with anybody of any sort whatsoever. I assume the President will do what he thinks is right with regard to the matter just as I have done with what I thought was right as my Maker gives me the light to see it.

Now, some of the language, Mr. President, is really pretty irate and intemperate. Let me read this:

The real blame for this reprehensible deal lies with Senator Long, the Senate Democrats who supported him, the insatiable maritime unions and the shipyards—in that order.

Well now, I am glad to know that, I did not know that I had anything to do with a deal of any sort in connection with this matter.

I would say, Mr. President, that I was trying to do just the way this great newspaper was suggesting in an editorial a week ago. They said that the trade bill ought to be passed and that it should not be loaded down with amendments that were not strictly germane to the bill. That is what we did. They did not want the cargo bill added on the trade bill. I did not add that; I left it off.

Then, I see here that I am supposed to have made some kind of deal to make the Senate pass a bill.

Mr. President, we called the bill up; it was a privileged matter.

When I was told that some Senators might decide to use dilatory tactics, which were certainly their right, to see that the bill did not become law, I brought the conference report up while we were considering the trade bill because I knew that at that point the President's official family, the Secretary of Commerce, the Special Trade Representative, and others, if need be, would do what they could to see that both measures came to a vote, so that the bills would go to the President's desk and the President would work his will.

For example, the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Dent, is strongly opposed to the cargo bill, and yet he did all he could to see that both bills were voted on so that they would go to the President's desk and the President could do what he wanted to do about those measures.

Mr. President, I wrote a letter in response to the matter, to be delivered by hand to the great Washington Post. I hope that they might find sufficient intellectual tolerance to print a point of view at variance with their own.

Ordinarily, of course, our RECORD of today will not be fully available until Senators have had a chance to make their insertions, so it will be some time before it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, generally available, I suppose.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter I wrote about this matter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE EDITOR,
The Washington Post,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: If your editorial, "The Deal on the Trade Bill," was intended to be amusing, you will be pleased to know that it afforded me several good laughs. It has been my experience as a legislator that the light by which one's conduct is judged tends to depend on whose ox is being gored.

Surely, you must have agreed with my efforts to pass the Trade Bill, the Social Services Bill, and as much of the tax-reform proposals as I could persuade the Senate to agree upon.

Your previous editorials have led me to believe that you will commend the President profusely for signing the Trade Bill. That bill contains literally hundreds of provisions which provide protection in one respect or another for various segments of American labor and industry. Some have even described the bill as a "protectionist" measure. I might point out that there is no fundamental difference between protecting American jobs here and on the high seas.

You also assume that I have a "deal" with President Ford on the Cargo Preference Bill. I have been asked about that matter many times and I have told everyone, including one of your very able reporters, that there is no deal of any sort. To be exact, I gained the impression from talking to the President that he was favorably inclined toward the Cargo Preference Bill. This impression I gained from a conversation several months ago. I have seen the President several times since then and the subject has not even been discussed.

The President might be impressed by your editorial, as well as others that have been promoted by the major oil companies who oppose the Cargo Preference Bill. Frankly, if the purpose of your editorial was to intimidate the President into vetoing the bill, I suspect it will be counterproductive when he finds himself accused of deals he did not make and reads such language as "squalid, notorious, reprehensible" and other language implying highly improper conduct of which he is completely innocent.

The late Richard Newberger is remembered fondly for a story he used to tell us, stressing the need for intellectual and religious tolerance. He laid great stress on the fact that you must always keep in mind that the other fellow might be right. I am strongly convinced that my side of the argument over this issue has more logic to support it than your side, but I would be the first to agree that history might prove me to be in error. I would commend this sort of intellectual fairness to you. It is my theory that this world is a sort of testing place, and I suspect that it will be a much later date and perhaps in a different world that we will know for sure who was right about some of these controversial issues.

Sincerely,

RUSSEL B. LONG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of today.)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am highly disturbed at what has happened to my amendment to the trade bill, not because it is an amendment which I offered and persuaded the Senate to pass, but because it was an amendment which I thought would bring new hope to American families whose loved ones are separated from them in Communist countries, and who are harassed and prevented in their attempts at unification. We are coming very close now to the Season of Peace, when men of all faiths and persuasions stop and reflect upon the inner meaning of life, and the value of love and dignity. It is uniquely a time for families, for family celebrations, and family reunions. But we know there are many families in this country who will have no reunions, whose loved ones are separated by cruel barriers erected by totalitarian political systems.

December 20, 1974

We all have heard the stories. Each one is an individual case, yet each one contributes to the curtain of misery which shuts out the light of humanity and toleration. To many of us, the stories may sound alike—the tramping through miles of snow and ice on winter nights, the merciless strands of barbed wire separating families from freedom, the menacing lines of Communist troops, all on the ready to shoot at the slightest suspicion. But to the individuals these memories remain. And for the close relatives who had to be left behind in the exigencies of haste and danger, those nights of terror were a traumatic experience, one of life's watersheds after which nothing was ever the same.

We are proposing now to extend credits and credit guarantees to those same countries so that they can enjoy the benefits of our trade. Now, Mr. President, I realize that trade is supposed to be a two-way street, that profits both sides. But, in fact, the transactions with non-market economy countries will not be merely economic transactions. They will represent an infusion of technology and capital into countries whose creativity and development have been restrained by the heavy hand of tyranny. Western technology is absolutely essential to their future economic development. Naturally, they will pretend that they do not need Western technology; but we know that the facts are otherwise. The technology we supply will have an impact entirely out of proportion to the economic value of such trade. It will help these nonmarket countries build an economic infrastructure that they cannot build otherwise. The leverage on their development is crucial to their future.

This leverage can be exerted exactly in the same proportion in our dealings with nonmarket countries. Since the economic exchange is secondary, we must demand some other quid-pro-quo. The amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON) and by Congressman VANIK in the House, was intended to exercise this leverage, and it was admirably designed to do so. It was intended to bring about the release of victims of oppression.

As we know, the Soviets are hard bargainers. They insisted that they did not need our trade so badly that they would give up the victims of oppression. It is very strange that the administration did not insist upon this point. Trade with nonmarket countries is worthless to us unless we get some definite lifting of restraints. It is even stranger that the administration held the trade bill hostage in order to bring about this increased trade with nonmarket countries. It is my judgment that if nonmarket countries had been excluded from consideration in broadening our trade policies, we would have had a trade bill months ago, and the improved impact upon our balance of payments would already be noticeable. If economic interests were what were uppermost in the mind of the administration, they would have dropped this insistence upon increasing trade with nonmarket countries. Or, if the administration had allowed the original Jackson-Vanik language to go through, as demanded by an overwhelming majority of this body, we could have had a trade bill long ago. In my judgment, the economic benefits to be gained from increased trading with nonmarket countries are far too few to justify the price we have already paid.

The Senate is familiar with the October exchange of letters between Secretary of State Kissinger and Senator JACKSON. That exchange of letters is full of lofty language on the Secretary's part, and hopeful expressions on the part of the Senator from Washington. I might add that the Senator's hope was justified by the Secretary's statements available to the Senator at that time.

But we also know that the Secretary subsequently came before the Senate Finance Committee on December 3, and described a much flimsier arrangement with the Soviet Union, a sort of personal commitment, with no agreement whatsoever on a government-to-government basis. I put those statements in the Record on December 13. Moreover, the Secretary admitted that the principal concern of his talks with the Soviet Union had been increased Jewish emigration, whereas the understanding of the committee in its report of November 26 had been that any assurances from the Soviet Union or any other nonmarket country would apply to all ethnic and religious groups.

It was because of Secretary Kissinger's plain testimony that I offered my amendment to the trade bill. I was fearful that the administration would interpret section 402 loosely. When I first offered the amendment on December 10, I said:

As a result of Secretary Kissinger's candid testimony before the Senate Finance Committee on December 3, 1974, however, it is now clear that we must reexamine title IV of the Trade Reform Act and its accompanying amendments. The understanding that now emerges is wholly contrary to that which was presented to us earlier. In response to probing questions by members of the Senate Finance Committee, Secretary Kissinger has given us a clearer, if not a new, picture of the negotiations that have taken place between American and Soviet officials regarding the issue of immigration. Now we are told that no real agreement has been reached between American and Soviet officials after all. In his statement to the committee, Secretary Kissinger frankly admitted that he would not give "any assurances concerning the precise emigration rate that may result, assuming that the trade bill is passed and MFN is extended to the USSR."

And then I went on to say:

This testimony of Secretary Kissinger thus shows beyond all reasonable doubt, Mr. President, that we even lack assurances that Jewish emigration will be increased in the Soviet Union, let alone emigration of all other citizens of Communist countries. At best, Secretary Kissinger has offered us, as an article of faith, a vague hope that if we grant trade concessions to the Soviet Union, that the Soviet Union might be willing to increase Jewish immigration.

Because it was obvious that the Soviets were not about to agree to the spirit of the Jackson-Vanik proposal, even with the 18-month Presidential waiver, I felt that something had to be done, if only for the very close relatives of American citizens living in nonmarket countries. I thought that it was asking too much of the American people to give up valuable economic advantages and get so little—if anything at all—in return. I thought that the American people themselves should get something. I realized that we could not expect a wholesale reform of the Soviet system, not even as it pertains to emigration. But we could settle for direct benefits to American families who have relatives in nonmarket countries. My amendment was therefore drafted to constitute a new section of title IV, completely separate from section 402 with its waiver provisions. I felt that the waiver allowed the administration too much leeway for interpretation on such an important and humanitarian concern as reuniting families.

It was on this basis that my amendment was offered on December 13. As it was originally offered, it contained not only provisions to encourage emigration, but also the right to visit. The point of including visits was to lessen the burden on would-be emigres in nonmarket countries. An application for a visit would create less of a problem for them, and less suspicion. The right to visit could lead directly to increased emigration. I engaged in a colloquy with the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) and agreed, out of senatorial courtesy, to lay my amendment aside while further discussions could take place, so as not to hold up the Senate. Further discussions were held off the floor, with the distinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON), the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RUSSELL), and the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS). When my amendment was taken up again, I agreed to the modification suggested by the distinguished Senators, namely, to remove references to the right to visit. The original amendment, I should emphasize, had been previously cleared with the managers of the bill, the distinguished Senators from Louisiana and Utah, Senators LONG and BENNETT. Thus it became part of the Senate bill.

Mr. President, when the Senate approved my amendment, not even the distinguished Members of this body knew how important it was to the cause of increased immigration. For it was only 2 days ago that word came that the Soviet Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Gromyko, had written to Secretary Kissinger on October 25 completely repudiating the exchange of letters between the Secretary and Senator JACKSON. Not only was there no agreement, not even on Jewish emigration, but the Foreign Minister stated that even Jewish emigration was declining.

Mr. President, it is plain that Secretary Kissinger was correct when he said that there was no agreement on emigration, as I had pointed out on December 10; but it also appears that Secretary Kissinger misled the Members of this distinguished body when he implied that there would be an increase in emigration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article that appeared in the New York Times yesterday about the Gromyko-Kissinger exchange of letters be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. HELMS. I also ask unanimous consent that the entire record of the Kissinger-Jackson letters, the Gromyko letter, and the Kissinger testimony, as it appeared in the Times yesterday, be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, when such a lack of candor is so evident even during the preliminary negotiations, what can we expect when the authority is given to apply an 18-month waiver to nonmarket countries? The lofty goal of increased immigration can be given such a flexible and deliberate period of time for continuing assurances, but we should not put the very close relatives of American families to such a leisurely test. If we are going to trade with nonmarket countries, we want these very close relatives out, and out now.

Let me give you an example. I have in my hand a letter that was received a few days ago from Poland. It was mailed on November 29. I will not give any names, for obvious reasons, but the letter reads as follows:

I am asking you, Honorable Sir, and I am asking you, from all my heart, if you can do this for me, please. I am asking you if, by some miracle, you could send me an invitation. I would like to go to the United States of America even if only for one hour. I am willing to work at any place in any type of work. I could work as a mechanic, or as a smith, or I would accept work as a simple laborer on a farm, because I like to work and I am not a drinker. If you could do this, I would repay you with my gratitude. Please answer my letter.

Thank you very much.

This is typical of the heart-rending appeals that relatives receive constantly. And there is nothing that they can do about it, because of the totalitarian nature of the countries they live in, and because of the insensitive bureaucracy of our own country. I received yesterday morning a letter from Assistant Secretary of State Linwood Holton, with reference to my amendment. As was made clear on the floor, my amendment was intended to cover Poland, as section 402 did not. Governor Holton writes:

Among the Warsaw Pact nations, Poland has long been among the most liberal (with regard to emigration policies).

And further:

We have been assured that the Polish government will continue to accelerate its handling of divided families' applications.

Yet this is contrasted with the letter I have just read, and with the reports I receive of the difficulties which Poles have who seek to emigrate, particularly those in the younger age groups. I realize that Governor Holton functions as a legislative liaison, and is not responsible for Department policies in this matter. His letter is simply expressive of Department policy, and it expresses that policy more accurately than I could.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Governor Holton's letter be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 3.)

Mr. HELMS. It is clear from such correspondence, and from Secretary Kissinger's correspondence, that a procedure is necessary that is exempt from the waiver provisions of section 402. That was the intention of my amendment. That intention was clear from the drafting of it as a separate section. I thought that intention was clear to everyone. Indeed, no one ever mentioned the waiver aspect of 402 with regard to my amendment, since it was clear that it did not apply. The understanding that was reached with the managers of the bill, and with the managers of the Jackson amendment never even touched upon the question of a waiver. In none of the discussions held on the floor, or off the floor, with regard to my amendment, was the issue of the waiver ever raised. For, plainly, the waiver would render my amendment superfluous.

The Senator from North Carolina was therefore astonished to learn that later in the day, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON) offered an amendment that was described as a technical amendment, whose intent was to apply the waiver of section 402 to my amendment. The distinguished Senator spoke as follows:

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the legislative counsel advises that the waiver provision of the Jackson amendment does not, in fact, apply to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS).

Well, of course, Mr. President, the distinguished Senator was correct. The legislative counsel could not have advised in any other way, since it was perfectly plain that the Helms amendment was completely independent of the Jackson amendment, and was clearly intended to be. That was obvious to one and all from the start. My amendment was offered on December 10. A full explanation was available in the Record. It was a printed amendment which was on everybody's desk.

However, the distinguished Senator continued as follows:

It was everybody's intent, I am sure, that the same waiver amendment that applies to the Jackson amendment apply to the Helms amendment.

He then moved the adoption of his own amendment, and it was accepted.

Mr. President, in this statement, the distinguished Senator was misled. It was certainly never my intent that the Jackson waiver should apply to my amendment, nor did the distinguished Senator consult me, nor did he notify me so that I could appear on the floor for interrogatories if needed. Had he done so, I am sure that the matter of intent could have been cleared up. For I think that it is manifest that the distinguished Senator's amendment is not a technical amendment at all, but an amendment that exactly reverses my intent and the intent of the Senate in passing my amendment. Indeed, it negates the benefits of my amendment.

Now since the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin did not participate in the colloquies on the floor with regard to my amendment, and did not participate in any of the discussions off the floor, it is easy to understand why he may not have been fully aware of the consequences of his amendment, and why he was apparently unacquainted with the agreement which had been reached with the distinguished managers of the bill and the distinguished managers of the Jackson amendment. It is also easy to understand why the Senate itself may not have realized that it was, in fact, reversing its opinion in a few brief seconds after only two sentences of debate.

Ironically, the so-called technical amendment of the distinguished Senator was technically at fault itself, since it applied only to "section 409." While I brought up my amendment as a proposed "section 409," another amendment was passed when I laid my amendments to one side out of Senatorial courtesy, and the other was given the number "section 409." In the engrossed bill, my amendment became "section 411." I therefore urged the conference to delete the Nelson amendment entirely, since it was technically futile and contrary to the intention of the Senate in passing my amendment.

Unfortunately, it may be that the conference did not fully appreciate the extraordinary circumstances surrounding the passage of the Nelson amendment. In any case, the legislative history had been made. I therefore strongly object to the retention of the Nelson amendment in the conference report. The Senate should have an opportunity to clarify the record on this point. For if we pass the conference report as it stands, we will destroy the hopes of many hundreds of American families to be reunited with their close relatives. At Christmas time, a time of hope and peace, we will be sowing despair and gloom. Every Senator in this body will be held responsible for the actions of the conference. We should at least make it clear that the Senate had no part in dashing the expectations of American families to be reunited with the loved ones—and almost on Christmas Eve.

It is also ironic that the conference also deleted Poland and Yugoslavia from my amendment, a point I had emphasized on the floor. For section 402 deals with both the MFN and credits, while mine deals only with credits and guarantees. It has nothing to do with MFN.

After all, we know that MFN is hardly more than an honorary status. It is the credits and guarantees that count. Yet the conference excepted from my amendment nonmarket countries which already had MFN status. Certainly, my amendment could not have taken MFN away from Poland, but it could have blocked expansion of trade unless we had a quid-pro-quo on emigration. Whether it was the influence of the State Department, with their tortured acceptance of Polish emigration practices, or some other influence, I cannot say. I regret, and I am sure that most Polish-Americans regret, the deletion of this leverage over the Communist government in Poland, and I am sure that Senators will be hearing soon from their Polish constituencies if Poland is exempted from the benefits of increased emigration of relatives. It is especially difficult to explain this deletion in view of the fact that the State Department has already given assurances of satisfaction with Polish emigration practices, as indicated in the letter I have just quoted from Governor Holton. If Polish emigration practices are satisfactory, then my amendment would be no obstacle to increased trade. I should think that we would want to keep the leverage in the background.

But in any case, even if my amendment were applied to Poland, its effect will be diminished, or even wiped out, if the waiver in section 402 is applied to my amendment. Everybody loses if the waiver is kept. I do not think that we can do business, for mere monetary gain and profit, at the expense of American families who are separated from their close relatives by tyranny.

As I conclude, Mr. President, I want to emphasize that I am not resentful of the way my amendment was treated, either in the Senate or by the conferees. I understand the give-and-take of the legislative process, and I respect it. And I can assure Senators that I submitted my amendment as a matter of conscience.

I was blessed, Mr. President, to have been born in the United States. I have no parents or children, or other relatives, living in subjugation in other lands. But I have been in contact in recent weeks, Mr. President, with people who do. I have seen the tears in their eyes. I have heard their pleas for help. And though I am a freshman Senator, with little seniority and no power, I resolved to try to help them if I could. That, Mr. President, was the genesis of my amendment. That is the only reason I submitted it.

I now recognize the odds against my being successful. But with the Christmas season approaching, I simply could not dismiss these pleas for help in order to expedite my trip home to be with my children and grandchildren around the Christmas tree.

I mean not to be pious, Mr. President, but I simply felt that I could not enjoy the approaching Christmas Day unless I made the effort to put this Congress, and this Government, on record that America does have the courage to stand up for the oppressed.

I intend no rancor, Mr. President, when I suggest that it is not the Senator from North Carolina who was harmed by the gutting of my amendment. If it was to be rejected, of course, that it could have been done on the floor of this Senate, in a frank and open way. I hope it can be said that I presented my case frankly and openly, and that I extended every courtesy to Senators who questioned the advisability of my amendment. I agreed to a modification which, as I said on the floor of this Senate, I did not desire. But I wanted to be accommodating, and I did not, and I shall never, want to deny any Senator any courtesy, nor circumvent his rights.

It is with reluctance that, in a moment, I shall move to table this conference report—not to kill it, and not even with any supposition that my motion to table will prevail. I will do so simply to give Senators one last opportunity, which will require only a little while, to insist that the conferees be called together again for the purpose of removing the waiver provision from my amendment. The conferees can do it in less than 5 minutes, and in doing so, they can say to U.S. citizens who have relatives living in oppression in other countries of the world: Yes, we will help you.

That is the issue, Mr. President—the issue of whether we will walk away from this opportunity, this duty, to oppose the continued oppression with our every means.

If my motion to table is rejected, Mr. President, I shall accept the verdict of the Senate cheerfully, in the knowledge that I did the best I could.

I thank the Senator.

SOVIET DENIES ANY PLEDGE TO EASE EMIGRATION CURB TO WIN U.S. TRADE BENEFIT

(By Bernard Gwertzman)

WASHINGTON, December 18.—A House-Senate conference committee agreed tonight on the final version of the trade reform bill despite a last-minute disavowal by Moscow of any deal linking trade concessions to easier emigration from the Soviet Union.

The trade concessions, in the form of lower American tariffs on Soviet products were approved for 18 months and may then be withdrawn if Soviet emigration practices are not liberalized. Both the Ford Administration and key members of Congress said earlier today that, despite today's Soviet statements, they still expected Moscow to ease its restrictions.

The Soviet statements were the latest complication in the drawn-out negotiations involving the Kremlin, the Administration and the Congress over the trade and emigration link.

The statements highlighted Secretary of State Kissinger's crucial role as a mediator seeking informal understanding from the Russians to meet Congressional demands, and formal agreements from Congress to allow the Administration to carry out a promise to give Moscow the same trade benefits as other countries received.

Left unclear was an apparent discrepancy between earlier statements by Mr. Kissinger that he had been "assured" of easier exit procedures and therefore assumed a rise in emigration, and an assertion by Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, in a letter made public today, that no "assurances" relating to emigration had been given and that the number of persons leaving the Soviet Union was officially declining.

By the end of the day, after close examination of what the Soviet Union had said, the initial concern that the trade compromise might be endangered had passed.

On Capitol Hill, where the trade bill containing provisions to liberalize trade with the Russians was making progress in a Senate-House conference committee, the mood was surprisingly relaxed. Most legislators said they regarded the statements as "face-saving" or issued for internal Soviet reasons.

"We should keep our cool," said Senator Henry M. Jackson, the author of the amendment giving the Russians trade concessions in return for liberalized emigration.

He told newsmen that he would press for approval of the trade bill by both houses this week and he noted that if the Russians did not liberalize emigration, they would lose the trade benefits, which include nondiscriminatory tariffs and continued Export-Import Bank credits.

The State Department, initially surprised by the Moscow statements, later said that Secretary of State Kissinger stood by the letter he had sent to Senator Jackson on Oct. 18 outlining expected Soviet measures on emigration in response to trade benefits.

Tass, the Soviet news agency published this afternoon an Oct. 26 letter from Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko to Mr. Kissinger that denied that any specific assurances had been given on emigration.

"The private communication from Foreign Minister Gromyko to the Secretary of State, Oct. 26, which was published by Tass today, does not in our view change the understandings referred to in the Secretary's letter to Senator Jackson of Oct. 18," the department said.

But it added that the Administration "has always made clear" that it had no agreement on the number of emigrants who might leave the Soviet Union.

The number of emigrants has been a controversial part of the three-way discussions held by the Soviet Union, the Administration and Congress.

Last year, the Soviet Union allowed 35,000 citizens to depart, mostly Jews for Israel. This year the number has dropped to about 25,000.

Mr. Kissinger, in an exchange of letters with Mr. Jackson, Democrat of Washington, on Oct. 18, said that because Soviet officials had assured the United States that harassment would end, "it will be our assumption" that "the rate of emigration from the U.S.S.R. would begin to rise promptly from the 1973 level and would continue to rise to correspond to the number of applicants."

60,000 a "Benchmark"

Mr. Jackson responded that the Congress would regard a rise to 60,000 as a "benchmark" to test Soviet compliance with the admittedly unofficial understanding. Mr. Kissinger said the Administration would include that figure "among the consideration" to be applied when deciding to seek renewal of the trade benefits when the original authorization expired after 18 months.

As Mr. Gromyko made clear in his letter given to Mr. Kissinger while he was in Moscow in October, the Soviet officials were incensed by the impression conveyed that the Soviet Union had agreed to allow 60,000 to leave.

He said in the letter that in fact, he had told Mr. Kissinger there was a "tendency toward a decrease in the number of persons wishing to leave the U.S.S.R."

Mr. Kissinger did not make the Gromyko letter known at the time, although he did inform newsmen that the Soviet leaders were angered over the publicity given the Jackson-Kissinger understandings.

When he testified before the Senate Finance Committee on Dec. 3, Mr. Kissinger took note of Soviet sensibilities and said that Moscow had told the Administration "repeatedly that the Soviet Union considered the issue of emigration a matter of its own domestic legislation and practices not subject to international negotiation."

"With this as a background," Mr. Kissinger said, "I must state flatly that if I were to assert here that a formal agreement on emigration from the U.S.S.R. exists between our two governments, that statement would immediately be repudiated by the Soviet Government."

But under questioning from Senators, Mr. Kissinger said that as the result of conversations with Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, and Mr. Gromyko, the Administration expected the number of emigrants to rise if the number of applicants rises also.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

Senator Jackson and Mr. Kissinger both assumed that the applicants would increase once the trade law went into effect. There is an assumption that about 130,000 Jews want to leave.

The negotiations surrounding the trade bill compromise have been among the most complicated ever conducted by Mr. Kissinger since he had to act in effect as a mediator between the Soviet Government and the majority of Congress that supported the Jackson amendment.

The issue goes back to October, 1972, when the Nixon Administration signed a trade agreement with the Russians by which Moscow pledged to repay its lend-lease debts of World War II and the Administration promised to seek Congressional approval to give them nondiscriminatory tariff treatment, known as most-favored-nation status.

Because of widely publicized problems encountered by Soviet Jews in seeking to emigrate, amendments were offered in both houses of Congress, proposing to hold up any trade benefits until emigration was made freer.

When the House of Representatives passed the Trade Reform Act last year, it contained an amendment linking tariffs and credits to the emigration question. The adoption of the bill in the Senate was also dependent on the emigration issue.

Mr. Kissinger earlier this year agreed to see whether a negotiated formula could be achieved. Working with Senators Jackson, Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, and Abraham D. Ribicoff, Democrat of Connecticut, the Secretary of State tried out different formulas.

He resisted the Senators' efforts to get the Russians to agree to an emigration quota, contending that this was unacceptable to Moscow. But Mr. Jackson persisted in the formula that produced the "benchmark" of 60,000.

Last week, the Senate finally adopted the trade bill with the so-called Jackson amendment, giving the Russians nondiscriminatory tariffs and government credits for 18 months.

Early this evening a Senate-House conference committee completed work on the first four "titles" of the five-title trade bill. Title IV is the section containing the Jackson amendment and it was approved without difficulty, underscoring the determination of the Congress to go ahead with the provisions despite the Soviet disavowals.

Senator Russell Long, chairman of the conference committee said, "I don't pay attention to what the Russians say anyway."

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Javits both said the Soviet statements were "face-saving" and did not mean the arrangement was falling apart.

Talking with newsmen, Mr. Jackson said he had been assured by President Ford that if the Russians failed to live up to the clear intent of the trade bill, the President would not hesitate to withdraw the trade benefits.

LETTER PUBLISHED: IN IT, GROMYKO TELLS KISSINGER A LINKAGE IS RULED OUT

(By Christopher S. Wren)

Moscow, December 18.—The Soviet Union denied today that it had given any specific assurances that the conditions for emigration of Soviet citizens would be eased in return for American trade concessions and credits.

The official press agency Tass asserted that "leading circles" in the Soviet Union "flatly reject as unacceptable" any attempts to attach conditions to the reduction of tariffs on imports from the Soviet Union or to otherwise "interfere in internal affairs" of the Soviet Union.

To support its contention that no understanding had been reached, Tass circulated a letter by Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko that the agency said had been handed to Secretary of State Kissinger on Oct. 26. This was during the Secretary's last visit to Moscow on Oct. 23 to 27.

GROMYKO PREDICTED DECLINE

In that letter, which was dated eight days after the purported agreement had been announced in Washington by Senator Henry M. Jackson, Mr. Gromyko not only rejected the interpretation that emigration would increase, but said he had told Mr. Kissinger "quite the contrary," namely that the number of emigrants was actually declining.

The Tass statement and the letter bearing Mr. Gromyko's name caused confusion among American diplomats, who were uncertain whether the publication constituted a face-saving device or an actual declaration that Moscow would not make concessions on emigration.

While the Soviet Union has never acknowledged any understanding on emigration, American diplomats have said that its existence had not been denied by high-ranking Soviet officials in private conversation.

Tonight, one American diplomat said that the Soviet language of the denial did not entirely rule out some sort of informal understanding and that the response might be intended generally for domestic consumption. This interpretation was not shared by several more pessimistic observers.

The announcement did appear keyed to the pending Congressional vote to grant the Russians nondiscriminatory tariff treatment and government credits in return for freer Soviet emigration.

The denial may also have resulted from this week's session of the party's Central Committee, at which the emigration issue is now believed to have been discussed.

The Soviet leadership may have resolved to take the tougher line rather than let the Congressional assumptions about a compromise pass unchallenged. The move may have been spurred either by conservative pressure from within the Kremlin or by official anger at the publicity the purported emigration agreement has received in the United States.

It was also possible that Moscow was moved to act by Arab criticism of the emigration of Soviet Jews and particularly Egypt's proposal earlier this week that Israel restrict further immigration.

The first official acknowledgement here that the United States presumed an understanding existed appeared tonight when both the Tass statement and Mr. Gromyko's letter were read over the popular evening news program on Soviet television. This may have been done in part to dampen hopes among Jews and others that were raised by listening to reports on the trade bill over the Voice of America.

BREZHNEV REPORTED ANGRY

When Mr. Kissinger was in Moscow in late October, Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, was reported to have expressed anger to the Secretary of State over publicity in the United States surrounding a purported understanding about the emigration issue.

There was no public indication at that time or during President Ford's meeting with Mr. Brezhnev in Vladivostok on Nov. 23-24 that Moscow was denying the existence of an understanding or complaining that Mr. Kissinger had misread the Soviet position, as is asserted in Mr. Gromyko's letter.

In today's denial, the Soviet Government did not explain why it had waited two months to dispute the belief that there was an arrangement, particularly since it would have to be aware of the awkward situation that the denial would force on Mr. Kissinger, a familiar negotiating partner with the Soviet leadership.

In his letter, Mr. Gromyko said the announcement of an emigration compromise created "a distorted picture of our position as well as of what we told the American side of that matter" and underscored the Kremlin's conviction that "no ambiguities should remain."

The Foreign Minister conceded in his letter that discussions of the emigration issue had taken place but said that Moscow had "underlined that the question as such as entirely within the internal competence of our state."

Mr. Gromyko went on to deny the existence of any emigration quota and of any expectation that emigration would increase over previous years. The Foreign Minister said that "when we did mention figures," the point was to illustrate "the present tendency toward a decrease in the number of persons wishing to leave the U.S.S.R."

Mr. Kissinger, in his exchange of letters with Senator Jackson on Oct. 18, said "it will be our assumption that the rate of emigration would begin to rise promptly from the 1973 level" of 35,000 and "would continue to rise to correspond to the number of applicants," Senator Jackson, in a Senate speech last Friday, put the current backlog of applicants "in excess of 130,000."

In testimony before the Senate Finance Committee on Dec. 3, Mr. Kissinger said "we have every right to expect that the emigration rate will correspond to the number of applicants," and he added, "if some of the current estimates about potential applicants are correct, this should lead to an increase in emigration."

The Tass statement said the extension of trade benefits to Moscow had been expected under the summit agreement made in 1972.

OPPOSITION RECALLED

"However," Tass said, "the opponents of normalizing Soviet-American trade, and of improving Soviet-American relations in general, from the very outset began actively hampering this process" by making the extension of trade concessions "dependent on all kinds of qualifications and demands that were nothing but gross interference in the Soviet Union's internal affairs."

"This is the only way to qualify the attempts to include in the bills provisions concerning, for instance, the departure of Soviet citizens for other countries" and for "making available economic information of a purely domestic nature to American institutions," Tass said.

The latter reference seemed to be a criticism of American efforts to obtain fuller disclosures of Soviet financial assets before any large credits are extended by the Export-Import Bank.

"There is only one basis on which the Soviet-American relations in general, and commercial and economic relations in particular, can be built successfully," Tass said. "This is a full equality of the sides and non-interference in each other's internal affairs."

Aside from throwing the brightening prospects for Soviet-American trade into doubt, the official denial of any understanding on emigration was likely to be a disappointment to would-be Jewish emigrants who had built up hopes that they would be allowed to leave the Soviet Union.

TEXT OF LETTERS AND TESTIMONY ON THE QUESTION OF SOVIET POLICY ON EMIGRATION

Following are the texts of an exchange of letters between Secretary of State Kissinger and Senator Henry M. Jackson on Soviet trade benefits and emigration policy made public Oct. 18; a letter on the subject presented to Mr. Kissinger by Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in Moscow on Oct. 26, and excerpts from testimony on the issue by Mr. Kissinger before the Senate Finance Committee on Dec. 5:

KISSINGER'S LETTER

Dear Senator Jackson: I am writing to you, as the sponsor of the Jackson amendment, in regard to the trade bill (H.R. 10710) which is currently before the Senate and in whose early passage the Administration is deeply interested. As you know, Title IV of that bill, as it emerged from the House, is not acceptable to the Administration. At the same time, the Administration respects the objectives with regard to emigration from the U.S.S.R. that are sought by means of the stipulations in Title IV, even if it cannot accept the means employed. It respects in particular your own leadership in this field.

UMI

December 20, 1974

To advance the purposes we share both with regard to passage of the trade bill and to emigration from the U.S.S.R. and on the basis of discussions that have been conducted with Soviet representatives, I should like on behalf of the Administration to inform you that we have been assured that the following criteria and practices will henceforth govern emigration from the U.S.S.R.

First, punitive actions against individuals seeking to emigrate from the U.S.S.R. would be violations of Soviet law and regulations and will therefore not be permitted by the Government of the U.S.S.R. In particular, this applies to various kinds of intimidation or reprisal, such as, for example, the firing of a person from his job, his demotion to tasks beneath his professional qualifications and his subjection to public or other kinds of recrimination.

No unlawful impediments

Second, no unreasonable or unlawful impediments will be placed in the way of persons desiring to make application for emigration, such as interference with travel or communications necessary to complete an application, the withholding of necessary documentation and other obstacles including kinds frequently employed in the past.

Third, applications for emigration will be processed in order of receipt, including those previously filed, and on a nondiscriminatory basis as regards the place of residence, race, religion, national origin and professional status of the applicant. Concerning professional status, we are informed that there are limitations on emigration under Soviet law in the case of individuals holding certain security clearances, but that such individuals who desire to emigrate will be informed of the date on which they may expect to become eligible for emigration.

Fourth, hardship cases will be processed sympathetically and expeditiously; persons imprisoned who, prior to imprisonment, expressed an interest in emigrating, will be given prompt consideration for emigration upon their release; and sympathetic consideration may be given to the early release of such persons.

Fifth, the collection of the so-called emigration tax on emigrants which was suspended last year will remain suspended.

Sixth, with respect to all the foregoing points, we will be in a position to bring to the attention of the Soviet leadership indications that we may have that these criteria and practices are not being applied. Our representations, which would include but not necessarily be limited to the precise matters enumerated in the foregoing points, will receive sympathetic consideration and response.

Prompt rise foreseen

Finally, it will be our assumption that with the application of the criteria, practices and procedures set forth in this letter, the rate of emigration from the U.S.S.R. would begin to rise promptly from the 1973 level and would continue to rise to correspond to the number of applicants.

I understand that you and your associates have, in addition, certain understandings incorporated in a letter dated today respecting the foregoing criteria and practices which will henceforth govern emigration from the U.S.S.R. which you wish the President to accept as appropriate guidelines to determine whether the purposes sought through Title IV of the trade bill and further specified in our exchange of correspondence, in regard to the emigration practices of non-market economy countries are being fulfilled. You have submitted this letter to me, and I wish to advise you on behalf of the President that the understandings in your letter will be among the considerations to be applied by the President in exercising the authority provided for in Sec. 4 of Title IV of the trade bill.

I believe that the contents of this letter represent a good basis, consistent with our shared purposes, for proceeding with an acceptable formulation of Title IV of the trade bill, including procedures for periodic review, so that normal trading relations may go forward for the mutual benefit of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R.

Best regards,

HENRY A. KISSINGER.

JACKSON'S REPLY

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Thank you for your letter of October 18 which I have now had an opportunity to review. Subject to the further understanding and interpretations outlined in this letter, I agree that we have achieved a suitable basis upon which to modify Title IV by incorporating within it a provision that would enable the President to waive subsections designated (A) and (B) in Sec. 402 of Title IV as passed by the House in circumstances that would substantially promote the objectives of Title IV.

It is our understanding that the punitive actions, intimidation or reprisals that will not be permitted by the Government of the U.S.S.R. include the use of punitive conscription against persons seeking to emigrate, or members of their families; and the bringing of criminal actions against persons in circumstances that suggest a relationship between their desire to emigrate and the criminal persecution against them.

Second, we understand that among the unreasonable impediments that will no longer be placed in the way of persons seeking to emigrate is the requirement that adult applicants receive the permission of their parents or other relatives.

Third, we understand that the special regulations to be applied to persons who have had access to genuinely sensitive classified information will not constitute an unreasonable impediment to emigration. In this connection we would expect such persons to become eligible for emigration within three years of the date on which they last were exposed to sensitive and classified information.

60,000 as 'benchmark'

Fourth, we understand that the actual number of emigrants would rise promptly from the 1973 level and would continue to rise to correspond to the number of applicants, and may therefore exceed 60,000 per annum. We would consider a benchmark—a minimum standard of initial compliance—to be the issuance of visas at the rate of 60,000 per annum; and we understand that the President proposes to use the same benchmark as the minimum standard of initial compliance. Until such time as the actual number of emigrants corresponds to the number of applicants, the benchmark figure will not include categories of persons whose emigration has been the subject of discussion between Soviet officials and other European governments.

In agreeing to provide discretionary authority to waive the provisions of subsection

* Statutory language authorizing the President to waive the restrictions in Title IV of the trade bill under certain conditions will be added as a new (and as yet undesignated) subsection.

tions designated (A) and (B) in Sec. 402 of Title IV as passed by the House, we share your anticipation of good faith in the implementation of the assurances contained in your letter of October 18 and the understandings conveyed by this letter. In particular, with respect to paragraphs three and four of your letter we wish it to be understood that the enumeration of types of punitive action and unreasonable impediments is not and cannot be considered comprehensive or complete, and that nothing in this exchange of correspondence shall be construed as permitting types of punitive action or unreasonable impediments not enumerated therein.

Finally, in order adequately to verify compliance with the standard set forth in these letters, we understand that communication by telephone, telegraph and post will be permitted.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY M. JACKSON,
U.S.S.

GROMYKO'S LETTER

DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I believe it necessary to draw your attention to the question concerning the publication in the United States of materials of which you are aware and which touch upon the departure from the Soviet Union of a certain category of Soviet citizens.

I must say straightforwardly that the above-mentioned materials, including the correspondence between you and Senator Jackson, create a distorted picture of our position as well as of what we told the American side on that matter.

When clarifying the actual state of affairs in response to your requests we underlined that the question as such is entirely within the internal competence of our state. We warned at the time that in this matter we had acted and shall act in strict conformity with our present legislation on that score.

But now silence is being kept precisely about this. At the same time, attempts are being made to ascribe to the elucidations that were furnished by us the nature of some assurances and, nearly, obligations on our part regarding the procedure of the departure of Soviet citizens from the U.S.S.R., and even some figures are being quoted as to the supposed number of such citizens, and there is talk about an anticipated increase of that number as compared with previous years.

We resolutely decline such an interpretation. What we said, and you, Mr. Secretary of State, know this well, concerned only and exclusively the real situation in the given question. And when we did mention figures—to inform you of the real situation—the point was quite the contrary, namely about the present tendency toward a decrease in the number of persons wishing to leave the U.S.S.R. and seek permanent residence in other countries.

We believe it important that in this entire matter, considering its principled significance, no ambiguities should remain as regards the position of the Soviet Union.

A. GROMYKO,
Minister of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R.

KISSINGER'S TESTIMONY

We recognized that if our Government was to be equipped with the necessary means for conducting an effective foreign policy, it would be necessary to deal with the emigration issue in the trade bill. As I stated in my previous testimony before the committee, we regard mutually beneficial economic contact with the U.S.S.R. as an important element in our over-all effort to develop incentives for responsible and restrained international conduct.

I, therefore, remained in close contact with leaders of the Congress in an effort to find a means of reconciling the different points of view. I remember that I was urged to do so by several members of the committee when I testified before you on March 7 of this year. Shortly afterwards I began meeting regularly with Senators Jackson, Ribicoff and Javits to see whether a compromise was possible on the basis of assurances that did not reflect formal governmental commitments but nevertheless met widespread humanitarian concerns.

We had, as you know, been told repeatedly that the Soviet Union considered the issue of emigration a matter of its own domestic legislation and practices not subject to international negotiation. With this as a background, I must state flatly that if I were to assert here that a formal agreement on emigration from the U.S.S.R. exists between our Governments, that statement would immediately be repudiated by the Soviet Government.

In early April the three Senators agreed to an approach in which I would attempt to obtain clarifications of Soviet domestic practices from Soviet leaders. These explanations could then be transmitted to them in the form of a letter behind which our Government would stand.

My point of departure was statements by General Secretary Brezhnev during his visit to the United States in 1973 to both our executive and members of Congress to the effect that Soviet domestic law and practice placed no obstacles in the way of emigration. In conversations with Foreign Minister Gromyko in Geneva in April, in Cyprus in May and in Moscow in July, we sought to clarify Soviet emigration practices and Soviet intentions with respect to them. It was in these discussions that information was obtained which subsequently formed the basis of the correspondence with Senator Jackson, with which you are familiar.

In particular, we were assured that Soviet law and practice placed no unreasonable impediments in the way of persons wishing to apply for emigration; that all who wished to emigrate would be permitted to do so except for those holding security clearances; that there would be no harassment or punishment of those who applied for emigration; that there would be no discriminatory criteria applied to applicants for emigration and that the so-called emigration tax, which was suspended in 1973, would remain suspended.

It was consistently made clear to us that Soviet explanations applied to the definition of criteria and did not represent a commitment as to numbers. If any number was used in regard to Soviet emigration, this would be wholly our responsibility. That is, the Soviet Government could not be held accountable for or bound by any such figure. This point has been consistently made clear to members of Congress with whom we have dealt.

Finally, the discussions with Soviet leaders indicated that we would have an opportunity to raise informally with Soviet authorities any indication we might have that emigration was in fact being interfered with or that applicants for emigration were being subjected to harassment or punitive action.

The points I have just cited have always been the basis for my contacts with Senators Jackson, Javits and Ribicoff. I may add that these points have been reiterated to us by Soviet leaders on several occasions, including in President Ford's initial contacts with Soviet representatives and most recently at Vladivostok.

All these clarifications were conveyed to the three Senators and eventually led to the drafting of the exchange of correspondence published by Senator Jackson on Oct. 18. The process took much time, however, because of the Administration's concern that there be no misleading inference—specifically that there be no claim to commitments either in form or substance, which in fact had not been made.

Within a week of being sworn in President Ford took a direct and personal interest in settling the issues yet outstanding. He met or had direct contact with the three Senators—as well as with you, Mr. Chairman—on several occasions. He discussed the subject with leading Soviet officials. These contacts and conversations eventually resulted in the drafting of two letters: one from me to Senator Jackson and one from the Senator to me. The first of these letters contains the sum total of the assurances which the Administration felt in a position to make on the basis of discussions with Soviet representatives. The second letter contained certain interpretations and elaborations by Senator Jackson which were never stated to us by Soviet officials. They will, however, as my letter to Senator Jackson indicated, be among the considerations which the President will apply in judging Soviet performance when he makes his determination on whether to continue the measures provided for in the trade bill, i.e., extension of governmental credit facilities and of most-favored-nation treatment. We recognize of course that these same points may be applied by the Congress in reaching its own decisions under the procedures to be provided in the trade bill.

A SET OF PROCEDURES

With the exchange of correspondence agreed, it became possible to work out a set of procedures—which, I understand, has now been offered as Senate amendment 2000—whereby the President will be authorized to waive the provisions of the original Jackson-Vanik amendment and to proceed with the granting of M.F.N. and Eximbank facilities for at least an initial period of 18 months. These procedures will also provide for means whereby the initial grants can be continued for additional one-year periods.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, I believe a satisfactory compromise was achieved on an unprecedented and extraordinarily sensitive set of issues. I cannot give you any assurance concerning the precise emigration rate that may result, assuming that the trade bill is passed and M.F.N. is extended to the U.S.S.R. As I noted earlier, it is difficult to know fully the causes of past changes in Soviet emigration rates. However, I do believe that we have every right to expect, as my letter to Senator Jackson said, that the emigration rate will correspond to the number of applicants and that there will be no interference with applications. If some of the current estimates about potential applicants are correct, this should lead to an increase in emigration.

I believe it is now essential to let the provisions and understandings of the compromise proceed in practice. I am convinced that additional public commentary, or continued claims that this or that protagonist has won, can only jeopardize the results we all seek. We should not delude ourselves that the commercial measures to be authorized by the trade bill will lead a powerful state like the Soviet Union to be indifferent to constant and demonstrative efforts to picture it as yielding in the face of external pressures; nor can we expect extended debates of domestic Soviet practices by responsible U.S. public figures and officials to remain indefinitely without reaction. We should keep in mind that the ultimate victims of such claims will be those whom all of us are trying to help.

Therefore, I respectfully ask that your questions take account of the sensitivity of the issues. There will be ample opportunity to test in practice what has been set down on paper and to debate these matters again when the time for stock-taking foreseen in the legislation has come.

[Translation of letter, written by K. A. in Szczecyn, Poland, on November 29, 1974]

DEAR —: I am asking you, Honorable Sir, and I am asking you, from all my heart, if you can do this for me, please. I am asking you, if by some miracle, you could send me an invitation. I would like to go the United States of America, even if only for one hour. I am willing to work at any place in any type of work. I could work as a mechanic, or as a smith, or I would accept work as a simple laborer on a farm, because I like to work and I am not a drinker. If you could do this, I would repay you with my gratitude. Please answer to my letter.

Thank you very much.

EXHIBIT 3

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, December 19, 1974.

HON. JESSE HELMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR JESSE: I am writing to you about your amendment to the trade bill which would encourage the reunification of divided families. We were pleased to know of your concern for this problem and I want to assure you that the Department shares your interest. We have worked very hard on this question for several years and I believe we have had significant results.

We have been concerned, though, that provisions of your amendment might complicate prospects for rapid early reunification of divided families. The Jackson-Vanik amendment, as you know, also covers this aspect of emigration, and the Secretary, in his exchange of letters with Senator Jackson, stated that we have been "assured that emigration applications will be processed on a non-discriminatory basis as regards the place of birth, religion, national origin, and professional status. The Secretary noted, too, that hardship cases will be processed with particular sympathy."

As you know, the specific question of reunification of divided families has been one of the main points of negotiation at the European Security Conference. While the Conference has not yet concluded its work, important concessions have been made on this question and we are confident that the final agreement will include these concessions and represent marked progress in this humanitarian cause.

As you pointed out on the Senate floor, your amendment, in contrast to the Jackson-Vanik amendment, applies to Poland and could even apply to Yugoslavia. We do not believe this addition is necessary. There are few countries in the world with freer emigration policies than Yugoslavia and among the Warsaw Pact nations, Poland has long been among the most liberal. While we have not always been pleased with the dispatch with which divided family cases have been handled, the Polish government has consistently permitted emigration and our relations with them on this subject have been satisfactory. The question of divided families was discussed during the recent visit to the United States of Polish First Secretary Gierek, and we were assured that his government will continue to give high priority to this sensitive subject.

As a result of your special concern for Poland, as expressed in your amendment, the Department again reviewed this question and discussed emigration policies with Polish officials. We have been reassured that the Polish government will continue to accelerate its handling of divided families applications. And, in view of your interest in this question, I have assured that your staff will be kept advised on developments in this matter. At the moment, there are less than 250 cases in process and the average elapsed time between application for an exit visa and actual emigration is six months.

I feel that the objective both you and the Department seek, the reunification of divided families, is best served by what we understand to be a slightly modified version of your amendment which the conferees have adopted. I want to reemphasize to you our appreciation of your sincere interest in this question and the contribution your revised amendment will provide to focusing attention on this humanitarian objective.

Cordially,

LINWOOD HOLTON.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HELMS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from North Carolina for the fight he has made in presenting an amendment to this trade bill and getting it through the Senate in the first instance. I regret that the conferees did not choose to leave it totally intact.

The Senator from North Carolina has spoken out for the cause of human liberty and the rights of individuals to be in touch and visit and communicate and travel, to meet their loved ones, members of their family. This is one of the basic freedoms of man.

It occurs to me that, as a Nation, we cannot right every wrong in the world; we cannot go to war every time a wrong is committed. But there is one thing we can do: We can make sure that all the positions we take, all the pronouncements, all the resolutions, and all the enactments of our legislative bodies are true to the fundamental principle of human liberty. We should never, in the interests of trade or any other cause, deviate from standing foursquare for human rights and human liberty.

I commend the Senator for what he has done. I know something about the particular circumstances that brought about the filing of the amendment by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. It is just one of perhaps many cases.

Presented before the Committee on Finance was the story of a family, all of whom had escaped from the tyranny of communism except one small boy who is now, I think, about 16 years of age.

I regret that the Senator's amendment was not agreed to and preserved just as he offered it. But I do hope that those in charge of our foreign affairs see to it that this case is solved, not with pious reports but with the actual performance of getting that family together.

I regret that, in the interest of trade or anything else, we have deviated from a firm, foursquare position in favor of human liberty and individual rights.

I commend the Senator.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for his comments.

The truth of the matter is that the distinguished Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) was responsible for my attention being drawn to the precise case that led to this amendment. I am grateful to him for that and for his comments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. HELMS. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suppose that in the conferences on the trade bill and the social services bill, although the overall settlement was more favorable to the Senate position than almost any conference in which I have participated in my 26 years here, the amendments offered by the Senator from Louisiana and agreed to by the Senate suffered the worst fate. Those that I was most interested in were disagreed to, even though I nevertheless feel that they were some of the best amendments, coming from some of the finest minds, ever generated by the Senate, and only the Almighty could convince me otherwise. Yet some of my favorite amendments were not agreed to.

I know how one can be disappointed that one is not able to prevail upon the other body to accept the full intent of what the Senator is seeking to accomplish. I believe that the Senator will find that his amendment will do a lot of good that he sought to legislate. It is going to put pressure on the Eastern European countries, with the exception of Poland and Yugoslavia, to let the children and relatives of those Americans join their families in this country.

In addition to that, we would have liked to be able to achieve the same thing for Poland and Yugoslavia. We were informed, Mr. President, that if we succeeded in keeping Poland and Yugoslavia in, there just was not going to be a trade bill, because some House Members of Polish or Yugoslavian descent felt that to do so, those nations would not receive most-favored-nation treatment and would not be trading with us, and, under the circumstances, they would not want the trade bill.

We did the best we could, and I am sure that the Senator will agree that we did the best we could. For example, the Senator has told us of a case, I believe involving the son of one of the Hungarian freedom fighters. That man, I am confident, as a result of the Helms amendment, will be united with his family in this country. I have personally written to Secretary Kissinger about this case and I ask that my letter appear in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 5, 1974.

HON. HENRY A. KISSINGER,
Secretary of State, Department of State,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR Mr. SECRETARY: On April 5, Mr. Szabolcs Mesterhazy, appeared before the Committee on Finance and presented us with a courageous and stirring statement concerning his efforts to be reunited with his son currently living in Hungary. Mr. Mesterhazy and his family, except for his then 12 year old son, escaped from Hungary in 1958. Since that time, the Government of Hungary has refused to permit the remaining son to emigrate from Hungary in order that he may be reunited with his family here in the United States.

Mr. Mesterhazy has apparently asked the State Department to intercede with the Hungarian Government on the behalf of his son. Such efforts have as yet been unsuccessful. I am writing you today on behalf of the Senate Finance Committee to ask you to take any steps feasible to intercede with the Government of Hungary in an attempt to obtain the right to emigrate for his son. Any efforts that you can undertake on behalf of Mr. Mesterhazy's son would be greatly appreciated.

I would like to be informed on the attitude of the Hungarian Government on this matter before we go into executive session on the Trade Reform Act legislation.

With very good wish, I am

Sincerely,

RUSSELL B. LONG,
Chairman.

Mr. LONG. I think, with regard to nations like Romania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, and a number of others, the amendment will achieve most of what the Senator hopes for it. I would sincerely hope the State Department would make it very clear to the Hungarian Government of the concern we all have about this case.

So while I know he is disappointed that we were not able to achieve everything he sought to do, I believe he will find that we achieved most of it, and that is all we ever expect to do around this body. And the Senator knows that under the conference agreement the bilateral trade agreements negotiated with Communist countries must be submitted to Congress for approval. So we will have an opportunity to see what progress has been made on meeting these common concerns before extending most-favored-nation treatment to those countries.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. I hasten to say that he has been most cooperative. He will recall that as manager of the bill, he agreed to accept my amendment as originally proposed. I have no criticism whatsoever of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. As a matter of fact, I am entirely grateful to him and I owe him great admiration for his understanding of the legislative process.

Mr. ROBERT BYRD. Mr. President, I am told by a Senator that he will request the yeas and nays on the passage of this conference report. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina has stated that he will move to table the conference report. Consequently, there may be at least, I assume—is the Senator going to ask for the yeas and nays on his motion?

Mr. HELMS. I will say to the distinguished Senator if there were not going to be a yeas-and-nays vote on final passage, I would probably be helpful to the Senate by accepting a voice vote. But if he is going to have a yeas-and-nays vote anyway, I would like to have the yeas and nays on my motion to table.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. There is at least one, possibly there are two rollcall votes. Several Senators need to catch planes because of reservations they have made anticipating, on the basis of our statements last evening, that we would try to adjourn sine die by 3 o'clock today. It might be possible for us to get a time agreement on this conference report. The distinguished manager of the conference report has indicated his willingness to enter into such an agreement and the distinguished Senator from New York has indicated his willingness to enter into such an agreement.

TIME LIMITATION AGREEMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that time on this conference report be limited to 5 minutes for Mr. LONG, 5 minutes for Mr. JAVITS—Senator HARTKE, does the Senator need some time?

December 20, 1974

Mr. HARTKE. I will probably not need more than 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. All right, not to exceed 10 minutes for Mr. HARTKE.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I would suggest that we have a few minutes for whoever shows up.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. An additional 10 minutes to be equally divided between Mr. LONG and Mr. BENNETT, if we could have that ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent if there is going to be a tabling motion—and I think there will be, and it will be a rollcall vote—the two votes be back to back, first the vote on the motion to table, and then the vote on final passage, and both rollcall votes be 10-minute calls because the respective cloakrooms have ample time to inform the Senators.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the agreement could be restated because it became a little complicated.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The unanimous-consent agreement is as follows: Mr. LONG, the manager of the conference report, have 10 minutes—I first said 5 and added 5—10 minutes; the distinguished Senator from Utah, 5 minutes; the distinguished Senator from Indiana not to exceed 10 minutes; the distinguished Senator from New York, 5 minutes.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that Mr. MONDALE have 5 minutes; Mr. CHILES have 5 minutes; and Mr. DOLE, 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. May we get going.

Two minutes to Mr. GRAVEL. I hope no Senator misses his plane.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Dr. Jim Lucier be accorded the privileges of the floor during the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCURE). Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I will advise the distinguished majority whip that since he has had additional requests for time, I will not ask for the yeas and nays on my motion to table. I will accept a voice vote. That will give him more time to play with.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The distinguished Senator is most generous, and always most cooperative and in the future I hope some of us will remember this. In some future time, I will myself.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself.

Mr. President, I will submit most of the statement that I have prepared on this subject, the Senators are, by now, I believe, aware of what is in this conference report.

Mr. President, from the point of view of the Senate, this was an extremely successful conference.

The House accepted many of the Senate amendments in whole or in part, most of them in whole. It is a tribute to their fairness. If they thought we were right they were willing to accept the amendments without trying to bargain.

Mr. President, in my judgment, it would be a mistake to ask for further conference on this matter because I do not think there has been a case in the consideration of a major piece of legislation when the House has been as considerate of the Senate position as it has on this bill. They accepted our amendments because they had merit.

So that I hope very much, Mr. President, this conference report will be agreed to.

I wish to thank my fellow conferees for the very diligent work they did in this conference. We worked many long hours and they were most cooperative—Messrs. TALMADGE, RUBINOFF, MONDALE, BENNETT, FANNIN, and HANSEN.

I am also very appreciative, Mr. President, to Mr. ULLMAN, Mr. BURKE, Mrs. GRIFFITHS, Messrs. ROSTENKOWSKI, SCHNEEBELI, CONABLE, and PETTIS, for the thoughtful consideration and cooperation that they gave in meeting on this matter.

Mr. President, I am particularly grateful to Mr. Robert Best, of our staff, our chief economist for the Committee on Finance, as well as Richard Rivers, Mark Sandstrom, and Michael Rowny, for the very fine work they did in helping the Senate committee and the Senate to put together its proposals.

Also Mr. Little and Bob Cassidy for their fine work, as the key legal minds who have to translate the decisions into legislative language.

Mr. President, the House and Senate conferees met for two long days on this bill, and I am proud to say that they held substantially to the Senate version of the bill.

With regard to tariff authority, the compromise provides that on rates of duty of 5 percent ad valorem or less, the President has the authority to eliminate the duty; on rates over 5 percent he has authority to cut duties by 60 percent. This formula is very similar to the one contained in the Senate bill.

On the question of nontariff barriers, the Senate maintained its position that all trade agreements must be approved by both Houses of Congress—we have Senator TALMADGE of Georgia to thank for being the author of this amendment and for being its proponent in conference.

The basic negotiating objectives of forging new nondiscriminatory trading relationships were retained.

The McIntyre-Kennedy amendment authorizing the President to enter into international agreements within the GATT was retained.

The Senate maintained its position on requiring reciprocal nondiscriminatory trade in the future; this will insure that the United States receives fair compensation on trade concessions from all of our trading partners.

The procedures outlined in the Senate bill with regard to approval or disapproval of trade agreements were retained.

I am happy to say that the amendments offered by Senator TART on including small business interests and Senator RUBINOFF's amendment on including retailers in the advisory boards were adopted.

However, the House was adamant about deleting the Taft amendment requiring the reporting of the effects on employment and the consumer of import relief. Likewise, the House objected to the Church amendment involving employment impact and information on the operations of multinational corporations. Other Senate conferees will attest that we discussed this amendment in length, but the House was unanimous in refusing to yield on the matter.

The conferees agreed to the Senate provision elevating the Office of the Special Trade Representative. I might say at this point that Mr. Eberle never sought the provision in this section which would bestow prestige upon his office and those of his deputies, but it has been my idea that this office will be so important in these trade negotiations that the job ought to be given the stature it deserves. Mr. Eberle vigorously opposed it because the administration has taken a position against it. I would be very sorry to see internal bickering within the administration on this matter, because the Congress has expressed its will without pressure or suggestion by the Executive.

The conferees maintained the thrust of the Senate bill with respect to insuring the independence of the U.S. Tariff Commission. We compromised upon a six-member Commission with 9-year terms and maintained every other Senate provision in this section.

The conferees agreed with the basics of the Senate provision providing adjustment assistance to workers and firms. The basic thrust of the community adjustment assistance was agreed to by the House with certain changes in the revenue sharing and loan guarantee aspects of the program.

The Senate amendments strengthening the U.S. statutes dealing with unfair trade practices in title III were kept virtually in their entirety. With respect to the escape clause, the President must provide import relief in cases of injury, and the Congress maintains an override if he does not. Together with strong countervailing and antidumping procedures, the conferees retained the comprehensive Senate measures on unfair import practices.

I was gratified that the conferees maintained the Senate provisions in title IV on free emigration and on trading relationships with the nonmarket countries in the face of a critical news release from the Kremlin. The conferees were unanimous in reasserting their position that freer emigration must precede freer trade. Although the House conferees objected to the Domenici floor amendment on agricultural commodities and the Helms amendment on emigration, we fought to maintain the basic purposes of these amendments either in the bill or strong language in the statement of managers. We did not succeed in allowing our claimants their day in court on the subject of the Czechoslovakian gold that we hold, but we have ordered the State Department to go out and negotiate a better agreement, before this country will grant most-favored-nation treatment or further credits to Czechoslovakia. And the gold will stay here under our control until such agreement is negotiated.

The conferees also substantially adopted the Senate floor amendment calling for a body within the executive branch to oversee trade with Communist countries. This body will review all large transactions involving the transfer of technology and the granting of credits, and report to the Congress on how those transactions will affect the national security.

In the generalized system of preferences, the conferees retained the Senate's goal of requiring those who get preferential treatment in our markets to conduct their trade policies in a fair and equitable manner. This will prevent the United States from exposing our markets to countries who act to hurt us and the rest of the world in international trade by forming cartels, by drastically raising prices, or by denying us access to supplies. The conferees also accepted the Pastore-Humphrey floor amendment protecting our import-sensitive products from injury.

Finally, the House accepted all of the Senate's general provisions in title VI, including Senator Byrd's floor amendment limiting credits to Communist countries to $300 million without congressional approval.

I would again like to take this opportunity to extend the thanks of the Senate Finance Committee to those members of the staff without whom this trade bill would have been a very difficult task. Mr. Robert A. Best, chief economist, of the committee, worked ardently for many months, devoting his energies and talents to this long and often complex legislation. He and the other able trade staff members, Richard Rivers, Mark Sandstrom, and Michael Rowny, spent the better part of a year putting together extensive hearings, a long well-written report, and a bill which meets with the Senate's hearty approval. Harry L. Hill and Bob Cassidy did yeoman work on drafting the legislative language. I speak for all the members of the committee in thanking them for their steadfast and diligent efforts. Tom Vail, the late former chief counsel of the committee, is ultimately responsible for developing this fine staff. In a real sense this bill is a legacy to Tom.

Mr. President, I believe the conferees have approved a bill which is very close to the bill the Senate approved with such a large majority. I hope we will be able to act on it without delay.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself the time allocated.

Mr. President, I think that in this body we do so many critically important things that we often fail to note really historic landmarks, and this is one.

We have struggled with trade for many reasons, including basic economic policy of the United States, a major change of policy by the great trade unions of the country, which will certainly have to be listened to, and whose views represent millions of working people, the great feeling of vexation in foreign policy of which trade and foreign economic policy are a part, the great damage to the international monetary system, strains of most unbelievable kind over oil and energy and the shortages which have been generated, and the dangers of bankrupting the world through increased prices.

In the face of all this, for such a great historic achievement to have been recorded is really a triumph of our society and a triumph of constitutional Government. I hope very much, Mr. President, it will be noted and will be noted throughout the world.

We are lucky that only around 8 percent of our gross national product hinges on international trade, but there are nations to whom it is life or death, like Great Britain, which is going through terrible travail, and Japan, also going through a very anxious economic period, along with Germany and others.

When Chancellor Helmut Schmitt was here the other day, he told the Foreign Relations Committee that the single most important thing to help this dangerously situated world would be for the United States to enact the trade bill—the single most important thing—and here it is on the very last day of our session.

I think it is really a day for feeling very good about our country and, as I say, the triumph of our constitutional system.

In the name of my constituents, 18.5 million of them, I would like to thank Senator LONG and his colleagues, and Senator BENNETT and his colleagues, for having brought the matter to the present state.

One last thing, I am deeply sympathetic with what Senator HELMS said, I think quite unwittingly, in his original amendment, that he might have caught a lot more than he had any intention of catching.

But his intentions were very honorable, considering Poland and the problems of people there who also wish to emigrate. I for one will do my utmost as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and otherwise, to see if his fundamental objectives can be met. Whatever may have happened to his amendment in the trade bill for reasons which Senator LONG has said.

Also, Mr. President, I feel that the explanations made respecting why we have not been dismayed by the statement of Mr. Gromyko, the Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, respecting the agreement entered into by Senator JACKSON, Senator RIBICOFF, and myself with Dr. Kissinger and the President, is also a tribute to the stability and intelligence of the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives.

There is no reason for changing our course and we have not been dismayed.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to ask the following question of Senator LONG.

Senator LONG, is it correct that actions taken under the provisions of section 204 of the Agricultural Assistance Act of 1956 are in no way affected by the provisions of the bill currently under consideration, the trade bill?

Mr. LONG. That is correct, absolutely correct.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague very much.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would like to make one additional point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized on his own time.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself a minute.

Mr. President, in the conference we found it necessary to yield with regard to an amendment authorizing a suit to be filed in the court of the District of Columbia with regard to the Czechoslovakian gold.

I believe it should be made clear that the fact that that amendment was not included neither confers jurisdiction upon some court nor denies jurisdiction to some court. It leaves the law exactly where we found it.

The conference's deletion of the Gravel amendment which sought to confirm that the U.S. District Court in Washington has jurisdiction to determine what actions the U.S. Government may take to utilize the Czechoslovakian gold it physically holds or controls to pay the outstanding awards against Czechoslovakia in the event that country continues to fail to make a fair settlement, was not intended to deprive the court of any jurisdiction it already possesses to make such determinations.
